The senate passed a bill to extend to Marquette, Mich., the privilege of immediate transportation of unappraised merchandise.

The senate devoted the entire day to the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It was only partly completed at adjournment, and a hot debate was in progress over the appropriation of $100,000 to defray the expenses of the visiting G. A. R. to Washington.

HOUSE.

The house to-day passed the bill placing wool on the free list. The vote stood 194 to 60.

After the passage of the free wool bill the house went into committee of the whole on the Turner cotton bagging bill. After a short debate the committee rose and the house adjourned.

Friday,, April 8.

SENATE.

The senate today passed the bill appropriating $100,000 for entertaining the national encampment of the G. A. R.

The senate today made public the correspondence transmitted by the president touching the declination of the Chinese government to receive Hon. H. W. Blair as United States minister.

Several postmasters were confirmed today.

HOUSE.

In committee of the whole today the house resumed consideration of the cotton bagging bill. After considerable debate the committee won and reported the bill to the house.

Interest in the tariff discussion is steadily on the decline and the attendance in the house was small.

Representative Dickerson, of Kentucky, reported to the house from the banking and currency committee a bill to require the redemption of bank notes which may have been lost by or stolen from any national bank and put in circulation before being signed by the officers of the bank or where they were issued upon the forged signatures of such officers.

His Bid,

"Did you want to bid anything, sir?" asked an auctioneer of a man who had been standing in the crowd for over an hour, but had not opened his mouth.

"Yes," said the fellow, with a yawn; "it's about time I went home, so I will bid you good-night."—Rochester Post-Express.

The Jury Could Not Agree.

Dickinson, N. D., Special Telegram, —The celebrated school case of John D. Campbell vs. Dickinson School Board, has been on trial here for two days. The jury was out sixteen hours, but could not agree and were dismissed. The case is put over to the next term. Campbell was discharged as principal of schools in January, and now seeks to recover damage on his contract.

Saloonkeeper Heavily Fined.

Fargo, N. D., Special Telegram, Special, —Judge McConnell to-day sentenced A. C. Cantieny to ninety days in jail, and to pay a fine of $200, $50 attorney's fees and the costs of prosecution for the illegal sale of liquor.

Council Proceedings.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held in the city hall on Tuesday evening, April 12th, 1892.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call.

Aldermen, present: Buhn, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Marlette, Schmidt, Steenerson, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen absent: Marshall.

Your committee on ways and means, to whom was referred the matter of Grand Army encampment and the purchase of grounds for park purposes, beg leave to report that the committee met with the citizens committee selected by the council, consisting of C. E. Mix, P. Ellington, A. D. Stephens and A. E. Sawyer, and that the joint committee elected L. Ellington chairman, and as so organized has held several meetings and can report progress in said work, but that the matters entrusted to said joint committee require further consideration, and as the term of office of this committee now expires, your committee beg leave to be discharged, and we further recommend that said matter be again referred to the new committee on ways and means when appointed.

H. STEENERSON,
Chairman.

Moved by Alderman Jennings, seconded by Alderman Bohn, that the report be accepted and adopted. Carried.

A. C. Schmidt presented his resignation as fire warden. On motion the same was accepted.

The business of the old council being concluded, the newly elected members took their seats.

A committee of three was appointed to wait on the mayor and inform him that the council was ready to receive any communication which he wished to make.

The mayor appeared before the council and after making a short speech he presented his message, which was read by President Cromb.

The mayor then presented the following appointments for confirmation:

For city comptroller, E. M. Walsh.
For city attorney, Martin O'Brien.
For chief engineer, George Ralph.
For chief of police, Louis Gonyea.
For first patrolman, D. A. Robinson.
For second patrolman, John Vig.

Moved and seconded that the rules be suspended and the confirmation of the appointments be confirmed or rejected. Carried.

On motion the ballot was taken on the confirmation or rejection of E. M. Walsh as comptroller.

Ten ballots cast all in favor of confirmation, and the appointment of E. M. Walsh was declared duly confirmed.

On motion the ballot was taken on the confirmation of Martin O'Brien as city attorney. Ten votes cast, all of which were in favor of confirmation, and Martin O'Brien was duly declared city attorney.

On motion the vote was taken on the confirmation of George Ralph as city engineer. Ten votes cast, all in favor of confirmation, and George Ralph was declared duly confirmed as city engineer.

On motion the ballot was taken on the confirmation of Louis Gonyea as chief of police. Ten votes were cast, all of which were in favor of confirmation, and Louis Gonyea was declared duly confirmed as chief of police.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the confirmation of the patrolman be laid over until the next meeting of the council.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Jennings, Morrisey, Austin, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Childs, Jerome, McGlogan, Marlette, Walker. Motion declared lost.

On motion ballot was taken on confirmation of D. A. Robinson as first patrolman; 10 votes were cast, 10 ayes and 1 nay. The appointment was declared duly confirmed.

The ballot was then taken on the confirmation of John Vig as second patrolman. Ten votes were cast, 5 in favor of confirmation and 5 against. Four ballots were taken, the fourth resulting as follows: 4 in favor and 6 against confirmation. The appointment was declared rejected.

On motion a president and vice-president were nominated.

John Cromb was nominated for president, and E. D. Childs for vice-president.

Ballot was taken on president, John Cromb receiving 9 votes, E. D. Childs 1, John Cromb was declared elected as president of the council for the ensuing year.

The ballot was taken on vice-president; 10 votes cast, E. D. Childs receiving 9, I. U. Jennings 1; E. D. Childs was declared elected as vice-prsident for the ensuing year.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

The president appointed the following standing committees for ensuing year:

Ways and means committee, Childs, Walker, Marshall.

Finance committee, Marshall, Morrisey, Marlette.

Committee on poor, Walker, Childs, Anderson.

Fire committee, Jennings, Austin, Jerome.

Alderman Childs made a verbal report on the matter of the fire ordinance and warden which had been referred to the fire committee at a previous meeting. He stated that there were some features of the fire ordinance which should be amended and corrected to make it hold in law, and the committee recommended that it be attended to. They also recommended that the office of fire warden be made a paid office, and that he be required to attend to the matters pertaining to his office and report at least twice a year. Also that a more direct communication be made with the pumping station, by telephone or electricity, so that in case of fire it can be signaled at once.

Alderman Jennings reported that he had attended to sending out the petitions relating to the national park, which the council had instructed him to do, and that he had received 29 answers with about 600 signatures, which he had forwarded to Duluth chamber of commerce.

On motion the mayor's message was referred to the finance committee.

The report of Justice Spendley was read and referred to the finance committee.

Moved by Alderman Walker, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that the treasurer's report and report of the sinking fund committee be referred to the finance committee. Carried.

The communication from the city clerk relating to the purchase of the jail site was referred to the finance committee.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that when we adjourn it be to meet one week from to-night at the usual hour. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the vote whereby the treasurer's report was referred to the finance committee, be so far rescinded as to take up the item of said report relating to the amount of money now in the special sinking fund to the end that the same may be turned over to sinking fund commissioners to be applied so far as the same may be, in repayment of loan taken from said fund and also any other matters relating to said report that may come before this meeting.

Motion declared lost.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the chair appoint a committee of two to confer with the Great Northern Railway Company relating to the opening and widening of 6th street crossing.—Carried. Chair appointed Aldermen Morrisey and Marshall as that committee.

Alderman Jerome excused.

On motion the clerk was instructed to advertise for bids for the city printing for the ensuing year. Bids to be opened on Tuesday the 10th day of May, 1892.

Applications were received from the following parties to sell intoxicating liquors: Bergquist & Morberg, Dahle & Bergstrom, Asselin & Sylvester. On motion the applications were accepted and the Clerk instructed to give the proper publications.

On motion the bonds of the applicants were referred to the city attorney for examination, to report at next meeting.

Bonds were presented by E. C. Carruth, H. N. Tweten, Henry Shepard.

On motion the bonds were accepted and approved.

The city engineer brought up the matter of approving the street grades.

Moved by Alderman Jennings, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the matter of street grades in hands of the city engineer, of the different wards be referred to the aldermen of the different wards for examination and to report at the next meeting. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Morrisey, that a cross walk be established from the N. E. to the N. W. corner of Main street and Euclid avenue in the 5th ward.—Carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the cross walk be laid under the direction of the aldermen of the aldermen of the 5th ward.—Carried.

Moved by Alderman Jennings, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that a cross walk be laid across Robert street in line with west side of Maple street, same to be laid under the direction of the aldermen of the first ward.—Carried.

Don't fall in the newly dug cellar in front of Messrs. Moe & Buhn's store.

Rev. Mr. Currie, of Euclid, was in town on Sunday attending the burial of the infant son of Mr. John Tice.

Mr. Charles Attix left for Grand Forks on business Thursday. He will be absent some days.

Work has commenced in earnest on the new church here, hoping our friends will show their liberality in the good work.

Mr. C. C. Cotten opened his house for the Glee Club on Friday evening. An enjoyable time was spent.

A good joke is told on one of our townsmen who went to Maple Lake to fish. Casting his bait he got a bite. Oh! thought he, this fish must be a whale. He pulled and hauled for some time and finally landed his prize on shore. A pretty muddy looking whale this, thought he; but when he got part of the mud and moss cleaned away his whale proved to be Free Grist.

Maple Bay Items.

The farmers are anxiously looking for spring for two reasons, fodder is getting short and they think it will be very late before seeding is finished on account of so much water. But, farmers, be ready to commence after the 15th. Spring will come then in earnest.

We were down to Woodside after the snow storm and we found that one foot of mud and eight inches snow does not make the best of wheeling. It is good to have short-horn cattle but not short-legged one in such roads as these.

Harry Klinger shot that wolf that had his eye on their sheep.

Our People's Party meeting of the 29th was a success. W. N. Godfrey was made president, Gilbert Iverson vice president, D. T. Mitchell secretary and P. S. Medchill treasurer.

We have some more important items but are unable to get them in this week.

The material is all on hand for the construction of the new parsonage at the Bay.

The Dugdale boys were down to the Bay fishing to-day. The fish played dodge on the boys a good deal.

We were looking over our seed wheat. It is fine—I mean the pure Scotch Fife that the Hon. Mr. Pilsbury sent out last spring. We got 2 bu. from which we raised 52½ bu. that we are going to seed this spring. We say, long live Mr. Bilsbury. We are very grateful for his kindness.

Polk County Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, April 14, 1892.

MELVIN, April 10th, 1892.

ED. JOURNAL—In looking over the proceedings of the board of County Commissioners one is impressed with the idea of unjust discrimination being practiced between affluence and misfortune, namely: 1st, application of August Munn and M. E. Kirsch for abatement of personal property taxes, granted. 2d, application of the Fairfax hail sufferers for abatement of personal property tax, refused. Application of Louis Fontaine, Wm. Anglim, Max Ericsson, A. J. and A. McKinnon for abatement of personal tax 30 per cent, granted. We notice that those of affluence (and possible influence) are granted their petition, while those who through misfortune lost their crops and have no ready money to pay their tax are held to the rack. We believe that the commissioners owe the voters of this county an explanation of their conduct in regard to this matter. We labor under the impression that if those of the city who are prosperous are allowed an abatement of tax, then, those unfortunate hail sufferers are also entitled to the same favor. We believe that the majority of the tax-payers would approve of those men being released from paying their taxes for the past year, if the law would permit of it; and if it does not in the one case, why does it in the others? If this is a case of discrimination then we wish if possible to gain for those commissioners who are guilty of refusing this petition a notoriety that will debar them from again being elected to positions of public trust.

CRITIC.

Mistakes to be Avoided.

Minneapolis Journal.

There is emphatic need that the Republican league clubs of Minnesota shall take special pains, in the course of their activities, to disseminate exact information touching the practical working of the election law of 1891. That which is a simple process to one man may befog his neighbor. All men have not an intuitive grasp upon the terms of such laws. The change from the old system of voting is a radical one. Voters in many cases need to have definite instruction. This ought to become part of the educational work of the league club. It is fundamental. It must precede other lines of political education.

In Ohio, last fall, there were 80,000 votes cast for Governor, while the other candidates on the ballot were left unmarked. There will be a good deal of that kind of thing done in Minnesota at the November election, if some good educational work is not done to prevent it. The Republican party of Minnesota must not only turn out every man in its ranks to vote, but it must see that he knows how to mark his ticket. And this is the time to begin to make every voter familiar with the new law.

Another matter of great importance is the naming of Republican electors at the May convention. Electors are disqualified if they are men "holding an office of trust or profit under the United States." Mistakes have been made in this regard and it is a serious matter. The Minnesota Republicans must make no mistake of this or any other kind this year.

DUNN ON NELSON.

The Princeton Editor's Tribute to the "Little Norwegian."

Minneapolis Journal.

What is the matter with Knute Nelson, anyhow? You city fellows have a shrewd way of booming a man for office. If Mr. Nelson was a rich man one would think he had hired the big dalies of Minneapolis and St. Paul to oppose his candidacy. Seriously, for the life of me, I cannot see why The Journal should go out of the way to misrepresent Mr. Nelson. Your views, Mr. Editor, on the tariff question, as enunciated in your paper, correspond with those held by Mr. Nelson, and surely it is not on account of his vote on the Mills bill—a vote that he has thoroughly and satisfactorily explained in a speech delivered in your own city, that you are "agin" him.

Why dwell on the "West Hotel caucus"? Admitting for the sake of argument that a caucus was held, what of it? Is Mr. Nelson to be held responsible for what every Tom, Dick and Harry says or does? But then, I for one do not believe any such caucus was ever held.

Now, Mr. Editor, I am friendly to Mr. Nelson and I am also a friend of Senator C. K. Davis, and am decidedly of the opinion that he should succeed himself. I have not "hung around the executive office," in fact have not been inside the executive office but once in 18 months, and then only for a few moments—long enough to secure a pardon for a poor boy, the only support of his father and mother, who has been incarcerated in the St. Cloud jail. I am not in the confidence of Gov. Merriam, don't know or don't care what his views or aspirations are. When Gov. Merriam was first nominated the undersigned was one of the little band that went down flying the Gilman colors. I am not a worshipper at Gov. Merriam's shrine, yet I believe he has proved himself to be one of the best executives Minnesota has ever had. He has given the state a good, clean, business-like administration and has sufficient nerve to Tripp up even a Minneapolis charter "woodchuck."

Give the gallant "Little Norwegian" a chance. It is no fault of his that he first saw the light of day in "the land of the midnight sun." If Biblical lore can be relied upon the Savior was born in a manger. No one questions Knute Nelson's stalwart Americanism. In the dark days of the 60's he risked his life in defense of the flag of his adopted country. His public and private life is above reproach. No taint of boodle clings to his skirts. He is a plain man of the people and his sympathies are with the people. He is a clean man, a brainy man and a man with the courage of his convictions. If you are bound to fight him, fight him squarely and above board. Don't couple his name with those of men who are obnoxious to the laboring men of your city and the toiling, sweating masses in the country.

Mr. Nelson is not an aggresive candidate for Governor or anything else. If he is the nominee of the Republican state convention it will be without any personal effort of his own. The nominee of the Republican party, no matter who he may be, will have no picnic this year. Let us save our ammunition for our friends—the enemy. Let the Republican party, in convention assembled decide who shall lead them, and if Honest Knute Nelson is the standard bearer victory will be assured in advance of the conflict at the polls next November.

Notice of Mortgage Forclosure Sale.

[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of ten and 50-100 dollars ($10.50) which became due on the first day of October A. D. 1890, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaie Normandin and Philomene Normandin, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the first day of October A. D. 1888, which mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the first day of October A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., in book 40 of mortgages on pages 112 and 113.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagors shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may, at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of forty-one and 70-100 dollars ($41.70) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-five (25) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Twelve and 50-100 dollars ($12.50), which became due on the first day of December, 1890, and in the payment of a like and final sum, which became due on the first day of December, 1891, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John H. Lien and Ragnhild Lien, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1888, which mortgage, together with a power of sale contained therein was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of November A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., in Book 40 of mortgages, on pages 497, 498, and 499; which said sums with interest thereon respectively at ten per cent. per annum from the first day of December, 1890, and the 1st day of December, 1891, are the whole sum secured by said mortgage and remaining unpaid.

John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured; and the amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice is twenty seven dollars ($27.00); and no action or proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number twenty-two (22) in Township one hundred and forty-eight (148) north, of Range number forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one Hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Nils S. Nilson and Cecilia S. Nilson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 24th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1889, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 455; and

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1889, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1890, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1890, $22.75 that became due June 24th, 1891, and $22.75 that became due December 24th, 1891. And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage, has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sum in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described upon which there is default the following sum, to-wit: eight hundred twenty-one and 71-100 ($821.71) Dollars, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) and the west half (w½) of south-east quarter (se¼) of Section two (2) Township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty (40), containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof. All of said premises situated and being in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty (50) dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 16th day of May, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Eight and 25-100 dollars ($8.25) which became due on the first day of December, A. D. 1889, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edward L. Haven, an unmarried man, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1888, which mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of July A. D. 1888, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in Book 36 of Mortgages on pages 329 and 330.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.
3. In suits for subscriptions, the suit may be instituted where the paper is published.
4. The Courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, while unpaid for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud.

The United States has placed $25,000 in the hands of the Italian government to be distributed among the heirs of the 3 Italians who were killed at New Orleans and found to be Italian subjects. Diplomatic relations with Italy will now be resumed.

The Little Falls Transcript very properly urges the city council to publish its proceedings. The taxpayers of every city or county demand to know through the press what their representatives are doing, and a city council who will not heed the voice of the people are not good public servants.

President J. J. Hill of the Great Northern has gone west over his road. At Grand Forks he stated that the Great Northern will have its trains running through to the coast by Sept. 1st. A force of 10,000 are at work rapidly closing the gap. He will spend some time in looking over the new line before returning. Mrs. Hill, who has been spending the winter in California, will return with him.

In speaking of the recent organization of the People's Party in Marshall County, the Warren Register says:

The "People's Party," so called, has been organized in this county by the leaders of the Alliance party of two years ago. They seek the control of the same men who went into the Alliance party. These leaders have gone to work to turn over the Alliance to the new political party, at the behest of Donnelly, Fish & Co. Alliance men, how do you like it? This move is preliminary to yet another transfer to be made by these gentlemen, Donnelly, Fish & Co., of their followers, by which they are to be landed in the Democratic camp, in effect, though a combination with the Democratic leaders far the purpose of pooling their political fortunes in the coming campaign in this state. We ask our old time Republican friends who went into the Alliance political movement with an honest desire for reform, if they are willing to be made use of in this manner?

St. Paul and Minneapolis again have each other by the ears, and St. Paul has certainly taken the right stand in the controversy. Minneapolis wants a large appropriation from the government to make the Mississippi navigable between the Twin cities. Engineers who have examined the river say that in order to make the river navigable, a system of locks and dams below Minneapolis would be necessary, and that the expense of the undertaking would be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. The benefits to be derived faom making Minneapolis the head of navigation instead of St. Paul would not be sufficient to warrant the expenditure of such a sum of money. The milling interests of the Flour City might receive some trifling benefit from having water communication with the south, but the people at large—who have to foot the bill—wouldnt receive any returns for the amount expended.

ESTRAY.

Left my place in the town of Liberty, on Tuesday, March 29th, one white pony gelding weighing about 900, with red spots(looks like a circus horse) and one bay pony gelding with white star in forehead, weighs about 700 pounds. The finder will be suitably rewarded by returning the ponies to E. Winslow, or address me at Fertile post office.

World's Fair Notes.

Ostrich eggs, artistically painted in a prize competition, are to be a feature in the exhibit made by Cape Colony, South Africa.

New Hampshire, which claims to be the "Switzerland of America," has appropriately planned to erect a Swiss chalet for its World's Fair bulding.

The main Exposition building require for their ornamentation 160,678 separate pieces of staff work. Of these, 108,000 have been cast and more than 59,000 have been put in place on the building.

The Cunard Steamship Company has applied for space in the marine section of the Transportation building to show a series of models illustrating the speed of "ocean greyhounds," and the development of trans-Atlantic travel.

The Commercial Exchange of Des Moines, Ia., has resolyed in favor of raising $20,000 for the purpose of securing a creditable reprsentation of that city at the Exposition. Brooklyn N. Y., wants to devote a like sum to the some end.

The directors of the celebrated Ward's museum at Rochester, N. Y., have decided to expend $25,000 in making at the Exposition a display of specimeas from all parts of the establishment. The value of the exhibit will exceed $100,000.

Fifty public spirited citizens of Utah have guaranteed $50,000 for an exhibit at the Fair from that territory. A like amount was similarly raised in Connecticut recently, and in both cases it is the expectation that the legislature will reimburse the donors.

Intending exhibitors at the Exposition can get the general rules and regulations for exhibitors, and the special regulations pertaining to exhibite in the department or departments in which they may be particularly interested, by addressing Director General Davis.

The Koellner Maennergesang-Verein, Lehrer-Verein (Teachers' Association) of Dresden, the Tonkuenstler-Verein of Berlin, and the Vienna Maennergesang-Verein, all prominent singing societies have decied to visit the World's Fair after attending the saenger-fest in Cleveland in 1893, to which they have been invited.

Artist G. A. P. Healy, recently returned to this country from a long residence abroad, intends to exhibit some of his finest pictures at the Exposition. Those which he has thus far selected for that purpose are full length portrait of the Duc d'Aumale, third son of Louis Philippe, and portraits of Jules Simon, Whitelaw Reid and George Picot.

The grounds surrounding France's building at the Exposition will be decorated by Vilmorin, who is the most noted florist in France and at the head of the largest seed house in the world. Vilmorin has made fine floral displays at all of the World's Fairs' for twenty-five years or more, and it is reported that he is planning to outdo all previous efforts.

Italian Commissioner Alexander Del Nero writes from Rome to the effect that there will be a fine exhibit of the mosaics, tapestries, Columbian relics, and other tresures of the Vatican which have never yet been on exhibition. He further reports that the Ethnographic Museum of Rome will probably loan many Columbian antiquities to the Exposition.

The president of the Tennessee Wold's Fair Board has called a convention of the representatives of the manufacturing, mining, railroad, marble, timber and other industrial enterprises and interests of East Tennessee to meet at Knoxville, March 24. for the purpose of considering and taking action as to ways and means for providing for a creditable exhibit at the Fair.

A number of owners of steam yachts in New York intend to utilize them to transport themselves and their friends to the Exposition by way of the St. Lawrence and Welland Canal. They believe it will be of great advantage to live aboard their yachts, and thus be independent of crowded hotels. It is reported that the owners of many steam barges in Canada will fit them with comfortable living quarters, and carry Canadian visitors to and from the Fair.

Major Meigs, the government engineer, in charge of river improvements at Keokuk, Ia., is preparing for exhibition at the World's Fair working models of the government dry docks and engine house, the various boats used in making river improvements and sections of dams, showing the manner of their construction. It is announced that in the government exhibit will appear a photographic panorama of the Mississippi river fom St Paul to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Galveston, Tex., has raised $80,000 of the $150,000 which it pledged towards the State World's Fair fund. The city is alive with enthusiasm oyer the Fair, and is holding public meeting, torch-light processions, etc.

The Missouri World's Fair Board has forwarded to Chicago nine tree trunks to compose three of the columns of the rustic colonnade around the Forestry building. These trunks are typical specimens of yellow pine, white oak, red oak, ash, cypress, red gum, and hickory. It has also sent thirty pieces of timber all of different variety, for the rustic interlaced work between the three columns.

The Great Western Railway of England will exhibit in the Transportation Building the famous old locomotive. "The Lord of the Isles," which was built at the company's works in Swindon in 1851, from designs by the late Sir Daniel Gooch. This locomotive was a notable exhibit at the first World's Fair in London in 1851. From that time until July 1881, it was continually in service, and ran during that period a distance of 789,300, miles without being fitted with a new boiler. As a pioneer of early railroading and as a contrast to the powerful modern "Mogul," this old locomotive will attract much attention.

The Goods are Pure.

St. Louis Journal of Agriculture.

The business of the Royal Baking Powder Company comes to us in the regular way, and is not, therefore, entitled to any special mention on that account. But the fact that other baking powder companies have been making war on this company and using all manner of unfair means to injure its business is itself an appeal to the love of fair play which is a part of the character of every good American citizen.

The fact that the Royal Baking Powder company has succeeded far beyond any of its competitors is no doubt reason enough for some of them to say anything against the Royal Baking Powder, that they can get newspapers to publish. We do not know whether that sort of thing has injured the Royal's business or not. We don't suppose it has, but of one thing we are sure, when the goods of any company have been on the market, as Royal Baking powder has, for a whole generation, and been consumed by almost the entire population to a greater or less extent, to a greater or less extent, with perfect satisfaction to all, and without having injured the health of a single person, then it will take more than spite or jealousy to injure its business. The baking powders made by this company have been tested a thousand times by the most eminent chemists and always pronounced pure and wholesome. This, added to the experience of the millions who have used them, will stamp as absurd the attacks of other manufacturers who are prompted to jealousy of their great success to publish false statements about the Royal Company's goods.

A Great Combine.

This is a great age for "trusts"—sugar trust, cordage trust, whisky trust, cotton-seed-oil trust, beer trust, and numerous other syndicates, to which has been given the slang name of "combines." Some people think these are all wrong, oppressors, monopolists, and extortioners; others think them beneficial by lowering prices. Then there is the supposed "wheat combine," which troubles the Alliance. There is one great "combine," however, which is in the highest degree beneficial to the public, and here it is: Chicago, Burlington & Northern R. R.; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R.; Burlington & Missouri River R. R.; Hannibal & St. Joseph R. R.; Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs R. R.; St. Louis, Keokuk & Northwestern R. R.; Chicago, Burlington & Kansas City Ry.; Burlington & Western Ry.; Burlington & Northwestern Ry. This is the Burlington System, seven thousand miles of the best railroad in the country, covering the territory from Chicago on the east to Denver, Cheyenne and Deadwood on the west; and from St. Paul and Minneapolis on the north to St. Louis and Kansas City on the south. Get down your map and look at it. For more information, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Try THE JOURNAL job rooms for job work of all kinds.

Stylish hats? Mrs. E. E. Bangs has them to suit all tastes.

Miss Clara Aaker has returned from her visit to Alexandria.

Miss Inez and Edith McGrew visited Fosston friends on Saturday.

Frank Bivins informs THE JOURNAL that he expects to commence seeding this week.

Lew Gouler was hurt in a runaway on Monday. "Somewhat disfigured but still in the game."

Dr. Deniston has returned to civilization. Now all we need is to have Dr. Van Dyke return.

Charlie Vine will not allow any man to get away with him either in the quality or price of meats.

M. W. Jensen and A. Gilmour were two of the prominent citizens of McIntosh in the city last Saturday.

Andy Locken, who has been confined to his bed by illness for a month, was out on the streets on Saturday.

It is wonderful how just one week has dried the lands. At this rate seeding will be in full blast in a few days.

"Doc" Rutledge, Bronnlee and several good Fisher boys attended the Patti Rosa entertainment on Monday evening.

K. S. Aker was in from the west side last week. Says he never saw such roads before, but they are improving rapidly.

And now it is Judge R. J. Montague who is setting up the cigars on account of a son and heir who arrived on Saturday.

Ole Meldahl sends $1.75 from Drayton, N. D. to add to our hail list and says there's more to follow. Hurrah for North Dakota.

I. U. Jennings is constantly receiving and selling at very low prices every variety of household furniture of the latest styles and designs.

Fred Syverson sends in $6.37 to add to our hail list and says that the farmers in the neighborhood of Lindsay post office will send in more soon.

Robert Cochrane is seeding full drive on his place seven miles east of the city. The land is rolling, thus easily drained, which accounts for it.

We are encouraged to hope that by May first we will be printing THE JOURNAL all at home on our new press. If nothing serious happens we shall.

Levi S. Myers was in the city from the west side on Tuesday. Says he never saw so wet a spring in this country and never saw the land dry so rapidly.

The Department was called out to an incipient blaze on Saturday afternoon—a small shanty down in the woods. It was consumed before the boys got there.

R. S. Knudson was over from Grand Forks last week. Says the attendance at the business college for this time of the year has been a matter of surprise to him.

Prof. V. D. Carruth left for Kansas City on Thursday evening for a visit with his wife and youngest daughter, Mrs. Al. Muller. He expects to be gone two or three weeks.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings has just added to her large stock of millinery a fine assortment of Japanese goods, quaint, ornamental and beautiful, just the things for decorations.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, of the Congregational church will give a supper in the Rickett block this (Thursday) evening. Everybody cordially invited.

Felix Fournet has commenced work in earnest on the old buildings that occupy the site for the addition to the Fournet block. The old buildings will be moved across the street.

The entertainment given at the Opera House on Monday evening was one of the best ever given in this city. Patti Rosa captured every heart and was encored to the letter, and her support was exceptionably good.

Engineer Tom Hunt, who was hurt at McIntosh some weeks since, dropped into our den on Monday. Tom says he is doing nicely but finds it awful unhandy to go about on four legs as he is at present obliged to do.

The new millinery firm of Veronneau & Adams having enjoyed an excellent business since they commenced, wish to thank the ladies of Crookston and vicinity and invite them to call and see them whenever they need anything in the line of millinery, confident that they can supply their needs in millinery at any time.

One evening last week Gay Halverson had a plenty of oysters—the next morning he was out. He kept them outside the door in tubs to keep them cool and they evaporated. Gay was hunting round next day to find out where the banquet occurred, but when he learned that the new council met the evening before he did not hunt any further.

H. Steenerson went to St. Paul on Thursday of last week. He did not say so but we imagine that he went in the interest of the Horton case vs. the Great Northern road in which Dexter Horton, of Maple Bay, sues the company for $10,000 damages for the loss of two fingers while coupling cars.

Engineer Jack Bunnell went to see Patti Rosa on Monday evening, and when we heard him smile—clear across the meetin' house—we imagined that Jack enjoyed it. By-the-way, Jack will be a lone widdy-man for a fortnight while his wife is in Minneapolis visiting friends.

Two hundred and ninety miles of wall paper at "Schmidt's," Second St.

Mrs. J. B. Copeland is enjoying a visit from her mother, Mrs. J. Pirnie of Cleveland, Ohio.

More wall paper and paints in one room at "Schmidt's" than could be loaded in five box cars.

Ladies, before buying elsewhere come in and see those nice combination papers at Schmidt's," Second street.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Harry Warren of Grand Forks arrived in the city Wednesday and has accepted a position in the office of the Minnesota Hail association.

Doctor N. W. Watson, who has been in the city awhile, has concluded to remain and has secured quarters in the McKinnon block, next door to Doctor Just.

Field Manager Lord and Secretary Graber of the Minnesota Hail association are in the city. Mr. Lord will make a trip through this section soon to appoint agents.

John C. Wells of Edna gave this office a pleasant call on Monday. Says operations on his big farm will soon commence and be vigorously pushed until the seeding is completed.

Tom Adams is home sick. Not homesick, but just home-sick. This is Tom's first lay-off for this cause and naturally comes tough, but present appearances indicate nothing serious.

The body of a young lady was found in the river near Gentilly on Sunday morning. She was the daughter of Pierre Breuly and well known in this city, where she had many friends.

Owing to the change in the management of the JOURNAL we desire to have all past accounts settled up to April 14, 1892, from which time the partnership will date. COOKE & HAMMOND.

Joseph Brewster was up from Fisher Monday with "Sorrel Ned." Brewster thinks he has as fine a stepper as there is in Polk county, and we should think he was right—anyhow Sorrel Ned is a dandy.

S. L. Collins will have another carload of horses on hand by Saturday of this week. Collins is one of our home dealers, a reliable man who will always be found ready to make his word good in every particular.

Since his return from Battle Creek a week or so ago, Mr. E. K. Austin has not been as well as before he went. His treatment there was seemingly of no avail, but his friends still hope for his eventual recovery.

The H. Schiel Dramatic company will appear at the opera house on May 6th and 7th, and will give a rendition of "Tordenskjold i Dynekileu." This company is highly spoken of by the press and will likely draw a big house.

Frank Haseltine, our genial nurseryman, returned from a winter's sojourn at Madison, Wis., on Thursday. Says the prospects for business the coming season were never brighter. Frank is a thorough business man in his line.

W. F. Arnold returned last week from the Red Lake reservation, where he has been examining the surveys already performed there. Says he found oceans of water up there, and a great deal of very good farming land as well. Will will proceed to assess our citizens ere his return to the work on the reservation.

With a new press and engine, a large amount of new type and other material, and with the addition of competent job printers, the JOURNAL's job department will be in good shape to turn out first-class work, and we invite the patronage of all, confident that we can suit the most exacting requirements. Give the JOURNAL a call when you require anything in the line of job printing.

Owing to the large-sized prevailing mud, work on the JOURNAL's new press-room has been delayed beyond our expectation. We live in hopes that in a few days we shall be able to move the building designed for the press and engine room, then we will soon be ready for business. We had hoped to begin Volume 16 on the new press, but circumstances have prevented. When we get the press in position the JOURNAL will be a six-column quarto, all printed at home. We hope to make a paper that will be a necessity in every house hold, and we hope to receive the patronage of all by deserving it.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs

Has enjoyed an excellent trade in millinery this spring and desires to invite all JOURNAL readers to call at her millinery parlors on Second street whenever in need of the latest styles. She feels confident that she can fully supply their wants.

Commissioner Kirsch Explains.

CROOKSTON, April 18, 1892.

EDITOR JOURNAL: Allow me space in the columns of your valuable paper to explain myself as one of the county commissioners with reference to the prejudiced article which appeared in your last issue signed "Critic."

If the gentleman had employed some one of educational or clerical ability to examine the records at the court house he would have been informed that:

First. In the case of M. E. Kirsch a clerical error was made in transferring the assessment of 160 acres of land from the assessor's book to the tax book.

Second. That the personal property assessment was reduced in proportion to others.

Third. That the Minneapolis Building and Loan Association stock held by Messrs. Fontaine, Ericsson, McKinnon and others, which had been assessed at full value, was reduced 30 per cent. and now stands assessed 5 per cent. higher than banking stock.

Fourth. That there were no grounds for Mr. "Critic" or any one else to criticise the actions of the county commissioners in the cases above referred to.

I also wish to inform the gentleman that all of the county commissioners were in favor of granting the petition of the hail sufferers, providing the law gave them authority to do so, but upon being informed by the county attorney that they had no power to grant the relief asked for in the petition, the same was rejected.

To conclude with, I would advise Mr. "Critic" to try and manage his own affairs as well as the business of the county is managed by the commissioners, and he will certainly meet with better success in the future than he has in the past.

Respectfully,
M. E. KIRSCH,
Chairman County Board.

(Seal) E. C. CARRUTH,
[52-1] City Clerk.

First publication April 21st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a mortgage containing power of sale dated May 13th, 1885, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, June 13th, 1885, in book W of mortgages, page 81, whereby William Watts and Edith Watts, his wife, mortgagors, mortgaged to The Middlesex Banking Company, mortgagee, the west half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of Section thirty-two (32) in Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), of Range forty-six (46), in said Polk County, by which default the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the debt remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof, and there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date hereof, $322.08, to which amount should be added the taxes on said property paid by said mortgagee, amounting, with interest as provided in said mortgage, to $22.40, making the total amount claimed to be due at the date hereof on said mortgage $344.48.

Now, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power said mortgage will be foreclosed and said premises sold at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or his deputy, on at ten o'clock a. m., at the front door of the Court House in Crookston, in said county, to pay said debt, interest, attorney's fees and disbursements allowed by law.

Dated April 15th, 1892.

ANCIENT SANITATION.

The Art of Sewer Building Took a Long Time to Learn.

Towns must have fearfully suffered before people learned that the houses must be so far separate as to allow air to blow between them. The Greeks must certainly have made their cities and many of their streets exceeding handsome, but their earlier towns and even Athens were too much crowded, and so much did they fear jobbery among the sharp-eyed business men of the city that they dared not trust anyone with money to rebuild the place. In constantinople Zeno ordered all houses to be 12 feet apart all the way up, and the projections which caused the houses to nearly meet above were disallowed. This was an effort, after a long interval of neglect.

He attempted also to go further, and ordered that no one should stop the view of the sea from his neighbor. This would be well in our sea-bathing towns, where houses are built, before others without pity, and not only is the view destroyed, but the whole living of the families who possessed it and to whom the view paid the rent. But the laws are of no value unless a strong and vigilant executive attends to them. Constantinople became so bad that its destruction by fire was scarcely deemed a misfortune.

How infected by their own crowding the Romans must have been when the houses were ordered to be at least five feet apart and not more than nine stories high! Augustus said they should not exceed 70 feet in height, and Trajan made the limit 60. The laborious proofs that sewer air is unwholesome have taken commissions and boards of health many years of hard labor in our time, but the whole is as clearly recognized in "Justinian's Digest," in quotation from Ulpian, that it is evident that the question was then past all dispute.—From the Architect.

An Ideal Juryman.

A great many stories are attributed to General Tom Bennett; but this is a true one and illustrates his ready wit. He was on the bench as Mayor of the city of Richmond in the trial of a liquor case. The witnesses could not remember anything, the place, the man who sold the liquor, or the kind of liquor. It was evidently a case of collusion, and Mayor Bennett became a little impatient. He finally took a witness from the state attorney and questioned him himself.

"Where was the liquor bought?" he asked,

"Couldn't say, yer Honor," was the reply.

"What kind of liquor was it?"

"Don't know, yer Honor."

"Do you know whether it was liquor or not?" The question was put a little tartly.

"Couldn't say, yer Honor, my mind is a perfect blank."

"Stand aside then," said General Bennett; "we may want you for a juror."

The defendant was dismissed by the disgusted Court.

COPYRIGHT 1891

You can't believe some dealers always. They want to sell the medicine that pays them the largest profit. What you want to buy is the one that does you the most good.

Which one is it?

Sometimes, it may be a matter of doubt. But, in the case of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, there's no room for doubt. It's a matter that can be proved.

With the facts before you, it's an insult to your intelligence to have something else offered as "just as good."

And here's the proof: Among all the medicines that claim to cure woman's peculiar weaknesses, irregularities, and diseases, the "Favorite Prescription" is the only one that's guaranteed.

If it doesn't do all that's claimed for it, if it doesn't give satisfaction in every case, you'll have your money back.

There's strength and vigor for every tired and feeble woman, health and a new life for every delicate and ailing woman—and if there's no help, there's no pay.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. A STORY OF LOVE.

Hardly Possible Except of Natives of Sunny Italy.

In front of a dingy row of tenement houses on President street, between Columbia and Van Brunt streets, Brooklyn, nearly half a hundred Italians—men, women and dirty little children—stood vociferously welcoming and praising a tall, slender young man, who stood laughing and bowing to the crowd of his country-folk, but at the same time keeping careful hold on the young woman at his side.

The girl had evidently been in this country only a short time, for her holiday dress was almost an exact copy of that of the Neapolitan flower girls on a feast day. The right side of her face was beautiful in outline and charming in color, but when she turned there could be seen extending from her temple to her chin a broad scar whose edges, drawn together, made a line of hideous wrinkles. So near to the eye ran the scar that the lower lid was drawn down, giving an ugly leering expression in awful contrast to the beauty of the other cheek.

The story of the couple was this. They had loved and wanted to marry, but the girl's father, a fisherman near Naples, had promised her to Francisco, a richer man. At last in despair she begged her lover to disfigure her face. He refused. The next night, the night before her proposed marriage—Giuseppine pleaded again for her disfigurement. She hated her beauty because it stood between herself and her happiness. At last, in a wild fit of desperation, Augustine seized the knife and, with one broad sweep of the blade, gashed the lovely face from temple to chin.

As they suspected, Francisco refused to marry a girl so disfigured, but Augustine was tried, and sentenced to three years in prison, and his marriage seemed as far off as before. All the time he was in prison Giuseppine worked and saved, and when the three years had expired she met her lover at the prison gate, and putting all her little savings in his hands bade him to go to America and earn enough to send for her. He refused, unless she married him before he left Naples, and as they walked towards the city they met a wandering padre who made them man and wife.

After one short twenty-four hours of married life, Augustine left Naples on a coasting vessel, and finally made his way to this country, which he reached about six months ago. His countrymen heard his story and found him work, and meanwhile he saved every cent until at last he had enough to send for his young wife. Her father refused to let her leave, and locked her in their little cottage, but the girl who would sacrifice her beauty for her love, laughed at the old jailer, and one night stole out and away to friends, who helped her to find the way to this country.—New York Advertiser.

WAGNER'S AUTOGRAPH.

How It Brought About His Hasty Departure From Vienna,

When Wagner was at the height of his popularity he visited Vienna. Count von Beust, then chancellor of the empire, was informed that the Prussian party intended to give him an immense serenade—a serenade which would have the air of German protest against the tendency of the ministry to make the union of Hungary and Austria more intimate. The demonstration promised to arouse strong feeling. "Your excellency is warned," said the chancellor's advisers. "It is impossible to stop this manifestation unless Wagner goes away, and he loves ovations too well. Nothing will induce him to depart." "You think so? said Beust with a smile.

An hour later Wagner was invited to dine with the chancellor. He was flattered by the invitation and accepted it. After dinner, at which Beust was delightfully affable, and entertaining, the chancellor remarked: "Herr Wagner, are you interested in autographs? I have some very curious ones to show you, and he opened a portfolio where were letters of Palmerston, Bismarck, Napoleon III., Heine and others. Suddenly turning to a paper, dated 1848, he said: "Ah, look at this; it is very curious. What would your friend, his highness the king of Bavaria, say if this paper, which would be significant in connection with the political serenade which the Germans are going to give you, should be published to-morrow in the Vienna papers?"

The composer examined the paper and recognized, with surprise, an old proclamation of one Richard Wagner, who, an ardent revolutionist in 1848, had proposed to the youth of that time to set fire to the palace of the king of Saxony. He saw his autograph, and that it might be the means of getting him into serious trouble. "Very curious, is it not, Herr Wagner?" said the minister. "Very curious, your excellency," replied his guest. The next morning Richard Wagner left Vienna, recalled to Bayreuth by urgent business.

Cross Country Riding.

The pluckiest girls of the season outside of those who dare to get married to a progressive young man, are the girls who go riding cross country.

When you find a woman who is up to this sort of thing, she is very much up indeed, and she is perfectly undaunted in any thing she chooses.

With hair flying, skirts streaming in the breezes, face animated and eyes a-sparkle, she leaps hedges, flies over the lower boughs of the trees and goes dashing on after the hounds as though she were a winged mercury.

Truly, the girl of today is progressive. Truly, she can do anything that she sets out to do.

Appreciation.

The Rev. Doctor Cuyler was seventy years old a few days ago, and received gratifying tokens of regard from many friends. The drawing-room and study were fragrant with roses and flowers, and were a bower of beauty, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

It occurred to some one to bring a faithful servant who had been knitted by interests, association and affection with the life of the household through years of tender and trusting service, up to the drawing-room to see the evidences of the loving remembrance in which the good man was held.

She examined the gifts with great interest, and expressed her delight in these glowing words to Mrs. Cuyler: I tell you, ma'am, the doctor couldn't have had more flowers sent him if he was dead!"

Fatal Constancy of a Buck.

Lyman Pusshee, of Dennysville, had a unique experience in hunting recently. He was lying in wait for a deer when, almost without warning, three fine animals came into an opening a short distance from the place of his concealment; they were two does and a buck. Opening fire, one of the does fell, and the others ran away. Pusshee, still remaining in hiding, was soon rewarded by the return of the buck to his dead mate. A shot followed by others, failed to bring the noble fellow down, and again and again did he return, until eleven shots had been fired at him, when he fell a victim to constancy.—Bango Commercial.

I was so impressed with the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla in cases similar to mine that I decided to try it. So a bottle was bought, and to my great gratification the sores soon decreased, and I began to feel better. This strengthened my faith in the medicine, and in a short time I was Royal Superstitions.

"The Little Red Man of the Tuileries" was to the house of Bourbon what the "White Lady of Berlin" is to the House of Hohenzollern, a foreboder of any great disaster. According to the accepted legend, after the Tuileries was built by Catherine de Medical, she had no sooner taken up her abode in the new palace than she hastily left it, never to return, declaring that the spectre of a little red man had appeared to her, fortelling her death. She did in fact die not long afterward, and the spectre was next seen on the night of May 14, 1610, a few hours before the assasination of Henry IV. by the fanatic Ravallac.

It appeared to Louis XVI. when the latter was a child, and foretold the civil wars of the Fronde, and was seen in the King's bedroom after Louis XVI. had left the palace for Varrennes, where he was apprehended and whence he was brought back, and it was again seen in the palace just before the King's execution. According to tradition, the specter appeared repeatedly during the Winter before Napoleon's Russian campaign, and was seen also before Leipsic and again before Waterloo.

After the Restoration the little man appeared to foretell the assassination of the Duke de Berri, and walked into the death room af Louis XVIII. a few hours before the King breathed his last. Rumor says that he was seen just before Sedan, and repeatedly during the siege and the war of the Commune, making his last appearance on the night the Tuileries was burned to the ground by the Paris mob.—From the Globe-Democrat.

Not Alone.

Very stout persons may sometimes be noticed glancing at other stout persons with a pleased expression that seems to say, "Well I am not as stout as that, any way;" or, "There is some one who is quite as stout as I am." Evidently it is quite a consoling thought.

The French Marshal Vivonne once indicated this feeling in a witty reply to the king. Vivonne and the Comte d'Auvergne were probably the most corpulent gentlemen in the court at the time.

"Marshal, you are really getting to fat," said the king. "You ought to take more exercise."

"Your majesty does not know, then, that I take a great deal of exercise?"

"No, what do you do?"

"I walk around the Comte d'Auvergne three times every day."

No wonder the minutes fly so fast—they are making up time.

A Texas woman threw a brick at a dog and hit her husband who stood fifty feet behind her.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER IX—CONTINUED.

When night came, he said to me, after we had separated from the rest,—

"This is no time for sleep, Thorne; we must watch through the night, whether you like it or not, if it is only for Miss Lascelles' sake."

I readily agreed to this, an for an hour we walked on a part of the lawn from which I could see Edith's window. Then the rain, which had been drizzling for some time, fell heavily, and forced us to go in.

We changed our boots for slippers, and together in my room, I with a book, he with his chin in his hands, his face hideous with the light of the lamp on his protruding eyes.

Heaven knows, I was not wanting in love for Edith, or solicitude for her welfare, and yet I could not keep awake. It must be remembered that I had had no sleep the preceding night, and that I did believe in Edith's hallucination, and therefore saw no actual danger menacing her. I tried to interest myself in the book, but my thoughts grew confused, the type swam before my eyes, and helped to bemuse my senses. At length I put down the book, and, shaking my wits together, I said to Van Hoeck,—

"Let us talk."

"Talk!" he muttered scornfully; "why not ask me to sing you a comic song? If the Kid were here I suppose you wouldn't want me to amuse you. You could keep awake until three or four in the morning watching her; but, as it is only your future wife who is concerned, you are logheaded before midnight."

This sarcasm did not prevent me dozing again a few minutes later. I was ashamed of my drowsiness, and after a minute's doze I would wake with a guilty start, only to drop off again in a few moments. I know not how long this had been going on, when Van Hoeck shook me by the arm, and woke me thoroughly.

"It is courting destruction to sit here with the door open, he said, "one of us blind, and the other dead asleep. I can not stand it any longer; it is intolerable. Tell me if it rains."

I went to the window, and found that the rain had ceased. I told him this.

"I will go out; take me down to the door," he said.

I led him down-stairs, and gave him his umbrella and hat. Then I took mine, and opened the door quietly, fearing to awake Edith. I would have accompanied him, but he refused, saying night and day were alike to him, and he knew his way along the paths and about the lawn.

"Go back to your room, and fasten yourself in," he said; "it is our only security. Tap at the window to let me know that all is fast. I beg you to do this," he added earnestly; "you can not understand the feelings of a man in my position,—the torture of conscious impotency as you feel the approaching fate that you are powerless to avert."

His voice rattled in his throat, and indistinctly I heard him mutter, as he groped his way along the wall of the terrace,—

"Cramped in a coffin, and the clods falling, falling—"

I closed the door, and returned to my room with a shudder.

When I had fastened myself in, I tapped at the window, and Van Hoeck replied by tapping on the wall below.

The fresh air had revived me; I had no longer to struggle with an irresistible drowsinees,—the inclination to sleep was gone.

I had my book to finish, but my mind was not sufficiently composed to read. As I walked about the room, I thought of Edith and of Van Hoeck, wondering if there could be any connection between her strange hallucination and the terrible presentiment which night and day possessed him. It seemed as if there must be something abnormal in the conditions under which we lived, to produce an effect which, though characterized by different peculiarities, was in both cases attributable only to a disordered imagination; and I wondered if I, in my turn, should come under this occult influence.

I might have been occupied with the speculation for half-an-hour or more, when I heard a scream of terror that I could not doubt came from the wing in which Edith lay. In an instant I opened the door and ran through the corridor. The doors in the picture gallery were open. As I drew aside the curtains which closed in the staircase corridor of the left wing, I saw Sir Edmund come from his room with a lamp. The door of Edith's room exactly faced his; it was wide open; all was dark within.

"What is it, my dear, what is it?" he called as he entered the room.

There was no answer.

I followed to the door. Sir Edmund was standing by the empty bed looking around him in blank dismay.

"She is gone," he gasped "The door was wide open—"

The bed stood away from the wall. I bade Sir Edmund look on the further side.

There was scarcely room for him to pass between the foot of the bed and the wall; but, as he lowered the light, he said, in quick alarm,—

"She is here—unconscious,—ring the bell for the women."

I ran to the bell and rang it violently; then from the stairs cross the gallery I called to the servants to come down. In the meanwhile Sir Edmund had raised Edith, and placed her on the bed, where she lay like one dead.

From his room I got a spirit case; but we knew not how to apply the remedies at our hand, and it was an intense relief to us when the housekeeper bustled in, followed by Edith's maid, for we were as helpless as children in this emergency.

The housekeeper told me to leave the room. I went to the door, and stood there trembling from head to foot.

I had taken Edith's hand, and the icy coldness of the lifeless fingers that I had only known quick with warm blood, chilled my very heart with fear.

There was a long period of terrible suspense, and then I heard the dear voice murmur, and my heart bounded with joy, I ventured forward that I might see the life once more in her beautiful face. Sir Edmund stopped me on the threshold.

"Thank God!" he said fervently, "she has come back to us; but the women said she must be kept quiet. Go back to your room, my dear fellow, and we will talk it over at breakfast time. Good-night, good night."

I returned reluctantly to my room. As I passed his chamber, I heard the Judge snoring loud and long.

It needed something more than such trifles to wake him when he had a bed to sleep in.

What already puzzled me was how Edith's door came to be wide open, when she had fainted in a quite remote part of the room.

CHAPTER IX.

What happened in Edith's room that night I did not learn until the next morning; but I will give her account in this place, in order to preserve the sequence of events.

True to her resolve, she had left the window open and the blind down, exactly as on the preceding nights. It was her habit to lock the door, and, that she did not omit to do so on this occasion, she was convinced by the fact that she had found some difficulty in turning the key, and had afterward tried the handle, to know if the bolt was shot. She left the lamp burning on the table screened from her by the lace curtains of the bed. It was half-past eleven when she lay down, and she felt so little fear that she fell asleep almost immediately.

A pillow slipping from beneath her head awoke her, she believed. Her first consciousness was that her head felt uncomfortably low. She put her hand out to find if she had slipped to the edge of the bed; but no, her position was unchanged.

Then it struck her that she had left a light on the table; it was now out, and all was dark.

She wondered if this was a trick of imagination. Was she awake or asleep? She touched her eyes to be sure they were open. Then it occurred to her that she might have been asleep for a long while. There was nothing extraordinary in a lamp going out, or her head slipping from the pillow. Saying this to herself, she felt for the pillows.

To her astonishment, she found that both were gone.

It was droll. She felt inclined to laugh, thinking how she must have tossed about in her sleep to knock both pillows out. But the bedclothes were perfectly smooth, the bed on each side of her even and soft and yielding. That was strange!

"I must have done all the tossing with my head," she said to herself, still tickled by the oddity of the thing.

One thing was certain,—she could not sleep in comfort with nothing but a bolster under her head.

She leaned out, and felt upon the floor as far as she could reach to the right. The pillows had not slipped out on that side. Then, putting her shoulder against the wall, she felt down on the left. There was nothing there. What did it all mean? Decidedly this must be a new freak of her imagination.

She was not yet thoroughly frightened. The spirit who could steal her pillows must have some sense of humor; it was preferable to drumming on the window-panes, and glaring through the blind at her. Hearing and sight had been tried, and now her sense of touch was to be tested.

But though she tried to make light of the affair, she felt that something terrible underlay its comic aspect, and a little shiver ran through her at the thought of getting up and striking a light. It was so much easier to be courageous in the daylight than in such darkness as this.

After all, perhaps the pillows had slid out of bed in a natural way, and lay just a little beyond her reach. But rather than stretch her arm out again in the dark, she preferred to put up with the bolster doubled.

She doubled the bolster, and gave it a pat; then she put up a lock of hair that had come down, and told herself not to be stupid about a little thing like that; and, wondering whether she should dare tell of this incident in the morning, she dropped on her elbow, and lay down her head,—down, down, down, till it touched the bed.

"What was this?" she asked herself, starting up in a fright. She felt from side to side; now the bolster was gone; there was nothing there but the bed.

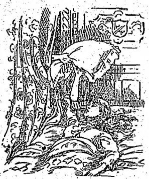
But this pantomime trick was no longer comic. She felt the tears of fright springing to her eyes, and something rising in her throat. Cold fear chilled her to the bone.

Was she in reality awake?" The striking of the clock in the belfry assured her of that.

Ding-dong, ding-dong, ding-dong, ding-dong it lightly chimed; and then the hour was tolled out slowly, sonorously solemn:

Boom, boom, boom, boom.

But, if this was not hallucination, what was it? The work of actual hands? What then? If they had no more direful intention than to play a trick of this kind, they were not to be feared. It was not terrific; it was merely childish mischief, and this reflection suggested that, after all, it might only be Lela who was trying to frighten her. And just for one moment, as she leaned back on her elbow, she fancied she saw something like those luminous eyes in the midst of the darkness, and close to her,—there! there, above her, toward the side of the bed.



"Is it you, Lola?" she asked, but in a voice so faint, for she was sick with fright, that she herself could hardly hear the words she spoke.

It was a fancy, or the eyes were turned away. Yet, still leaning upon her elbow, that quivered under her, she strained her eyes to penetrate the darkness.

Not long, perhaps, though it seemed so, her heart beating painfully, her mouth parched and dry, the hot breath catching the back of her throat.

Something seemed to be touching her hair. Was it the lace curtain?

She raised her trembling hand, and felt something level with the top of her head. But it was not the lace curtain. It was the pillow, or she was mad.

Her strength gave way, and she fell back upon the bed; but the terrible suspicion that the pillows had been withdrawn for the purpose of smothering her made her throw her hand up.

The pillow had descended; it was close to her face. She tried to scream, but the pillow was already upon her mouth, and smothered the cry.

It closed down upon her head, firm and hard. She could no longer breathe. It pressed upon her throat, as she lay with the back of her head pushed down into the bed.

The touch of Death aroused the instinct of self-preservation within her, and, with a frantic effort, she tore herself from under that suffocating pressure, flung herself from the bed, and, as respiration returned, cried with all her force for help.

CHAPTER X.

Ignorant of what had occurred in Edith's room before her cry for help, I paced my room, thinking how terrible the fright must have been that made her faint a second time, and despite her belief in the unreality of these mysterious appearances.

"Your turn will come," Van Hoeck had said to me, and, these words coming back to my mind, I asked myself if the repeated attacks upon Edith might not be part of a complicated scheme to obtain the diamond.

Such a plot was the more possible because it seemed impossible. An act of legerdermain succeeds or not, according to the skill with which the conjurer fixes our attention on a false train of operations while he works out the actual feat. As I made these reflections, I took the Great Hesper from the pouch on my waist strap, and buckled it in its case upon my left wrist; then I doubly locked the door, saw that there was oil in the lamp, put a box of wax matches beside it on the table, and finally opened the long-bladed knife Van Hoeck had given me, and stuck it between the mattress and the side of the bedstead.

The room was thickly carpeted and oak-paneled. The furniture—with the exception of the toilet arrangements, and a low saddle-back chair—was antique, and of oak. The bedstead was particularly wide, with four carved pillars carrying a baldaquin, and heavy curtains of some thick brocaded stuff, looped at the foot, but hanging loose at the head: it faced the oriel.

The Right Kind of a Girl.

Let a girl be ever so graceful in the dance, let her be ever so elegant of walk across a drawing-room, ever so bright in conversation, she must possess some other qualities to convince the great average run of young men that she can be the manager of his home, the pilot that steers his ship of state, writes Edward W. Bok in the April Ladies' Home Journal. Frugality, womanly instincts of love for home, an eye to the best interests of her husband and the careful training of her children—these are the traits which make the good wife of to-day, and which young men look for in the girls they meet. Men may sometimes give the impression that they do not care for common sense in their sweethearts, but there is nothing they so unfailingly demand of their wives.

Averting Trouble.

Maid breathlessly—"Oh, miss both the gents you is engaged to has called, and they'r in the parlor, and somehow or other they've found it out, and, oh, miss, I'm 'fraid there'll be trouble."

Miss Flintie—"Horrors! Oh, dear! What shall I do?"

Maid after reflection—"I'll fix it. I'll run an' tell 'em you're cryin' y'r eyes out 'cause y'r father has lost all his money."—New York Weekly.

Selfish Parents.

Small Boy—"Mamma, when will there be another war?"

"Mamma—"Never, I hope."

Small Boy—"Huh! You and papa saw a great big war when you was young, an' now you don't care whether us childrens has any fun or not."—Street & Smith's Good News.

USE OF THE HANDS.

When Employed in Writing Nearly Every Muscle in the Body Helps Them.

At the late International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, in Section 4, which was concerned with the hygiene of infancy and school life, a resolution was passed in favor of the teaching of upright penmanship or vertical writing, on the ground that spinal curvature and short sight are caused by the faulty position of the youthful student, which is necessitated by slope of the letters. We can all of us remember the trouble of learning to write, and the mental and physical toil which the making of our first pothooks and hangers involved. The number of muscles put in action when a person is writing is prodigious, and it is probable that in beginners every muscle of the body must yield its assent before the graphic symbols trickle from the pen.

The fingers, wrist, elbow and shoulder must all be held steady. The spine must be rigid and fixed below as well as above. The pelvis must be firm, and to this end the child often gets a support by its feet from the legs of the chair. The thorax is more or less rigid, and its movements are determined more by the work of the hand than the respiratory needs. Lastly, the knit brows and protruding tongue are unconscious muscular acts which serve to mark the effort, both of body and mind, which the child undergoes when learning to write. It is notorious that in writing our individuality asserts itself in spite of the pedagogue. We are taught certain rules for sitting at the desk and holding the pen, which we ultimately learn to neglect, and finally write in a fashion of our own.

The true remedy for the evils produced by learning to write seems to us to be to teach the child to use both hands, and to practice alternately with either hand. Vertical writing lends itself more readily to ambidexterity than does sloping writing, and there can be no doubt that a clerk who could write with equal facility with either hand, and could rest one side of the body while the other was working, would be little liable to writer's cramp and similar troubles. Seeing how enormous is the muscular effort involved in giving the hand sufficient steadiness, and that the brain fag is scarcely less than the muscle fag, it goes without saying that writing lessons should at first be of very short duration. Ten minutes with each hand ought to amply suffice.—London Lancet.

Aztec Footprints in Tennessee.

Dr. A. P. Clark of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., was en route home from Cleveland, Tenn., where he and a party of other learned gentlemen from the institution investigated the solid stone wall near Cleveland on which are marks which connect ancient and prehistoric formations with the geological wonders of the present day. The party were furnished with a full history of its discovery, the geology of the section, the various formations and stratifications, with elaborate drawings of the wall proper and the characters inscribed thereon.

Dr. Clark said to an American reporter who sought him: "It is a genuine wall, similar to some found in Central America and Mexico. Such formations are peculiar to tropical climates only, and none have ever been found so far north of the equator as this one. The wall was found buried beneath the earth, and enough of it was uncovered last Spring to give the geologists of the country some idea of what it was. We uncovered more of the wall, and on one stone, twelve feet under ground, we found the imprint of a man foot plainly and distinctly marked, 13 inches long and 5 inches wide, with some mystic characters in the heel and foot. If these characters had been in the ball of the foot they would have been identical with the curious hieroglyphics found only in India. We have some splendid photographs of the wall and the marks, but have been unable to decipher the characters as yet. The rest of the party are still at Cleveland making further investigation."

Too Hasty.

Doctor Brunton, in an address lately reported in the London Lancet, was cautioning his hearers—the members of a medical society—against hastily expressed opinions as to the nature of patients' diseases, and emphasized his warning by two professional anecdotes. He was once present at a clinic, the subject of which was a man evidently suffering from some disease of the heart.

An unnatural murmuring sound could be heard from that organ, and the pupil of one of his eyes was very much dilated. The peculiar appearance of the eye seemed to have some connection with the cardiac affection, but various opinions were expressed by the different students as to what the precise nature of this relation could be.

The discussion was just becoming interesting when the patient remarked that his strange-looking eye was made of glass!

At another clinic the professor in charge was discussing learnedly about the importance of attending to minor symptoms.

"Now gentlemen," he said, "in the case of this woman here, certain things could be confidently affirmed from the condition of her teeth."

He was proceeding to particularize, but just then the patient broke in upon him.

"Please, sir," she said, as she took out her teeth, "I will hand them round; the young gentlemen might like to look at them closer."

A FAMOUS HORSE.

The Story of Alexander the Great's Bucephalus.

When Alexander, the son of Philip, King of Macedon, was a youth, a Thessalian dealer brought to the court a beautiful and hight-spirited horse, which he offered to the king for sale. The animal was pure white, all but his forehead, on which there was a black mark in the form of a bull's head, hence he received the name of Bucephalus, which is Greek for "bull's head."

The king would gladly have bought the horse, though the Thessalian asked a large sum for it—about $20,000, our money—but none of the courtiers could manage the creature. Whenever any of them mounted him he reared and threw his rider, with the result that he broke some of their bones.

Now, the young Prince Alexander, carefully watching the horse's actions, noticed that he swerved aside and became unruly from fear of his own shadow, and, having asked and obtained his father's permission to try his hand, he boldly mounted the animal and rode him full against the sunshine, so that his shadow fell behind him. Bucephalus, no longer seeing the object of his dread, became quite docile and carried the prince quietly.

The king was so overjoyed at the courage and skill of his son that he presented him with the horse, exclaiming: "Go, my son; seek another kingdom, for Macedonia cannot suffice for thee."

Alexander became much attached to his horse and took him with him through all his campaigns in Asia, says the Philadelphia Times. After bearing his master safely through many conflicts, Bucephalus is said to have died of the wounds he received in the battle with Porus, the Indian king; but Arrian, the historian of Alexander, says that he died of fatigue and old age, being then about thirty years old.

However that may be, Alexander was deeply affected at the loss of the faithful companion of his victories, and on the banks of the Hydaspes he built a city in his honor, which he named Bucephala.

Photographing Inside the Body.

Phrenologists have long claimed to be able to ascertain the character of an individual by observing the conformation of the bumps on his skull, but now photography, in conjunction with the electric light, has rendered it possible for a man to know by ocular demonstration the state of his own inside. Inclosed in a cylindrical case provided with two hemispherical shutters and contained in an india-rubber tube, is a small cylindrical camera. In front of the lenses are two tiny incandescent lamps, the wires to which, as well as a short pipe from the camera, are carried in an outside casing tube. Simple pressure on a pneumatic ball drives the camera forward in the incasing cylinder, and at the same instant makes the contact for the electric lamps and opens the shutters. By removing the pressure on the ball the camera returns to its place, the lamps go out and the shutters close.—Philadelphia Times.

Weeping Trees.

The literature of "weeping trees" is enormous, much of it being plainly mythical, but there is a large basis of fact upon which most of these marvelous stories rest. Many travelers have described the famous "rain tree" of Padradoca, Isle of Ferro, the most notable accounts of it appearing in Peter Martyr's "Indie Occidentale" and Ramusio's "Hist. delle Indie." John Cockburn, 1735, describes a tree at Vera Pas, Central America, from which pure water dripped from every leaf and branch.

George Westinghouse is said to have invented an electric street car motor which will pull 25,000 pounds.

Ferocious foxes are reported to be overrunning and terrorizing a section of the country near Charleston, S. C. They are said to be so savage as to attack children and dogs.

The duke of Portland has a necktie for every hour of the day, and he never wears his gloves twice. His hosier's bill is about $1,200 a year. The duke of Fife spends about the same amount.

To take the place of the old-fashioned needle, a Brooklyn man has invented an ear-piercer which looks like a skyrocket with a long fuse. The point pierces the ear, carrying with it the gold wire, and the shaft is then withdrawn.

A pigeon-blood oriental ruby is the most costly gem in the world. A five-carat ruby of this kind is worth ten times as much as a five-carat first water Brazilian diamond, which is the most precious species of diamonds in the world.

The Chinese are very particular about lucky and unlucky colors. They liked English sewing needles, but would not buy many of them because they were wrapped in black paper, black being an unlucky color. A printer used green paper for the Chinese calendar and his trade stopped almost immediately. He finally discovered that green was an unlucky color.

In pencil factories pencils are counted by an ingenious apparatus which takes the form of a number of parallel grooves. An operative takes a handful of pencils and rolls them along the board in which these grooves are, with the result that each groove is filled and the board is set aside. As the number of grooves in the board is known, this prevents any further trouble in counting.

PICKED AND PACKED.

An "Anti-Church-Bell association" has been formed in New York.

There are over 12,500,000 pupils in the public schools of the United States.

The average age of the convicts at the Michigan state prisons is 33 years, and at the reformatories 18.

Captain Benjamin Thompson, Kennebunkport, Me., ninety-three years old, had occasion to fix a pulley to the ridgepole of his barn. To perform the work it was necessary to pull a ladder up over three stagings and then place it in position on the roof, but the old gentleman did the job, being afraid, he said, to intrust it to his son Horace, aged sixty, as the latter was stiff and clumsy and might fall.

A unique method of avoiding contagion from the handling of books is in use in the public library of Chicago. By an arrangement with the board of health every case of contagious disease occurring in the city is immediately reported to the librarian, and if it happens that any books from the library are in possession of the afflicted family messengers from the library are at once sent for them. The books are then thoroughly fumigated, and, in cases of small pox, destroyed.

FORTUNE'S WHEEL.

A pocket of splendid tourmaline is reported to have been found recently in Maine.

Over $100,000 worth of pearls was found in mussels on the Sugar river, Wisconsin, last summer.

Pastry Without Butter.

Light, flaky and digestible pie crust and all kinds of fine pastry can be made with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder without butter or with one half the usual portion, if preferred, or with a small quantity of lard or other shortening as desired. Pie crust made in this way is more wholesome and digestible besides being more economical and easier prepared in addition to saving all the butter if desired. One-third the flour is also dispensed with, and the crust is rolled that much thinner, the raising qualities of Dr. Price's Powder swelling it to the requisite thickness. Those who enjoy the appetizing qualities of the delicious home made pie will rejoice to know this secret.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the only powder that contains the white of eggs.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

THE END REACHED

The Wheat Investigating Committee Submits a Final Report,

Which Is Signed by Every Member Except Representative Moore,

After many months of weary work and the expenditure of about $16,000, the grain investigation committee has concluded its work and will make two reports to the governor. The committee was practically unanimous, its report being signed by all the members except Representative Moore, who refused to affix his signature on the ground that he did not like the report.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The first section of the report deals with the organization of the committee, and names the representatives of the different interests. It then takes up the policy of the committee with regard to reception of evidence and states that at the outset the committee was pleased to adopt very liberal rules as to the admissability of evidence and endeavored to afford every opportunity to any one who felt so disposed to appear and testify before it. Neither time nor expense was spared in securing the presence of witnesses deemed by any of the interests involved in the investigation important to the ascertainment of the truth. The adoption of such a policy necessarily resulted in encumbering the record with a large amount of irrelevant and immaterial matter which has tended rather to conceal than disclose the truth. Although this result was foreseen at the commencement of its labors, it was deemed injudicious to adopt any otherr course.

SWEEPINGS.

A large part of the time of the committee was devoted to an investigation of the charge that the elevator companies of Duluth had been grossly negligent in cleaning out cars in which grain had been shipped to their houses, and that thereby serious loss had resulted to the shippers.

As a result of its investigation as to this charge the committee find that during the earlier years of the state inspection service proper care was not at all times exercised in cleaning out cars in which wheat had been shipped to the warehouses at Duluth; there is no evidence, however, which indicates that this fact involved either the integrity or sound business management of the companies operating those houses. Furthermore, it sufficiently appears that as soon as the attention of such companies was called to the subject appropriate measures were adopted to correct the evil. The committee have no reason to believe that of late years any substantial grounds for complaint have existed to any considerable extent.

Evidence was introduced tending to show that at times, especially during the press of business at the height of the shipping season, the said companies at Duluth were also careless in cleaning the floors of such warehouses after cars had been unloaded; and it is not unlikely that in some instances shippers suffered to some extent. It is not the opinion of the committee, however, that any serious loss ever resulted to the shipper from this source or that it was a matter of much gain to the elevator companies.

ILLICIT SHIPPING OF WHEAT.

A very serious charge was preferred against the Lake Superior Elevator company and the Union Improvement and Elevator Company of Duluth based upon an alleged fraudulent shipment from those houses in 1886 and subsequent years of a large amount of wheat aggregating some 800,000 bushels. This was by far the most serious charge involved in the work of the committee. From the magnitude of the charge, and the fact that it was made the basis of an investigation by a committee appointed for that purpose by the last house of representatives, and sustained by a majority report of that committee, the present committee felt called upon to conduct a most thorough and careful investigation with reference thereto. It is no reflection upon said house committee that its results as to such charge are at variance with those at which the present committee has arrived. The house committee was necessarily limited in time, and more or less handicapped by various and exacting legislative duties.

That the question might be divested of doubt, the present committee employed the services of skilled and experienced expert bookkepers and accountants, and directed them to make accurate examinations of the books, not only of the elevator companies of Duluth, but also of the state inspection and weighing departments, the railway companies handling grain to and from that point, and likewise to seek information from any other available and legitimate source.

Testimony was received tending to establish the charges so made. The committee regret that several of the witnesses who testified touching the charge in question were somewhat during the investigation on account of the testimony so given. While it is no doubt true that some may have been inaccurate as to portions of their testimony, and not a few of their statements were made with greater positiveness than either their truth or their knowledge would warrant, it is the opinion of the committee, nevertheless, that they ought to be wholly exonerated from any attempt to testify otherwise than in accordance with the facts as they understood them. The methods pursued by the elevator companies in disposing of the large volume of wheat in 1886 and subsequent years fully justified the witnesses in question in believing that such shipments were being made secretly and for the purpose of evading the attention of the state inspection service and the public; and were it not for other evidence subsequently discovered the committee feels that it would have been amply justified in finding the charge so made, in the main, true.

There is no question but what in 1886, and subsequent years, the two elevator companies named did ship in round numbers from their houses at night, without the knowledge of the employes of the said state departments, 250,000 bushels of wheat. After the fact of such shipment had been substantially established by the testimony of this class of witnesses, the said elevator companies admitted that a large volume of wheat had been secretly shipped from their houses without either inspection or weighing. Had this admission been obtained at the beginning of the investigation it would have rendered needless the testimony of a large number of witnesses who were called for the purpose of establishing that fact. The shipment having been thus admitted, the duty of the committee was thereby narrowed down to an inquiry, as to the sufficiency of the justification urged therefor on the part of said company.

THE EVIDENCE SUFFICIENTLY ESTABLISHES

the fact that a large amount of wheat became heated in the bins and almost totally ruined. The committee find that the matter was brought by the said companies to the attention of the railroad and warehouse commission and that after the mature deliberation of that body the elevator companies were given the authority to secretly dispose of the wheat; and it is fair to believe that the irregular shipments testified to by witnesses were none others than those made in pursuance of the permission thus obtained. The committee has no doubt that the action of the commission in directing the secret shipment of said injured grain was prompted by the highest considerations of public policy and amply warranted both by provisions of the law and the existing facts.

OVERAGE.

Evidence was introduced tending to prove that other wheat than the amount so injured was also shipped in an illicit manner from the said warehouses in Duluth. The committee finds that this amount of shipment did not occur in fact, and that the charge is based upon discrepancies in official records, which have been completely and satisfactorily explained.

It appeared from the testimony of certain witnesses that 49,337 bushels of wheat were shipped out by the warehouses in question in an irregular and unauthorized manner, but a careful examination of all the testimony clearly demonstrates that this charge is based upon an imperfect knowledge of the facts. The witnesses by whom it was sought to be established derived their information from sources which were both incomplete and unreliable. The record leaves no doubt in the minds of the committee that all of the last named quantity of wheat has been properly accounted for, and that no imputation of improper conduct attaches to the elevator companies in question.

IT WAS FURTHER CHARGED

that upwards of 45,000 bushels of wheat were shipped from the same houses as overage and without state inspection or weighing. The committee finds that this charge is well founded, for it is admitted by the elevator companies that such quantity of wheat was shipped by them in such manner. As a justification for such shipment the companies urge that when they first began to do business under the provisions of the grain and warehouse law they had in their houses some 45,000 bushels of wheat which had accumulated in transacting an extensive business prior to that date. It is the opinion of the committee that it was the duty of the elevator companies to have caused this wheat to have been inspected into their houses at the time they began to operate under state supervision. This course, however, was not pursued by the companies, owing, it is fair to assume, to a mistaken view of their duty under the law.

It was also made to appear by good and sufficient testimony that between the first day of August, 1885, and the first day of August, 1890, the said companies accumulated a further overage of 11,213 bushels in handling 56,000,000 bushels of wheat. This overage represents one-quarter of an ounce per bushel upon the amount handled by the company between the said dates. It further appears that the said companies brought the fact of the last named overage to the attention of the railroad and warehouse commission, and thereupon obtained from that body an order permitting the shipment upon due notice to the state inspection and weighing department at Duluth of such excess of wheat without cancellation of outstanding receipts. The committee feels that if prepared by the men employed in the house committee might be received as unquestioned evidence before it, that they would disclose the illicit shipment of a large quantity of grain from the public warehouses at Duluth which has not been explained away by testimony adduced before it for that purpose, but inasmuch as the committee subjected such schedules to a very severe test early in the session and thereby became convinced of the unreliability of such schedules as evidence from their very many proven inaccuracies, due to the inexperience of the persons by whom they were prepared, and the statement made by Mr. Erwin, the attorney for the Grain Growers' association, when the said schedules were under discussion, that he was perfectly willing that the old schedules should be stricken from the record, inasmuch as they had been proved unreliable and had been superseded by the more accurate schedules of the experts. The committee now find that on account of the apparent discrepancies the old schedules cannot properly and should not in justice be regarded as proof of any fact.

The committee deems it proper to say, touching the matter of the damaged wheat in question, that the said elevator companies incurred an expense of about $100,000 in providing for the warehouse receipts outstanding against the same.

STATE INSPECTION AND WEIGHING DEPARTMENTS.

The committee finds that the record, as a whole, does not reflect upon the integrity and efficiency of the state inspection and weighing department. With very rare exceptions the employes of the state in the two said departments, so far as the record discloses to the contrary, are gentlemen of high character and ability; and that in those instances where the integrity of any of these servants of the state has been drawn in question the testimony is too conflicting and inconclusive to warrant the committee in finding such persons guilty of bad faith in the performance of their duties.

It appears from the record of the committee that complaints have frequently arisen on account of what has been deemed improper weighing and docking of grain. The committee finds that after listening to testimony of witnesses of large experience and unquestioned veracity that such complaints, while at times well founded, failed to show any disposition on the part of inspectors and weighmen to impose upon or favor any interests whatever. There is evidence which tends to show that docking is at times excessive. As the amount of dockage to which a shipment of grain is to be subjected in a given case is largely dependent upon human judgment it will be always a matter of approximation, and the committee is unable to find that there has been an abuse of discretion to a serious extent in this regard. The witness, Charles Canning, a man of very large experience both as a producer and a commission merchant, testified that he had no fault to find with the state service in that regard. The attention of the committee was called to a number of instances of in weights of shipments made to public warehouses. The committee finds that such complaints are frequently well founded, but is not prepared to say their number is out of proportion to the volume of business transacted. Among the many causes to which shrinkage in weight in shipments of wheat may be attributed the following, no doubt, constitute the more important, as evidenced by reliable testimony:

First—Shipment without weighing by the local buyer.

Second—Weighing at the place of shipment with small or defective scales.

Third—Mistakes necessarily incidental to weighing on small scales, as where a draft is inadvertently repeated.

Fourth—Defective coopering of the cars, resulting in leakage at times to a marked degree.

Fifth—Abstractions by petty theft upon cars en route to and at destination.

Sixth—Change in atmospheric and climatic conditions between places of shipment and that of destination.

Seventh—Loss of moistuer by grain.

Eighth—Defect in scales at terminal points.

It is the opinion of the committee that very few instances of such shortage have arisen, which should not, if the committee were in possession of all the facts, be attributed to one or more of the above named causes.

SCREENINGS.

The committee finds that during the year 1889 a large quantity of wheat was shipped from the said public warehouses at Duluth under the name of screenings; the amount so shipped aggregated upward of 40,000 bushels. The wheat so shipped was, no doubt, the overage of 45,000 bushels to which attention has already been called. The committee is aware of no evidence tending to show that any other wheat than such overage was ever shipped in a clandestine manner from the said houses. The committee studiously endeavored to ascertain whether or not it was a common practice of the said companies to dispose of overage under the guise of screenings, and arrived at the result above indicated. Likewise it became a matter of interest to ascertain whether the said companies have been or now are, reaping excessive profits from the sale of screenings. This, however, is not established by the record. It is doubtless true, that until quite recently screenings were not a source of profit to elevator companies; the record disclosing that formerly they were either burned or destroyed otherwise by such companies.

THE GREAT COMBINE.

When the attention of the committee was first called to the existence of a combination or conspiracy designed to control the wheat markets of the state it was represented that certain testimony was producible tending to show that such markets are governed by prices arbitrarily established by some person or persons, associations or corporations, and evidenced by the telegrams and other communications sent to numerous correspondents by Mr. Frank H. Irons of Minneapolis.

It was not without great hesitation that the committee undertook to conduct an investigation in the line of such charge, in view of the clearly expressed terms of the statue from which its authority to act was derived. The subject, however, was finally deemed of so much gravity as to warrant an investigation as to the charge and it was therefore conducted with great thoroughness by the committee. Whatever inferences may be properly deducible from the record in support of the charge, the committee is of the opinion that there is of the existence in fact of any such combination or conspiracy, nor is there anything in the record touching this phase of the investigation militating against the good name of the said Irons. It is an admitted fact that Frank H. Irons has been for a period of about two years in the employ of a large number of elevator companies at Minneapolis, and that while so employed he did furnish to certain correspondents, both by telegram and through the mails, information touching the current prices of wheat. It does not appear, however, that he ever received any instructions from his said employers, or any of them, to furnish this information to any person whomsoever. It appears to have been the practice of the person who had previously been employed by such companies to advise local buyers, upon solicitation, as to the daily prices ruling as the principal wheat markets of the country; which said practice was observed and continued by Mr. Irons. There appears to have been no discrimination by him as to whom this information should be furnished; for, if he is to believed, it was sent to whomsoever made application therefor to him.

Instead of the prices furnished by Mr. Irons having been arbitrarily established by himself, or by any other person or persons, the committee find that they were in the main obtained from the chamber of commerce, Minneapolis. The prices so sent by Mr. Irons to his correspondents were based upon the reports of a committee established by the chamber of commerce in said city, whose duty it is to ascertain the closing price of the market.

Evidence was introduced with a view of showing that a combination existed between the elevator and railroad companies of the state for the sole purpose of maintaining a uniform system of prices, and it is doubtless true that some parts of such testimony unexplained tends to establish that fact. The strongest evidence of this character is no doubt a letter written by one Sommers, a clerk in the employ of the Great Northern Railroad company, over the signature of Mr. Shelby, the general traffic manager of said company; and certain other communications, which were likewise made a part of the record. Evidence was introduced on the part of such company tending to show that the Shelby letter was wholly unauthorized and written during the absence of Mr. Shelby, who promptly repudiated the same as soon as his attention had been called to its existence. Whatever may have been the real facts as to the influence of these corporations in maintaining what is termed list prices, it cannot be said in view of the records that the fact has been established by such weight of evidence as would warrant this committee in reporting as one of its findings. The record would seem to establish a concession by the Great Northern Railway company that its influence is at times exerted with a view to maintaining uniformity of prices at competitive points; and its action in this respect is claimed to be justified as a means of securing its legitimate proportion of business as a common carrier. It was also insisted on the part of said company that it frequently among buyers along its own lines at such competitive points so as to accord with the prices being paid along the lines of competitive roads, and thus to prevent the diversion of business properly tributary to its own line. Further than this the said company disclaim any attempt to interfere with prices obtaining at any of these markets. There is some evidence tending to show that the said company has attempted to coerce compliance with its requirements in the matter of prices by threats to embarrass the business of local buyers; but there is no evidence which shows or tends to show that in any of such instances the said company in fact embarrassed the local shipper in his business or evinced any hostility to him.

The committee finds that the producing interests of the state are at this time, as they have been for a long time in the past, the victims of grain manipulators throughout the country. Well devised and ably executed manipulations on the part of Chicago speculators have undoubtedly resulted in greatly depressing prices. This implies a financial loss to the farmers in this state of many millions. The committee will hereinafter suggest an appropriate recommendation to the legislature to meet this menacing evil. The producers of wheat should be untrammeled in placing their crops upon the markets of the world. They should stand on an equal footing of the most powerful in this regard. As they cannot in justice ask for other than reasonable facilities they should at all times enjoy nothing less.

THE RECOMMENDATIONS.

Some Suggestions to the Next State Legislature.

The committee feels called upon to recommend to the legislature the passage of appropriate legislation tending to greater protection to the producing and shipping interests of the state and the greater efficiency of the present grain and warehouse law. Its suggestions in this regard are made as follows:

All railroad companies of and doing business in this state should be required to construct and at all of their respective stations in the state from which there were shipped during any preceding year at least sixty car loads of grain; and as a recompense to the said companies for providing such service, and for doing and performing whatever else may be found necessary and incidental thereto, a reasonable charge should be allowed them. The committee believes that it would be no less than justice to such producing and shipping interests to require by law that common carriers be held responsible and accountable for the full amount of grain received by them on board their cars, which should in all instances be evidenced before the cars leave their respective stations by appropriate receipts; and in consideration of such responsibility and accountability and for loss by shrinkage and transportation or other cause, the said companies should be allowed to tax or assess one-half of 1 per cent of the amount received.

Second—Public warehouses should be required by law to ascertain at least once during each crop year the amount of wheat in their bins and the amount of which should be done under the direction of the railroad and warehouse commission at such time as the commission may deem most practicable and the results thereof should be made a matter of public record. Public warehouse men desiring to withdraw their license should be required to correctly ascertain the actual amount of grain on hand in their warehouses, and the amount of outstanding warehouse receipts and other obligations under the supervision and direction of the railroad and warehouse commission, before such withdrawal is granted, and a similar ascertainment of the condition of private warehouses should be required before a license to do business as public warehouse men is granted to such private warehouses as desire to co-operate under a license.

Third—In view of the great importance of the subject and the vast interests involved, the committee, without committing itself to any policy of legislation, earnestly recommend that the next legislature consider the advisability of passing a law providing at public expense, warehouses sufficiently large to afford storage without mixing the grain of different grades, for grain produced in this state, and for which service the state shall receive or may impose a moderate charge.

Fourth—Furthermore, the committee would recommend that the next legislature, either by memorial to congress or otherwise, take some steps to counteract the evil influence of wheat gambling at Chicago and other great grain centers. In view of the fact that the operators at Chicago are enabled to exalt or depress prices at pleasure they have become a constant menace to the greatest interests of the Northwest. Their influence in this respect is demonstrated by the remarkable fact that in the face of an unprecedented shortage in the old world, they have been able to hold wheat at abnormally low prices, and from which circumstance the farmers of this state have suffered an appalling loss. The influence of that market is at all times so great and uncertain that no man can with safety hold wheat for a single day. It may no doubt be accepted as a fact that for some time past has neither been determined by visible supply nor the estimated amount of grain in the country, but rather upon the quantity which wheat gamblers have felt disposed at any moment to precipitate upon the market. This being true, there is no basis in reason upon which a careful and prudent business man may purchase wheat for future delivery or for the purpose of legitimate trade. So long as this condition of affairs continues Minnesota's great staple crop will depend less in bringing wealth to her people upon the legitimate demands of consumption than upon the whims and caprices of grain gamblers in Chicago. This is a combination which beggars all others by far in its pernicious effects upon the public. We therefore recommend that the subject receive the earliest and most serious consideration of the next legislature.

Fifth—The committee would recommend, if practicable, that public elevators be required to construct scales and weigh grain upon the ground floor before the grain is elevated so that the unloading of cars may be under the supervision of state weighers.

The committee would also recommend that under no circumstances should grain or screenings be permitted to be shipped out of public warehouses without weighing and inspection.

ST. BRENDAN'S VOYAGE.

Among pre-Columbian discoverers of America the claims of the Norsemen—or, properly speaking Icelanders—who, by their low stature and features, are somewhat different from the characteristic Swedes and Norwegians—and of the Welshmen under Prince Madoc are fairly well known; but those in favor of an Irishman, St. Brendan, bishop of Clonfert, in Kerry, are not so familiar to us, although they are to the French.

According to eleven different Latin manuscripts in the National Library, Paris, one of which dates from the eleventh century, St. Brendan left Tralee Bay about A. D. 550 on a mission to the undiscovered country which he believed to exist beyond the Atlantic. The vessel he embarked in with his companions and provisions, including five pigs, was caught in a current, and after a voyage of many weeks he landed in a strange country, where he taught the natives the truths of christianity.

After seven years he returned to Ireland, and subsequently tried a second voyage to the same country, as he had promised to revisit it but was baffled by the wind and tide. He died in the order of sanctity in 578, aged ninety-four years. The curious thing is that when Cortez invaded Mexico he found the natives in possession of some of the doctrines of christianity, which they said had been taught them by a stranger clad in a long robe, who came to them from the Holy Island beyond the sea in a "boat with wings," many centuries before, and promised to return to them. The advent of Cortez was, in fact, hailed as a fulfillment of this tradition.

A GREAT COMBINE.

Minority Report in the Grain Investigation Case Submitted.

Mr. Moore Finds a Great Combine Organized to Lower Prices.

Committeeman Moon has submitted a minority report on the wheat investigation, it is a very voluminous report, containing over 20,000 words. A synopsis is given below:

Representative Moore first expresses his regrets for being unable to sign the majority report. In his opinion the duty of the committee was to report the evidence, something more than an expression of the committee's opinion on the serious topics covered by the investigation. It was the committee's duty, he believed, to report specific findings when fully justified by the evidence in order that they may be the basis for the recommendations for legislation. He could not sign the majority report, because it did not make specific findings, or such findings as he thought ought to be made in view of the testimony.

Mr. Moore then explains the reasons which moved him to coincide with most of the conclusions of the majority report. Speaking of the combine the minority report states:

THE COMBINE.

I cannot agree with the finding in the majority report that the evidence fails to disclose a combine which fixes the price to be paid for wheat throughout the regions of Minnesota and the Northwest. On the contrary I most conscientiously declare that from the evidence taken before this committee it cannot be successfully denied that such a combine does exist throughout the State of Minnesota and the Northwest, and that the direct effect of such combine is to deprive the producer of wheat of a large per cent of the profits of his industry,

UNDER THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND,

Duluth and Minneapolis should have three times the power, influence and every other element in fixing the price of Minnesota grain than Chicago and Milwaukee. What fiction prevents this natural application of the law of supply and demand to the market at Duluth and Minneapolis? If Chicago, with the wheat aggregated at Milwaukee, having but a little over 21,000,000 bushels to its credit can fix the price for 63,000,000 bushels gathered at Duluth and Minneapolis, it most certainly is done by some power other than law of supply and demand. To complete the logic of this reasoning let it be understood that the evidence in this case discloses the fact that the lake and rail rates from Duluth to the seaboard as reported in the testimony taken July 2, 1891, and March 8, 1892, make the freight from Duluth to the seaboard the nearly equal rate and freight from Chicago to the seaboard.

Bear in mind in this connection that the tonnage to and from Duluth is the equal of the tonnage to and from Chicago. The freight being practically the same from Duluth to the seaboard as it is from Chicago to the seaboard, the tonnage of the two ports being equal, what facility, what power, what influence is it which permits Chicago, with twenty-one millions to govern the price of sixty-three million bushels at Duluth? The situation of the Duluth and Minneapolis markets—their prostrate situation to the influence of an unnatural combine is doubly told and described when it is ascertained from the testimony and an admitted fact that the price of wheat at Duluth is permitted and forced to be the price at Chicago, less the freight rate from Duluth. I quote now the testimony of Mr. Amsden bearing upon this question, which is here introduced.

NOW WHAT POWER

or what influence could possibly make the difference of 6½ cents between Chicago and Duluth, unless some power foreign to the law of supply and demand arbitrarily fixes this difference? Why does not the 63,000,000 bushels of wheat at Duluth and Minneapolis control the 21,000,000 at Chicago and Milwaukee? It may be that my brethren on the committee do not understand the word combine to mean what I understand that word means. If my brethren on the committee understand that no combine has been discovered in the sense of the discovery of the two or three or more persons who sit down and arbitrarily fix the price of wheat at Duluth and Minneapolis, then I must agree with them that the evidence has not reached so far into the heart of this combine as to discover the names of these two or three or four individuals. But the word combine as used by me and as believed from the testimony to exist and control the price of wheat in Minnesota and the Northwest is rather that the price is unnaturally fixed and enforced by those interested in the gathering of the wheat crop of Minnesota and the Northwest upon other than the natural competitive and honorable principles. There can be no just reason why, with equal facilities and with equal freight rates, the 63,000,000 bushels at Duluth should not rather control the 21,000,000 tributary to Chicago than be controlled by it. What I mean by combine is that the united action of all the dealers in wheat in Minnesota and the Northwest is based upon the fiction that the price of wheat at Chicago necessarily governs the price at Duluth and Minneapolis. That the entire wheat business of Minnesota and the Northwest is carried on under this diction is logically admitted by every witness who has been before the committee. How is this accomplished?

THE TESTIMONY SHOWS

that there is located at Minneapolis a board called the chamber of commerce, and at Duluth a similar board called the board of trade. The testimony shows that these boards are composed, so far as the wheat dealing interests are concerned, of dealers in wheat, both elevator men and commission merchants, with a few bonanza farmers. It is conceded that these boards meet daily and transact between themselves the purchase and sale of wheat. It is also conceded that these sales are largely fictitious sales. It must be borne in mind that the wheat of Minnesota and the Northwest cannot escape these dealers who control the board of trade at Duluth and the chamber of commerce at Minneapolis. They own all the elevators along the different lines of railroad throughout this wheat region. They have all the facilities at the lake ports. It is impossible for any considerable amount of wheat to escape their handling. They necessarily have the sympathy, if not the co-operation of all the lines of transportation. It seems, from the testimony, that the dealers adopt, as the price to be paid for wheat each day, the closing price which they make on the preceding day. And how do they make the price? Do they fix the price in regard to the value of the wheat as calculated by the law of supply and demand, the freight rates and the facilities for export? If this were honestly done, the law of supply and demand, natural in its character, would necessarily govern the price paid for wheat. It matters not whether this price is fixed in open board or by secret committee. It is a price which they, the elevator men and dealers fix. It is the result of the combined interests of the dealers, the elevator and commission men. It makes no difference by what means it is ascertained, fixed or agreed upon. The testimony, as referred to hereinbefore, fully establishes the fact that every elevator man in the Northwest adopts the list price promulgated

BY THEIR COMMON AGENT,

Frank H. Irons at Minneapolis, and whether the elevators and dealers shall deny that Frank Irons fixes the price, and shall claim that such price is fixed by themselves, either in open board or by committee, or in whatsoever way they shall fix the same, and afterwards communicated to their general agent, Frank Irons. Why do they not fix the price in accordance with the law of supply and demand? In order to understand this question, it is necessary to refer to deductions and inferences which follow the testimony. It is the testimony of all persons examined on that subject that the price at Minneapolis is the price at Chicago less freight from Minneapolis to Chicago. This is the agreement of the dealers and elevator men. This is the combine.

That there is no power in the business circles, which, emanating through the boards of trade, the transportation lines or from whatever source engaged in the wheat traffic in Minnesota and the Northwest which confronts the despotism of this forced condition of the market, is the highest proof to my mind of the existence of that was ever known in the history of the world, and that this can exist only by virtue of an unnatural law is another proof of conspiracy; for, in the absence of a conspiracy, God's natural laws take their own course. No one who reads the testimony can fail to see that this condition is brought about by a conspiracy, surely reflected in the care which the elevator companies and all the dealers and even the lines of transportation have exercised to maintain the price list promulgated by Frank H. Irons.

Mr. Pillsbury's testimony on the relationship existing between the Minneapolis and Chicago markets is produced.

Some attention is here given to the disclosures of S. S. Scott in reference to the business of Frank H. Irons. Among other evidence corroborating the existence of the combine, he states, was the fact that the testimony of Mr. Amsden contains the statement that the elevator companies employ traveling agents to look after each other's business transactions. Another instance was the buying off of J. M. Stowe of Wadena.

IT IS UPON THIS TESTIMONY,

only a portion of which I have specially referred to, that I find myself forced to find from the testimony that a combine does exist to control the price of wheat in the State of Minnesota and the Northwest. It is true that the investigation into the history and autonomy, the detail, circumstances and economy of its working and maintenance has not been pursued to that extent which the impending danger and tyranny against the interests of the producer imperatively demanded.

The report enters into a thorough discussion of the matter of weighing wheat at Duluth, and its dockage and inspection, taking up the subject of the shipment of uninspected and bin-burnt wheat.

The report proceeds to aggregate the testimony in regard to these non-inspected shipments and finds a total of 825,540 bushels shipped out of Duluth elevators between 1886 and 889 uninspected.

After making allowance for bin-burnt wheat there remained 750,000 bushels.

THE QUESTION NOW NATURALLY ARISES

how was this 750,000 bushels of wheat accumulated? By what means did 750,000 bushels of wheat belonging to the producers of Minnesota and the Northwest come into the possession of the elevators of Duluth? That question cannot now be answered specifically under the testimony. Whether it came from short weights or whether it came from unswept cars, or whether it came from improper dockage or whether it came from not cleaning out dockage, or whether it came from abstractions made from grain being shipped Eastward, or whether it came from all of these causes or from causes entirely unknown and unsuggested the testimony does not now plainly and specifically disclose. It remains, therefore, as yet an unsolved proposition as to whether the inspection department and the weighing department of the State of Minnesota have not by short weights and large dockage permitted this vast accretion, or on the other hand whether this accretion and accumulation has not been made in violation of the inspection and weighing service by the predatory spirit of these elevator companies.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

From a consideration of the entire testimony, and taking the public elevator system in the condition that it now is, I am moved to recommend to your excellency and the legislature of the state that some means should be provided for weighing the grain by the railroad companies at the station where it is received, and the common carrier should be held responsible for delivery in equal weight.

In view of all the testimony, I further recommend what seems to me to be one of the most important measures for the proper protection of the wheat producers of this state, and that is that all persons in the State of Minnesota desiring to market wheat shall have equal facilities of railroads at Minnesota stations, and that a law be passed by which it is made the duty absolute of every railroad or railway corporation, association or company now or at any future time operating a railroad or railway as a common carrier within this state to provide and furnish at all stations established or that may be established on their roads sidetrack facilities for all persons or parties to erect and maintain private elevators or warehouses of a capacity of not less than 5,000 bushels each for the storage of grain while awaiting shipment on such line of railroad or railway, and to permit and allow such elevators and warehouses to be erected, maintained, controlled and operated by any person or corporation desiring to erect, maintain, control and operate the same for said persons, and further making it the duty absolute of said railroad companies and corporations to receive and carry over their line or lines of railway all grain offered for shipment to and from such private elevators and warehouses, and further making it the duty of said railroad campanies and corporations to receive directly into its cars and carry over its line or lines of railroad or railway all grain offered in car load lots at such stations without any previous storage and as offered.

I desire also to coincide with the recommendation made to your excellency by the majority report in as far as such recommendations are made or modified by the recommendation which I herein make.

It seems to me and I further recommend that under the present system each inspector should be charged with the duty of seeing that the

and that all grain in cars or other vehicles carried to a public elevator shall be actually received into the scales and weighed.

It seems proper also to recommend that where cars are inspected on the track by the inspector and are liable to remain for any time whatever before they are unloaded they should be resealed by the inspector making such inspection.

I also recommend to your excellency and the legislature that whatever system of grading and inspection shall hereafter seem fit to be established by law such system of grading and inspection shall never be permitted to affect the sale of wheat on its merits in the country, and in no case to permit it to be graded at the country station by a state official.

Before concluding this report I feel it my duty to call your excellency's attention to the fact that the labors of this investigating committee have been confined, so far as the illicit shipment of non-inspected grain is concerned, to only the elevator system at Duluth. It certainly is a suspicious circumstance that these shipments of non-inspected grain at Duluth have occurred while the general market of the State of Minnesota was in the hands of a combine, as I have endeavored to show is exhibited by the testimony.

THE TESTIMONY FURTHER SHOWS that the wheat growers of Minnesota are discriminated against in the matters of freight rates. The distance from St. Cloud to Duluth is nearly forty miles less than from Minneapolis to Duluth, by way of the Great Northern and Eastern Minnesota, a corporation owned and controlled by the Great Northern, as admitted by Mr. Grover. The rate on wheat from Minneapolis to Duluth is 4½ cents, while from St. Cloud to Duluth, forty miles less, the rate is 7½ cents per bushel. This being a single instance of the general discrimination against the wheat growers of Minnesota and the Northwest and in favor of the milling combine of Minneapolis.

And I wish to give it as my opinion that if the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners had observed the law in relation to the posting of damaged grain at Duluth and had held the Duluth elevator companies to a strict observance of that law there probably would never have been any cause for the expenditure of $9,000, which has been made by this committee. It seems to me that the was opened by the permission to disregard the provisions of the law in regard to the posting of grain, a permission which, it seems to me, was not contemplated by the board of commissioners, but which the elevator companies have made the excuse for their clandestine and secret shipment of non-inspected wheat.

The testimony of Mr. Pillsbury before the joint committee is interesting in that it attempts to lay the entire blame of the depressed condition of the Minnesota wheat market at the door of the wheat pit gamblers on the board of trade in the city of Chicago. I am not disposed to agree with Mr. Pillsbury in this opinion and this opinion I form in view of the testimony taken before this committee. I believe that the present depressed condition of the market in Minnesota is due more which in my opinion exists between the elevator systems and the railroads of Minnesota and the Northwest than to the reflected influence of either the Chicago or New York markets.

What I mean by the erection of elevators at Duluth is simply the erection of elevators by the state, carried on in such manner that the interests of the individual producer of wheat in Minnesota and the Northwest shall be forever maintained as separate individual rights, and not massed into one general aggregate, to be thereby controlled by the financial circles and interests of this combine.

I do not mean that the state shall erect and maintain elevators at the expense of the state generally, but that it shall erect elevators upon such a system or plan of providing for the payment of such erection and maintenance as can be charged with the intervention of a sinking fund to the persons interested in the storage and marketing of grain. It is evident to me, and it seems to be admitted by the greatest financiers that have been brought before the committee, that something must be done, and I can conceive of no agency but the state itself adequate to protect now the producer of wheat in Minnesota and the Northwest from the influence of this combine. I have the honor to, be, very respectfully

LOOKS LIKE MURDER.

A Wealthy Farmer Burned to Death—An Admirer of His Wife Arrested.

SEATTLE, Wash., April 18.—William Radloff, a German, twenty-seven years old, living in this city, was found burned to death yesterday, and there is evidence that murder was committed in order to secure his life insurance of $55,000. He came to this country eight years ago. Evidently his family is wealthy, for he received large remittances every three months, and by fortunate real estate speculations he made a fortune. Three years ago he was married, and since resided on a farm four miles from Seattle. His only hired man was Louis Kostrusch, who lived with the family, and who lately has been very attentive to the wife. A week or two since she went with her baby to visit her parents near Tacoma, and since then Radloff and Kostrusch have been keeping house alone. Yesterday morning neighbors found the building burned to the ground and among the cinders the charred remains of Radloff. Near by was an ax head with the handle burned out, but no trace of Radloff's rifle and watch could be found. Suspicion pointed to Kostrusch, who was arrested here to-day. The man at first denied having seen his employer since Tuesday, but afterward admitted having talked with him Friday. On Kostrusch's person were found a love letter from Mrs. Radloff and a money order drawn for her by her husband. The agents of the life insurance companies are taking an active interest in the case because within two months Radloff took out insurance for $55,000 in several companies. When he was examined he was passed as a first-class risk in every respect. The money will go to his wife if paid.

A LOVER'S DESPERATE PLAY

He Burns the Contents of a Letter Box to Spite a Rival.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 18.—The government authorities are investigating a peculiar case of destroying letters, and, though they withhold the names of the parties for the present, they promise sensational developments in a few days. A South side young lady had two suitors, and one of them demanded that she decide between him and his rival and mail her answer on Friday last, saying that he would leave for the West on Saturday unless she answered favorably. By some means his rival learned of the demand and also that the lady would return a favorable answer. He kept a close watch upon the mail box which was near her residence, and on Friday saw her place her answer in the box. He then saturated some paper with coal oil and stuffed it into the box, after which he dropped in a lighted match. When the carrier opened the box he found it full of charred letters. The next day the lover who had been accepted, but who failed to get the letter, left for the West, and his whereabouts are unknown. Investigation led to the foregoing developments, and the authorities will make an arrest in the case in a few days.

TWO BAD BOYS.

Two Menasha, Wis., Youths Terrorize an Entire Neighborhood.

MENASHA, Wis., April 18.—A quantity of beer and about $50 worth of revenue stamps were stolen from W. Winz's brewery in this city a short time ago and the theft has been traced to Mike Scanlon and Jack Welch. The kegs were found on the premises of Dennis Hibbles, a negro, the next morning, and he said those young men brought them there, but he did not know they were stolen. Mike Scanlon and Jack Welch are about twenty-two years of age, and there are cases pending against them for larceny, highway robbery and theft, besides a number of minor charges which cannot be proven. They have both served terms in the state prison and are now at liberty on bail furnished by their relatives. They live in a swamp near the city and cause terror to the adjoining community. The policemen are afraid to search them out, and the people are afraid they will burn their buildings.

University Extension Work.

BALTIMORE, April 18.—The faculty of the University of Wisconsin has unanimously recommended to the board of regents that L. P. Powell, librarian of the department of history and politics at the Johns Hopkins university, and F. W. Speers, formerly professor of history and economics at the University of South Dakota, but now graduate student at the Johns Hopkins university, be engaged as university extension lecturers for the coming academic year in history and economics, respectively. The gentlemen are experienced lecturers, and the professors of the Johns Hopkins university say that they will give a decided impetus to the work. The University of Wisconsin is the first American institution to follow the example of Oxford and Cambridge in the matter of university extension. The University of Chicago contemplates a similar advance.

Accused of Misappropriation.

MOORHEAD, Minn., Special, April 18.—Lee Grahler, who has been running the Union Meat market since January last during the absence on account of sickness of the proprietor, Peter Czizek, left Friday morning for St. Cloud. After he had gone it was discovered that $117 was missing, and Chief of Police Sullivan telegraphed to St. Cloud when Grahler was arrested. He was brought to Moorhead last night. The complaint on which Grahler is arrested charges him with misappropriating $117. Mr. Grahler had previously borne a good character.

A Mutiny Quelled.

ATLANTA, Ga., April 18.—A dispatch from the principal keeper of the penitentiary to Gov. Northern states that the trouble with the convicts in Durham county, near Chickamauga, has been quelled. The convicts there mutined and the principal keeper was ordered to the scene. The leaders of the uprising were punished and all is quiet.

Portland Shaken.

PORTLAND, Or., April 18.—At 2:50 o'clock this afternoon two heavy shocks of earthquake were felt in Portland and points near by. The vibrations were from west to east, and lasted about ten seconds in each case. Many persons became frightened when buildings began to tremble and rushed into the street. No damage was done.

Died at Lake Park.

LAKE PARK, Minn., Special, April 18.—John H. H. Canfield, son of Hon. Thomas H. Canfield, one of the early directors of the Northern Pacific railroad, died at this place to-day, after an illness of forty hours, of spinal cerebral menginitis.

Fatal Outcome of Labor Trouble.

ALLENTOWN, Pa., April 18.—During a fight between striking employes of the Catasqua Manufacturing company and men filling their places, James Hayden was kicked and beaten to death and his companions roughly handled.

John McCarthy was arrested at midnight for murdering Hayden. William Elliott was arrested as an accomplice. McCarthy and Elliot had a fight with William King about the strike, in which King was badly beaten and kicked, and left lying in the street unconscious. They next assaulted Hayden, kicking him on the left temple and rupturing a blood vessel in the brain, causing instant death.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

The works of the Scottford Novelty company at Kenosha, Wis., burned recently. Loss, $60,000; insured for $30,000.

The Passiac Chemical works at Newark, N. J., was destroyed by fire to the extent of $50,000. Owing to the heavy fumes of the chemical the firemen had difficulty in fighting the fire. About twenty firemen were overcome by the fumes.

Since the recent big fire at New Orleans, when five cotton presses and five squares of the residence part of the city was burned, it was said that it was the work of incendiaries. An investigation instituted by the insurance companies has developed that the fire caught from the sparks from a passing switch engine. The loss is now placed at $1,500,000 on the cotton, and that in the residence part of the city at $75,000.

Two couples from the country came to Louisville, recently and were married. In the evening they went to the Louisville hotel and took adjoining rooms. Nothing was heard from them until the morning, when a bellboy smelled gas and breaking in the door found two gas jets in one room on full force and one in the other and all four unconscious. They were revived with difficulty, and one of them, a lady, is not yet out of danger.

The residence of James Hawley at Midway, W. Va., caught on fire and was burned. Mr. Hawley, his wife and sister-in-law, who were in the top story, escaped through a window. Joseph Linton, aged 10 years, an adopted son of Hawley, was sleeping in the attic and was fatally burned. Hawley when he realized Linton was being burned, became suddenly insane, and attempted in several ways to kill himself, but was prevented. The fire was of incendiary origin.

FIGHT LATER ON.

Bloodshed Seems to Be in Sight on the Sisseton Reservation.

The New Town Named in Honor of a Plucky Young Woman.

Brown's Valley, Minn., Special, April 18.—Apparently everything is quiet on the Sisseton reservation to-night, but there is every evidence that serious trouble is brewing, though the crisis may not be reached for several days. To-night 150 men who had made filings at Watertown, passed through this village, entered the reservation and went on the northwestern part of the reserve, where the good lands and the new townsite are located. I talked to several of them, and every one stated decidedly that he meant to have land. They were among the first of those to file, and say they all filed in less than two hours. This is remarkably short time, and many of the squatters were of course unable to reach claims twenty and twenty-five miles away in that time.

The authorities claim that the situation now looks very serious, but of course it is largely a matter of conjecture. These filers say they are going to have some of that land. They cannot get it without a fight. Four or five days will determine the case. For a novel reason the new town has had its name changed from Sisseton to Effington. After consultation the Sisseton Land company and the people directly around the town site unanimously decided to name the place after Miss Effie Stauffer, the school mistress who was

THE FIRST ONE TO REACH IT.

She made the journey alone from Brown's Valley to the northern boundary, riding horseback forty-five miles on April 14 and sleeping that night in a tent. On the morning of April 15 she rode alone twenty-four miles, following the boundary until she met the crowd. She led all the men to the new town, and they complimented her in the manner described. The town is surrounded by some of the best land on the reservation, and settlers are coming to it from miles around. I rode over it for several miles, and was surprised to find so large a tract with so little land not in every way desirable. Already there have been started a general store, lumber yard, hardware store, blacksmith shop, grocery, millinery establishment and a hotel.

Things are quiet in Brown's Valley. Many more people returned here to-day footsore and weary without claims or anything else. Many others passed through on their way to Wilmot. They have located claims and got here to file. The boom is over and there is little more to tell unless fighting begins. Many good claims were secured to-day. There are still many vacant ones. Large prairie fires are raging to-night and a stiff east wind prevails.

REAL ENFORCEMENT.

Sioux City Enjoys a Taste of the Genuine Article.

Sioux City, Iowa, Special, April 18.—For the first time in the history of Sioux City business was suspended to-day. The Sunday Enforcement league closed places of business, forced most of the transit lines to suspend operations and even closed some of the restaurants. All stores, billiard rooms, etc., are closed, and it is almost impossible to buy a cigar. The Enforcement league is composed of saloon men and associated classes who have been driven out of business by the enforcement of the prohibitory law. They say they will enforce all laws of the state alike and give the people a taste of real enforcement. Iowa has some blue laws that have long been forgotten, but they are being resuscitated. All labor on Sunday is a misdemeanor, the limit of punishment being $5 fine and imprisonment until paid.

Informations for employes and officers of all street car lines were sworn out this morning. The men were arrested and officers gave bonds and sent them back to work, when they would be rearrested. Some of the lines by this means were kept in operation most of the day. The Sioux City Street Railway company, with twenty-five miles of line and the most important system in town, has not turned a car since noon. The cable line men have been arrested several times, but the justices do not dare jail them for fear of public sentiment. The suburban train on the Sioux City & Northern, running to Leeds, was stopped for a time, but the railroad had plenty of men at hand and the effort was discontinued. The streets were crowded all day with people anxious to watch proceedings. President Pierce, of the cable company, was applauded for running a grip car when his last man was arrested. Officials of other lines helped the men operate the cars. The league is said to have the sympathy and support of many leading people and announces that it will follow up the work vigorously and compel the closing of all business on Sunday and make it permanent. Serious trouble is feared before the end is reached.

Curious Divorce Case.

Huron, S. D., Special, April 18.—A somewhat peculiar divorce case has been commenced in the circuit court here. In November last Mrs. Lillian McDonald obtained a decree of divorce, with $200 alimony, from her husband, Peter McDonald, on the ground of drunkenness and cruelty. McDonald appeared at the trial held in open court by his attorney. The hearing was had in Eau Claire, Wis., the court giving the custody of an infant child—a girl—to Mrs. McDonald. Now the husband makes application for divorce in the courts here from his wife, charging her with deserting him. He asks that the custody of the child be transferred to him, and that property in this city which is in Mrs. McDonald's name be also transferred to him. Both parties lived here previous to and for a number of years following their marriage and the property in question is quite valuable. Mr. McDonald is now a resident of Watertown and Mrs. McDonald makes her home with relatives in Minneapolis.

An Insane Mother's Awful Deed.

Portland, Me., April 18.—This afternoon a shocking affair took place on Emerson street. Mrs. James Robertson cut the throat of her three-weeks-old baby and then tried to kill herself. The husband of the woman was in an upper room at the time. He heard the insane shrieks of the woman from his window, ran down stairs and found her brandishing a razor over her head. On her lap lay the dead baby, its throat cut from ear to ear. As soon as the woman saw her husband she tried to cut her own throat, hacking at it several times. Mr. Robertson sprang to the side of his wife, caught her arm and shouted for help. Two policemen ran in and secured the maniac.

A MICHIGAN MURDER.

The Slayer Had Been Found Under a Young Lady's Bed.

Marine City, Mich., April 18.—Word has reached here that a murder was committed at the farm of William Stephenson, four miles west of here Saturday evening. Mr. Stephenson employs several hands, among whom were Richard Cook and William Colby. Last evening after supper Colby was missing, and was subsequently found hiding beneath the bed of Stephenson's adopted daughter, about twenty years of age, with his shoes and stockings off. When discovered there Colby came from the room, but offered no explanation of his actions. Later Cook and Colby went to work in the barn. While there Cook asked Colby what he was doing under Miss Stephenson's bed, and accused him of hiding there for a felonious purpose. This led to a quarrel, which resulted in Cook's death. Colby declares that he killed Cook in self-defense, the latter having attacked him with a pitchfork. His story is not credited.

Good Work in Montreal.

Montreal, April 18.—Fathers Doyle, Smith, Otis and Hecklinger, of the Paulist fathers of New York, concluded the monster mission at St. Patrick's church to-night. The mission has been one of the most striking ever held in Montreal. During its progress over 50,000 people signed the total abstinence pledge and fifty-six converts were received into the church. The fathers strongly denounced the Montreal civic authorities for their apathy in enforcing liquor laws. The denunciation was made in the presence of Mayor McShane and a number of other prominent city officials, and produced a great sensation. The effect was so great that Mayor McShane and other officials were led to sign the pledge. A large sum of money was collected during the mission to assist in educating young Catholic missionaries at the Catholic university in Washington. Fathers Doyle and Smith leave at once for Connecticut to commence a mission there.

A Tammanyite's Exit.

New York, April 18.—The body of Fred Pickard, a New York hatter and prominent member of Tammany Hall, was found on the track of the railroad in Jersey City Saturday evening. Seevral trains had passed over the body and it was severely mangled. He attemped his life by shooting but failed in the attempt. He went to the tunnel, stood in front of a train and was killed. He left a note to his wife saying he going to kill himself and added: "May God curse Newman and Brown." It was learned that Newman was a friend of the family and Brown was a policeman. Both these men were surprised when they heard of the note and said they were always on the best terms with the dead man.

Mrs. Harrison Mending.

Washington, April 18.—Mrs. Harrison, whose illness seemed to have taken a turn for the worse on Saturday, was generally improved to-day, and with care, the doctor says, will be able to leave her room in a few days. It is probable that as soon as the movement is deemed advisable Mrs. Harrison will go away to recuperate, as her illness has left her very weak. Mrs. McKee will accompany her.

Fatalities in Sequence.

Monticello, Ill., April 18.—A northbound Wabash freight train crashed into an Illinois Central freight train at the crossing in this city last night. Taylor Conrod and James Marvin were standing at the crossing waiting for the train to pass. They were caught in the wreck, Conrod being instantly killed. Marvin's arm was torn out. While the wrecking crew were clearing away the debris a daylight this morning a truck slipped from the derrick and fell on a gang of workmen. William Haines of Decatur was crushed to death, and William Marvin, a section hand, was probably fatally hurt.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

Friday, April 8.

SENATE.

The senate today passed the bill appropriating $100,000 for entertaining the national encampment of the G. A. R.

The senate today made public the correspondence transmitted by the president touching the declination of the Chinese government to receive Hon. H. W. Blair as United States minister.

Several postmasters were confirmed today.

HOUSE.

In committee of the whole today the house resumed consideration of the cotton bagging bill. After considerable debate the committee won and reported the bill to the house.

Interest in the tariff discussion is steadily on the decline and the attendance in the house was small.

Representative Dickerson, of Kentucky, reported to the house from the banking and currency committee a bill to require the redemption of bank notes which may have been lost by or stolen from any national bank and put in circulation before being signed by the officers of the bank or where they were issued upon the forged signatures of such officers.

Saturday, April 9.

SENATE.

No business of importance was transacted in the senate to-day.

HOUSE.

The house to-day finished the consideration of the cotton tie bill, Dr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania taking the floor in opposition to the measure. Mr. Turner followed Mr. Dalzell, and at the close of his remarks the bill was passed by a vote of 167 to 46.

In the lighthouse bill reported by the committee on commerce, Bayfield gets a pier light and bell. Superior bay a lighthouse and Grand Portage a light and fog whistle.

The house to-day passed a joint resolution authorizing the State of Wisconsin to place in the statuary hall of the capital a statue of Pere Marquette.

The house committee on Indian affairs has non-concurred in the senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill.

Monday, April 11.

SENATE.

In the senote today Mr. Morgan offered a resolution requesting the president to communicate to the senate the items of taxation upon imports from the United States imposed by the laws of Hayti, upon which the president has based his findings and proclamation that the tariff laws of Hayti are reciprocally unjust to the United States.

In the senate Mr. Stewart offered a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information connected with the purchase and coinage of silver.

A characteristic memorial was received by the senate from ex-Senator Blair, asking an investigation of his rejection as minister to China, and was conferred to the committee on foreign relations.

HOUSE.

The house devoted the day to District of Columbia bills.

Tuesday, April 12.

SENATE.

After routine business, Mr. Stewart's resolution in regard to the purchase of silver dollars was taken up and amended by inserting the words "and a detailed statement of the amount purchased each day." Mr. Stewart addressed the senate on the subject after which it went over till tomorrow.

Mr. Palmer's resolution for the election of United States senators by the people was taken up and considerable debate ensued after which the resolution was referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

The senate having passed a number of bills on the calendar adjourned.

HOUSE.

The house passed an urgent deficiency bill appropriating $1,012,663 for various deficiencies in the government service.

Mr. Cooper of Indiana made a personal explanation in regard to the charge that he had used his official position to influence the pension.

Nothing of special interest outside of this transpired in the house today.

Wednesday, April 13.

SENATE.

Mr. Dolph from the committee on foreign relations reported a substitute for the Chinese exclusion bill recently referred to that committee. It provides that all laws in force now on that subject be extended 10 years.

The following were the most important bills passed:

To recognize the artillery and infantry of the army and to increase its efficiency.

Authorizing the secretary of war to cause an exploration and survey to be made of the interior of the territory of Alaska.

To amend the railroad land forfeiture acts so as to permit actual settlers to purchase the lands within three years after forfeiture.

For the relief of purchasers of timber lands and stone lands under the act of June, 3, 1878.

To provide for fixing a uniform standard classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, barley and rye.

To pay the Yankton Sioux Indians who served as scouts under Gen. Sully in 1864.

HOUSE.

In the house a bill was introduced for to create a third district of Kansas judicial purposes and to fix up the time for holding court therein.

After passing a bill granting right of way through the Indian Territory to the Gainesville, Oklahoma & Gulf Railroad Company, the house went into committee of the whole on the naval appropriation bill.

Thursday, April, 14.

SENATE.

The senate passed a bill extending the privilege of the free delivery of mails to cities and towns with a population of not less than 5.000, and where the postoffice gross receipts for the previous year amounted to $5,000.

The senate passed a bill appropriating $75,000 for the foundation and pedestal for a bronze statue of Christopher Columbus, at the west entrance of the Capitol grounds on Pennsylvania avenue where the Peace monument now stands.

The senate passed a bill authorizing the Quincy pontoon Bridge company to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi river at Quincy, Ill.

HOUSE.

These bills were reported to the house Authorizing the secretary of the treasury to obtain plans and specifications and local supervision for public buildings by the system of competition among private architects; to indemnify settlers on the Des Moines river lands.

The house today in committee of the whole considered the naval appropriation bill, the pending amendment being that of Mr. Boutelle, of Maine, which provides for two sea going coast line battle ships of 10,000 tons displacement at $4,000,000 each, 10 torpedo boats at $120,000 each, and authorizing the secretary of the navy to re-advertise for proposals for one swift torpedo cruiser of 7,500 tons, heretofore authorized and limiting cost of said cruiser to $2,120,000, exclusive of armament. Mr. Boutelle spoke in favor of the amendment.

Polk County Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, April 21, 1892.

A CHANGE.

"Change is written on the tide,
On the forest's leafy pride."

This seems to be the natural order of things, and so it transpires that, after having presided over the destiny of the JOURNAL for fifteen years, with the beginning of Volume 16 I have associated with me William A. Hammond of Bismarck, N. D., who for several years has been connected with the Tribune of that city, and who brings to us a ripe experience in the newspaper work. This change has not been made without serious consideration and the sure conviction that it would be for the benefit of the patrons of the JOURNAL as well, as Mr. Hammond comes to us with the recommendation of several of the leading men of North Dakota as a capable and reliable man, experienced in the newspaper business and thoroughly familiar with all branches of the printer's trade. We have no promises to make except that we shall do our best to make the JOURNAL in the future, as it has been in the past, a representative of the best interests of Polk county and Crookston, and we cordially invite everybody to call and make the acquaintance of the new firm of Cooke & Hammond.

H. E. COOKE.

THE JOURNAL.

Under the new management the size of the JOURNAL will be changed to a six-column quarto, all printed at home, and filled with city, county and state news, and a condensation of the important events of the country and the doings of congress. The politics of the paper will continue to be republican, but will be controlled by no cliques or factions, and will work for the welfare of the party as a whole. The JOURNAL will always be found working for the upbuilding of Crookston and Polk County, and will zealously strive to guard the best interests of the people. It will still be ever ready to champion the cause of the oppressed, and to this end any person having a grievance of sufficient public interest to warrant its ventilation through the press, can always reach the ear of the people through the JOURNAL. In short, it will be the people's paper—fearless, outspoken and aggressive.

The JOURNAL'S already large circulation will be increased, and the business man will find it unequalled as an advertising medium. The facilities which have been added in the way of presses, engine, type and competent workmen, make the JOURNAL'S job printing department second to none in northern Minnesota. For the present the JOURNAL will occupy its old quarters, corner Main and Fletcher streets.

THE St. Paul daily papers are booming Col. J. P. Wright for mayor of St. Paul. Now they are beginning to talk sense. After looking about among the antiquated fossils for some time in the effort to find suitable timber, and finding it not, they have at last appreciated the fact that they cannot find it there, and have turned their attention to the young business men of the city and have lighted upon the very best one in that class for the position. Col. Wright, if he would accept, would make a most excellent mayor. He is a thorough business man, enterprising and extremely popular among the young business men of that city. He is a member of the firm of Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, the leading paper house of the state, and much of the success of that house is due to his untiring efforts in its behalf. THE JOURNAL hopes that the Col. will accept the nomination and is confident that he can be easily elected.

Since the above was in type the genial Col. has been nominated by the independent party and it looks as though he would be endorsed by the Republicans, which would insure his triumphant election without a shadow of doubt.

THE Little Falls Daily Transcript is a new daily that comes to our table. Its make-up and general appearance indicates that Fuller knows as well how to run a good daily as a weekly. The JOURNAL wishes the Daily Transcript success.

E. C. CARRUTH,
City Clerk.

The Mayor's Message.

To the Honorable City Council of the City of Crookston:

GENTLEMEN,—In accordance with the usual custom, I have the honor herewith to submit for your consideration some suggestions and recommendations that are presented in a brief inspection of the affairs of our city as they exist at the present time.

The past year has been one of unusual prosperity and growth for Crookston. All lines of business and all classes of our citizens have shared in the successful progress we have made. The handsome new brick business blocks that have been erected to take the place of the old wooden structures; the establishment of a permanent sewerage system which makes the erection of such buildings possible, and the improvements that have been made upon our streets have contributed largely to beautifying our city and at the same time furnished profitable employment to our laboring classes.

To those who have in charge the administration of our city government a large measure of credit is due for this prosperous condition of affairs—to the retiring Mayor for his wise appointments and liberal progressive policy and to the gentlemen of the council for the harmony which has prevailed in their deliberations, the promptness and energy with which they have transacted the public business, and the economy and watchfulness displayed in handling the city's finances.

For the new municipal year upon which we are now entering the prospects are equally bright. The number and extent of the improvements contemplated for this year are the greatest in the history of the city. Contracts have already been awarded for the erection of several new brick blocks, that will compare favorably with any heretofore built; the substantial improvements to be made upon the dam and water works will not only involve the expenditure of considerable money for labor, where the work is being done, but when completed will furnish a large amount of extra power which may be use for manufacturing purposes, besides making our water and light service more efficient and ensuring better protection against fires. The change in the policy of the Great Northern Railway towards this city is evidenced by the building of the new bridge and the improvements about to be started in its yards is also a matter of congratulation. Every effort should be made to encourage a more friendly feeling between the company and the city. The misunderstanding that has existed for some years past has worked to the injury of both. The members of the council as individuals, as well as in their official capacity, can do much towards encouraging these and all other improvements that would promote the city's welfare. Under no circumstances should personal interests or prejudice be allowed to influence your action upon any public matter. The best interests of the whole city should be considered in all your actions. Let not your deliberations be disturbed by petty quarrels and bickerings, but with harmonious, united and energetic purpose, push forward a line of policy characterized by honesty, good juugment and economy; remembering always that the knowledge of a duty well performed is a greater reward than any pecuniary gain that might result from the subservance of personal ends.

It is not my purpose at the present time to enter extensively into a discussion of the policy that should be pursued during the ensuing year. There are some questions, however, that might be lightly touched upon.

The first and most important matter to which I would call your attention is the present defective condition of the city charter and ordinances. I would recommend that they receive your immediate attention to the end that the charter which is the foundation of our city government, and, the ordinances—the structure built upon that foundation—may be made complete and durable, and enforcable as law. In this connection I would advise that you appoint a competent committee to prepare the necessary amendments to the charter in order that the work may be thoroughly completed in time for submission at the next session of the State Legislature.

The Fire Department will undoubtedly come in for a share of your attention during the present year and I heartily commend it to your good graces. Any body of men who work as faithfully for the protection of the lives and property of our people as do those who make up the Volunteer Fire Department of our city are entitled to every encouragement and support.

The cleanliness of our city should be closely looked after. The importance of an efficient board of health cannot be over estimated, and it should receive the cordial support of the Council in all its efforts toward improving the sanitary condition of the city.

Our water supply under the existing circumstances is, I unhesitatingly pronounce, unfit for domestic use. The intake pipe is situated below the city, and much of the offal and refuse matter drained into the river is again pumped into the water mains, making the water impure and its consumption dangerous to public health. The idea has been suggested that the intake pipe be carried to some convenient point above the natural drainage of the city, and I submit it for your consideration.

Our sewer system so far as perfected has been found of great value in purifying the city and draining the streets, as well as a convenience in many other directions. I would recommend a judicious extension of the system as fast as the finances will permit.

The matter of procuring proper ground for the establishment and maintenance of a public park, under the control of the city government, meets with my hearty approval, and I would respectfully urge upon the council the advisability of taking prompt action looking to that end.

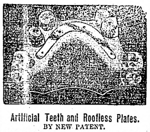
In the purchase of merchandise on the city account too much caution cannot be used; a proper purchasing agent should be appointed, who should be held strictly responsible for all purchases and prices, and no bills should be allowed by your finance committee unless accompanied by the original order of said agent.

I would commend to your favor the matter of the Grand Army encampment to be held here on the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th of July, and recommend that you take such action as may be necessary to make the celebration a success.

In conclusion, permit me to say that you shall have my hearty good will and co-operation in your efforts for the material advancement and well-being of those interests which you have been elected to subserve, and I would ask in return that you accord me like assistance and advice in the performance of my duties, to the end that our communications may always be of the most pleasant nature and that our efforts for the good of our fellow citizens may be crowned with success. I have the honor to be, Your obedient servant,

WM. ANGLIM.

DENTISTRY



Artificial Teeth and Roofless Plates.

BY NEW PATENT.

Don't Have Teeth Extracted if Two Teeth or Roots Remain in Proper Position in Either Jaw. An Entire Set of Teeth can be Attached to them.

The teeth never tip or drop down while eating, talking or laughing, the gold clasps admitting of tightening or loosening in all cases.

Polk County Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

Crookston, April 21, 1892.

Miss Maud Sargent is teaching a term of school in Fanny township.

Health officer Crane of Grand Forks is urging the citizens of that city to unite with the county and build a hospital.

Messrs. John and Eli Steenerson expect to handle the Plano harvester this summer in connection with a large line of farm machinery.

The citizens of Fertile are agitating the building of a town hall. According to the Journal of that place public sentiment is overwhelmingly in favor of it.

Spring has come at last. The change took place last Thursday, when the sun came out bright and warm and drove the clouds away. Spring work is well under way, and by the last of this week seeding will be general throughout this section.

W. C. Wheeler, of the LeRoy Independent was up to Thief River Falls last week with the object of putting in a newspaper in that growing young town, but the people had recognized the sterling qualities and genuine ability of Mr. P. S. Ware, and Mr. Wheeler wasn't in it.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church gave a supper in the Reckitt block last Thursday evening which was well patronized and much enjoyed by those present. Each lady who attended was presented with a neat souvenir card, and the gentlemen were presented with a due bill for the price of their supper over $60 was realized, which will be taken care of by the Ladies' Aid society for the benefit of the church.

W. F. Stone, special agent for the Northwestern Life Association of Minneapoliy—which by-the-way is one of the best of life companies—informs THE JOURNAL that he will probably make crookston his headquarters hereafter and remove his family from Hamline where he has been located. Mr. Stone was for many years in the mining business in Montana, and now suffers from paralyses as a result of constant inhalation of the deadly sulphur smoke from the smelters.

P. S. Ware, who has been connected with the Times of this city for about a year, has decided to form a partnership with Editor Mussey of the Thief River Falls Press, and will put in a well-equipped office and publish a paper that the people of Thief River Falls will be proud of—a paper that will be a credit to the town and worthy of liberal support. Mr. Mussey is one of the old pioneers of that section, and popular with the people. Mr. Ware is a wide-awake newspaper man of considerable ability, a thorough business man and a good printer. Even though he didn't possess these qualities, his genial disposition and accommodating manner would insure his success in any business. The people of Thief River Falls are to be congratulated.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Twelve and 50-100 dollars ($12.50), which became due on the first day of December, 1890, and in the payment of a like and final sum, which became due on the first day of December, 1891, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John H. Lien and Ragnhild Lien, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1888, which mortgage, together with a power of sale contained therein was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of November A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., in Book 40 of mortgages, on pages 497, 498, and 499; which said sums with interest thereon respectively at ten per cent. per annum from the first day of December, 1890, and the 1st day of December, 1891, are the whole sum secured by said mortgage and remaining unpaid.

John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured; and the amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice is twenty-seven dollars ($27.00); and no action or proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number twenty-two (22) in Township one hundred and forty-eight (148) north, of Range number forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one Hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock of the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

VOL. XVI. CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1892. NO. 2.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Of the City of Crookston, for the year ending April 1st, 1892.

To the Honorable the City Council of the City of Crookston:

GENTLEMEN: I beg to submit my report for the year ending April 1st, 1892, which I have deferred until now for the reason that the March settlement with the County Treasurer is not yet completed, and was expected to be at this date. I have only received so far $5,000.00 on account of same, and have distributed this amount to the different funds, but there is still to be received from that source over $4,000.00 which, when distributed, would leave a surplus in the General Fund, which now appears overdrawn. As soon as I obtain a full settlement I will submit a supplementary report, showing the exact condition of the city finances.

Very Respectfully,
L. C. COUVRETTE,
City Treasurer.

MELVIN ITEMS.

MELVIN, April 16, 1892.

Mud, mud! Well, yes, but it is drying up some now.

A new arrival at the residence of E. S. Stowe—a girl. This makes two boys and two girls for Ed. He says he thinks two pairs beat three of a kind every time.

Hans H. Grone vs. John O. Kelvig was the title of a lawsuit entered on Justice Holmes' docket. W. A. Marin appeared for plaintiff and John Matheson for defendant. Case settled.

E. B. Durdall has purchased the personal effects of his brother, J. B.; consideration $600 cash in hand. He has rented Joe's farm for three years. Joe has erected a new house, barn and granary within a year. Joe is a rustler.

There seems to be a fever for blacksmithing here this spring. P. H. Hoaglund and C. W. Davis have each purchased a smith's outfit. There are at present four shops in this immediate neighborhood.

A. J. Applequist is confined to the house with the neuralgia.

W. S. Laudt's better half has returned from her visit to her relatives, and now W. S. smiles again.

The Northern Pacific Company is taking gravel from the pit near here and hauling it towards Crookston.

Some time ago we noticed some very good letters in THE JOURNAL from alliance officers in regard to relief for the hail sufferers. It is easy to write, but better to act in this case.

We would advise the "Maple Bay man" to put his short-horns on the road later—wait till the roads are better.

Well, sandy land is all right sometimes. Here some of the farmers are plowing and C. H. Holmes says he will commence seeding the 18th. GOSSIP.

Euclid Items.

Weather immense.

General topic—seeding.

S. Currie, John Tiedemann and I. W. C. Misner were among the Euclidites who registered at the Commercial last week.

Goose hunting seems to be the principal sport with our ameteur Nimrods.

Wm. Davidson, the good natured manager of the Keystone farm, was at Crookston in the interest of the Charles Lockhart Farming Co.

The genial proprietor of the Alliance barber shop, C. E. Misner, and your scribe at this point, through the courtesy of the proprietoress, Mrs. Rose, was shown through the latter's commodious quarters in the Rickett block.

Mr. McCormick held service at the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening.

Call in to Taylor & Co's and let Wells sell you a buggy, wagon, or anything in the implement line.

A. L. Moore, special agent for the Washington Life Insurance Co., spent Tuesday here, talking an arm off of several of our citizens.

E. B. Ballou, our genial station agent, is kept on the jump these days a rustling freight.

Subscribe for THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, the paper that is in sympathy with the farmer, the merchant and the mechanic.

Dave Hutchinson is down with typhoid fever at the residence of A. Teal, Sr., but is doing nicely under the care of Dr. Chapin.

When you see Robert Casmey in Crookston politely ask him for a cigar. "B-o-y."

Dr. Langivin, of your city, was called to do some veterinary work for Wm. Brandt.

Hon. W. D. Carlton, of Angus, was down Friday. Thinks that seeding will be under full headway this week.

Robert Teal was doing the Queen City on Wednesday.

The members of the Union Sunday school were all presented with an Easter egg last Sunday.

Ask C. Teal, Sr. and John Tiedemann what time the N. P. train leaves the Forks. They say that the walking is good on the railroad track.

M. M. Davis is drawing the lines over a pair of brand new horses, purchased from M. R. Brown.

FRED.

Charley Vine is kept as busy as a bee cutting up meats to supply his increasing trade.

Our people say: 'The best we ever had here.' Miss Cope pleased the audience highly."

Last Saturday a division of the hail fund was made at the Scandia bank. Aside from the contribution made at Fertile, each man received 40 bushels of wheat, some oats and barley, and there was something like $25 to expend for feed. The contribution, while it helps several deserving settlers to a modest start again, was not one-half what it should have been.

We are again obliged to ask the indulgence of our readers which we trust will be readily granted in view of the many disadvantages under which we have labored in getting our new building in order and machinery set up with the kind of weather we have had. An extra dose of city work adds to our confusion and necessarily excludes much matter that we had in type for this issue.

A cordial welcome is extended to all to attend the Congregational church next Sunday. The service at 11 a. m. will be of unusual interest; and will consist of a bible exposition on "The Redeemed Promises of Jesus," by the pastor, lasting 15 minutes, followed by the regular bi-monthly Communion of the Lord's Supper. At 8 p. m. the pastor will preach; subject, "Jesus Illuminating Human Life." All strangers invited. Time of service 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. sharp.

Prof. Whittier, expert optician has just arrived from Grand Forks, N. D., and has taken rooms in the Reckitt Block, 3d floor room 128, where he will remain the balance of this week and next until Saturday, May 7th. Now is the time for all persons in Crookston and vicinity to have their eyes attended to and spectacles properly fitted. The Prof. corrects the most complicated defects in the human eye. Over 200 persons in Grand Forks and vicinity made happy by wearing spectacles. Eyes examined free. Office hours from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Don't fail to see him.

Repair Your Sidewalks.

By order of the city council the property owners of this city are required to repair the sidewalks in front of their places, and in case they fail to do so, the street commissioner has instructions to make the necessary repairs, and tax the same to the owners of the lots. This work must be done as soon as possible.

CROOKSTON, Minn., April 26, 1892.

To the City Council of the city of Crookston:

Your committee to whom was referred the communication of Lewis Ellington, Wm. Anglim and others, on the matter of the city of Crookston having and maintaining a public park suitable for the use of its citizens and the proper entertainment of its guests on all future occasions, etc., would respectfully report, that they have taken the matter under consideration and find that there are two places that can be bought for park purposes, viz: A tract of land containing 12 acres known as "Dobson's grove" for the sum of four thousand five hundred dollars. This tract is conveniently located, well provided with fine natural trees and requiring but a small expenditure to make it one of the most attractive parks in the Northwest. The other place is in Sampson's addition to the city of Crookston, on the west side of Red Lake River, which can be bought for the sum of two thousand dollars, provided the city expends the sum of one thousand dollars on it in improving it. There are eleven and one quarter acres of land in this tract.

Respectfully submitted for your consideration.

WM. E. WALKER,
Chairman Ways and Means Com.

On motion the report was accepted.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the clerk be and is hereby instructed to advertise for propositions from owners of property having lands for sale suitable for park purposes, and to have propositions opened at the regular meeting in June.—Carried.

Henry Shepard presented his resignation as constable, and on motion same was accepted.

Geo. H. Holt was nominated to fill the vacancy.

On motion the clerk was instructed to cast ballot in favor of Geo. H. Holt, which was done, and Mr. Holt duly declared elected constable to fill vacancy.

The First National bank presented a communication relating to the park site. On motion the communication was placed on file.

The city engineer estimated the total cost of putting in a sewer on Sixth street to be about $2,700.

At an adjourned regular meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April, 1892, Ald. Cromb offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Ald. Morrisey.

The City Council of the city of Crookston does hereby resolve, That all proceedings heretofore taken by the city council of the city of Crookston regarding the purchase by said city of suitable grounds for a jail site be and the same are hereby repealed and revoked, and it is hereby further resolved, that the orders on the city treasury numbered respectively 2,397, 2,395, 2,396, 2,398, 2,399, 2,394, 2,400, 2,401, 2,402 and 2,403, in all aggregating $8,400, issued the 27th day of January, A. D. 1892, as purchase price of said jail site be, and the same are hereby ordered delivered to the city treasurer and by him cancelled,

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Morrisey, Marlette, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Alderman Childs not voting.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 26th day of April, 1892.

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April 1892, Alderman Morrisey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Anderson:

Be it Resolved, that this city proceed to construct a sewer of 42 diameter, made of brick, from intersection of Sixth street and Front street westerly to center of alley in block 39, original townsite, thence southerly through alley to and across Fifth street into Red Lake river, with necessary catch basins, manholes, etc., as may be required.

Upon the yeas and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative; Anderson, Austin, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Morrisey, Marlette, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: None. Alderman Childs not voting.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 26th day of April, 1892.

To the Honorable the City Council of the City of Crookston:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee to whom was referred the matter of securing the location by the Crookston Water Works, Power and Light Company, of the intake pipe to their plant, above the city, and also to inquire into the contract or supposed contract now existing between said company and the city of Crooksson; beg leave to report, that pursuant to a request from your committee, Mr. W. J. Murphy, president of said company, very kindly visited the city of Crookston and gave your committee a hearing upon the matters submitted to their consideration.

That the reception given to your committee by Mr. Murphy was very courteous, he at the time expressing an earnest desire to meet the city of Crookston upon any fair and equitable terms which might be proposed by its City Council.

That as regards aforesaid intake pipe, Mr. Murphy informs your committee that the expense, according to the report of their engineer, of laying the same, (about $25,000) made the change entirely out of question as a business move, and it could not be considered by the company.

That as regards water and light furnished the city, Mr. Murphy informs us that his company is ready to cancel the portion of the contract relating to the furnishing of water for the city's use and to shut off the eight additional arc lights recently put in, either or both, at any time the City Council may so desire.

Mr. Murphy further proposes that if the city will take fourteen additional arc lights, making in all a total of thirty, his company will furnish the thirty lights at the rate of $150.00 per year each, but insists that unless this number of lights is taken the company will require the present light rates.

In conclusion and in view of the fact that the above proposition was made by Mr. Murphy in his individual capacity, while the Crookston Water Works, Power and Light Company is a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, whose affairs are controlled by a board of directors, your committee would recommend that this council by resolution request said Power and Light Company, to submit the above proposition in writing, and file it with the city clerk that it may be properly brought before this council for their intelligent action.

E. D. CHILDS.
L. D. MARSHALL.
FRED ANDERSON.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that the report be accepted and filed.—Carried.

The mayor presented the name of H. N. Tweten as policeman number two for confirmation. On motion ballot was taken. Ten votes were cast—9 in favor of confirmation and 1 against. Mr. Tweten was duly declared elected as patrolman number two.

Moved by Ald. Marshall, seconded by Ald. Marlette, that L. Gonyea be appointed as poor commissioner. The clerk was instructed to cast ballot in favor of Mr. Gonyea, which was done, and he was duly declared elected poor commissioner.

The city engineer requested that the city purchase granite markers for corners of different streets.

Moved by Ald. Jennings, seconded by Ald. Marshall, that the purchasing agent be instructed to purchase 60 granite markers and that the city engineer be instructed to place them when received.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Marlette, Morrisey, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Motion declared carried.

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April, 1892, Ald. Morrisey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Ald. Marshall:

Be it Resolved, That a sidewalk of pine plank, six feet wide, two inches thick, surfaced on one side, and well spiked with twenty penny spikes to three stringers 3x6 diameter, be constructed along the west side of Main street from Fifth street to Sixth street, in place of sidewalk condemned by city engineer.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Morrisey, Marlette, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the President of the Council.

Passed this 26th day of April, 1892.

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April, 1892, Alderman Childs offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Jerome:

Resolved by the city council of the city of Crookston, that in the future when work is performed under the direction of the street commissioner, the pay for the same may be made by the said commissioner's issuing to the person performing such labor a time check, which check shall be countersigned by the comptroller, and when so countersigned and assigned to Merchants National bank, the same will be paid to such bank on the presentation by the same to the proper officer of the city of a verified statement of the number and amount of such checks so paid, to which statement shall be attached the cancelled checks by said bank so paid.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows: Aldermen voting in the affirmative, Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jerome, Marshall, Morrisey, Marlette, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative, Jennings.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

IN FARMING CIRCLES.

INTERESTING TOPICS FOR PROGRESSIVE FARMERS.

Some Interesting and Instructive Experiments—Plan of Hog Feeding—To Catch a Sheep—Limitations of Soil Analyses.

Some Interesting and Interesting Experiments.

A Nebraska farmer has been experimenting with potato seed, and obtained some information which is worth noting. It was on a small scale, to be sure, but that is the way experiments should be undertaken on the farm. He planted two medium-sized potatoes of a late variety whole. Result, half a peck of very inferior tubers. He also took two of the same size and kind, cut them into nineteen pieces with an eye in each piece. From these he obtained a little over three of very fine potatoes. At the same time he planted two very small ones, not larger than an ordinary bean, of course planting them whole, and was surprised to dig from the two hills a ten quart pail heaping full of the smoothest and best potatoes he saw last year.

The same farmer also experimented a little with corn, obtaining results that do not accord with common theory. In his trial ground he planted five acres with corn shelled from the middle of the ear, and the same day planted five acres with seed from the whole ear. The latter was fit to crib ten days earlier than corn planted six days before, and the yield was much larger. Such experiments as these, conducted by private individuals in a small way, often have great practical value.

The common custom of planting pumpkins in the same field with corn, and in the hills, is not approved by some progressive farmers. The pumpkins, may not take much from the value of the corn, but the corn, by shading the vines and fruit, certainly does take a good deal from the pumpkins. If only a few pumpkins are desired, perhaps this way of growing them will do well enough. But when a large crop is wanted, of the best quality, the plantation should occupy the entire ground. An immense crop can be raised from a single acre, and the quality of the fruit will be much better than that grown with corn. Pumpkins are greatly relished by cattle and hogs, and make a cheap and wholesome addition to the grain and hay ration.

An instructive experiment in checking potato rot is reported from Pennsylvania. In a patch devoted to the trial one half had the tops cut off and removed as soon as they showed any signs of rot and the other half remained uncut. On digging the crop all the potatoes from the treated portions of the field were found to be perfectly sound, while those from the other portion were unfit to use.

It is of no advantage to plant corn before the ground is sufficiently warmed to germinate the seed. It is apt to rot in damp soil, and then it is important for corn to germinate quickly and get a good start. Plant deep in soil dry enough to make a good tilth, firm the ground, and with good after culture and the blessing of Providence there will be an abundant harvest.

Plan of Hog Feeding.

Mr. Eli Heaton writes in the Indiana Farmer: Through your columns I would like to give my brother farmers my plan of feeding hogs during the past season, which I found was very healthful for the hogs and saves corn cobs. Last spring a year I bought half a bushel of the White Jerusalem artichoke which planted about one sixth of an acre; from this, in the fall, I sold 25 bushels of seed, I also buried about 12 bushels for my own use, then turned in 21 hogs to help themselves. Here they grew and fatted with only a little corn each day, also with plenty of fresh water, and salt and charcoal occasionally. This year I have about one and one-half acres. I have turned in 39 head of hogs to fatten and 42 fall pigs are also feeding on them. After the fat hogs are sold there will be food enough to supply my brood sows and pigs until spring with only a very little corn. In the spring I have only to turn my hogs out, close up the fence and the new crop comes on without any cultivation. There are always enough tubers left in the ground for a new crop. These artichokes are very prolific and will yield hundreds of bushels per acre.

I think that roots are the natural food for hogs, and it is needless to say that I have long since quit the cruel practice of using rings. Let us try more of the root feeding and have better and healthier hogs, especially when it will save time, labor and corn.

Potato Scab.

Extended experience with potato scab leads the North Dakota experiment station to the following interesting conclusions: Scabby seed tubers under ordinary circumstances produce a diseased crop of potatoes. Seed potatoes free from scab, upon soil free from the disease, will produce a healthy crop of potatoes. The disease germs can remain in the ground from one crop to another. The most interesting fact is, that by soaking the diseased seed in certain chemical solutions before planting, an undiseased crop can be grown from the scabbiest potatoes, provided the soil be free from the scab germs. The point to be attained is to kill the adhering germs and not retard the growth of the tuber. For this a treatment with corrosive sublimate, mercuric bichloride, is recommended. In the first place, wash the seed potatoes thoroughly either in running water or in a tub, changing the water frequently; reject the scabbiest ones. For the treatment, obtain a barrel and place in it thirteen gallons of water. Dissolve two ounces of corrosive sublimate in two gallons of warm water; add this to the water in the barrel, and stir it well till thoroughly mixed with it. Let the potatoes remain in this solution an hour and a half. The liquid can be used again for another quantity of potatoes. After the treatment the tuber can be cut in the usual manner and planted.

A similar scab is found on some varieties of beets, presumably the same. It is unwise to raise potatoes on the same land for successive seasons if they are shabby, and it follows that beets should not be grown after scabby potatoes. It is probable that other root crops may be infested with the fungous disease. If so, it may be expected that preventives will be found which are effective.

Limitations of Soil Analysis.

A great deal is said nowadays of the importance of soil analysis. Unquestionably a good analysis of agricultural lands is useful; but there are limitations to its value. It does not determine everything a farmer needs to know about his soil. Analysis must be supplemented by careful observation of growing plants, and by experiments, intelligently carried on, to discover what additions are needful to bring the soil to a high degree of fertility.

It was said by one of the speakers at a recent Farmers' Institute, that there may be a considerable percentage of plant food locked up in the soil, of which plants cannot avail themselves. Intelligent experimentation will enable the farmer to discover the key to these stored up treasures. If there is a large growth of foliage wood, it is evident that there is enough nitrogen. If the seed of the plant is deficient and the wood unripened, there is plainly a lack of potash and phosphoric acid. One field may have enough of these elements for almost any crop—though this is seldom the case on long-cultivated soils—while the adjoining one is lacking in one or all of them.

The trial of different brands of fertilizers, or of different farm manures, will aid the farmer in determining what his soil needs; but a good analysis affords a helpful starting point for such experiments, and therein lies its chief value.

To Catch a Sheep.

Put the flock in a small pen. Select with your eye a sheep which has not already got his eye on you. Move slowly and quietly and catch with right hand above the hock of left hind leg, so there will be no danger of breaking. Draw firmly to you until you can place the left arm around his neck close down to the shoulder; then change your right hand from the left hind leg over his back to the right hind leg—above hock remember—and you are ready to go.

Short Rows.

A hive of 5,000 bees will produce about fifty pounds of honey annually.

For hogs with overloaded stomachs charcoal is an excellent relief.

The hog, as a machine, can turn more products into a profitable form than any other animal that we know.

Every day a team is idle foots up a loss equal to the cost of keeps. As far as possible avoid this loss.

Trees properly pruned and the fruit well thinned out need never have their limbs propped. The man who carries out this mode will succeed, where the neglected trees will be unprofitable.

Sleeping in dust is the cause of the premature death of many hogs. Give them plenty of bedding and don't permit them to nest under corncribs or other buildings.

If you know anything about the care of horses, and have any sympathy for them, water them as often as they want to drink—once an hour, if possible. By doing this, you will not be only merciful to your animals, but you will be a benefactor to yourself, as they will do more work; they will be healthier; they will look better; and will be less liable to coughs and colds, and will live longer.

Mr. Holman, of Virginia, in the American Farmer, states that he had a neighbor who a few years ago bought 100 sheep for $300, and that the first season after the purchase he sold nearly enough lambs and wool to pay the entire cost, with original flock left. Mr. Holman thinks that no evidence is lacking to prove the profitableness of the business of sheep raising.

It is said that the use of tarred paper to protect trees is worse than all other evils combined, as it causes the bark underneath it to decay to the wood. A correspondent of the Western Rural lost a fine young orchard of 200 trees by this means, but not until after writing an article recommending the use of tarred paper, which he has been trying to correct ever since.

There is one disadvantage, and but one, in getting the horns off from cattle—it removes the age marks. But the compensating advantages far overbalance this. At two years old a wrinkle appears at the base of the horn, and the following year it is sufficiently developed to be easily seen. At five years of age a second wrinkle is fully developed, and after that one appears every year, until at the age of eleven or twelve the wrinkles are smaller, closer and less conspicuous, and some of the earlier ones will be entirely worn away.

HOW MOUNTAINS WERE MADE.

An Experiment Illustrates Their Formation What the Earth Cooled.

Visitors to Mount Washington can hardly have failed to notice in several places by the side of the road leading from the glen to the summit curiously bent and twisted rocks, some of which strikingly resemble layers of rumpled cloth. The evidence which the forms of these rocks furnish of the action of some tremendous pressure in long past times, which was able to bend and fold layers of the earth's crust, is of a kind that appeals to the eye and mind of the most uninstructed observer.

The geologists sees in the mountains themselves far grander proofs of the might of those forces of disturbance that have broken and corrugated the rocky shell of the globe.

The effectiveness of the slow contraction which the earth has undergone as its interior has gradually cooled off, in upheaving and deforming its surface, has recently been beautifully illustrated by the experiments of the French geologist, Professor A. Daubree.

He took a distended ball of caoutchouc, made to imitate the form of the earth, slightly flattened at the poles, and covered it with a layer of beeswax. Then the ball was allowed to contract a little. Immediately the beeswax surface was thrown into folds, and fractured, and upheaved in some places and depressed in others, the effect being to produce a striking resemblance to the surface of the earth, with its mountains and valleys and vast beds of broken and tilted rocks.

So in a few minutes, by this ingenious experiment, a geological history of the earth in minature can be enacted, and while watching it, with the aid of a little imagination, we may behold some of those mighty processes which, acting through millions of years, have gradually brought our planet into the condition in which we see it today.

Electric Lamp Making.

Certain interesting steps of the process, are matters of public information. The first carbon filaments made seldom lasted more than fifty hours, rendering the cost of lamp renewal as much as the cost of current. In endeavoring to prolong the life of a lamp it was noticed that the filament was brighter at some points than others, indicating a variation of size Could this be remedied? Could the filament be made of uniform diameter? Fortunately, yes. Several years before, M. Duprez, a French chemist, had recorded one of those observations so common in science, which, barren at the time they occur, afterward spring into fruitfulness through disclosing relationship to a puzzling problem.

He noticed that carbon heated in an atmosphere of hydro-carbon received a deposit of an extremely dense form of carbon upon its surface. Here lay the key to increasing the durability of the lamp filament. Immersing it while luminous in a heavy hydro-carbon gas or liquid, it took on a solid coating, and where the filament was hottest and therefore thinnest the deposit became thickest. In this ingenious fashion the thread was made to repair its own defects, with marked improvement in lasting quality. To a further experimental refinement the incandescent lamp owes another point of its present excellence. For a lamp's success it is essential that the air be exhausted from its bulb as thoroughly as possible.

Notwithstanding the use of the best pump, Mr. Swan, one of the pioneers of electric lighting, detected that his filaments were attacked by oxygen. It occurred to him, that perhaps a little of this gas might have been left in the substance of the carbon itself, for he well knew how strong was the affinity between gases and porous forms of carbon. Thought he, it may be that if the filament were kept aglow during the pumping operation the oxygen could be dislodged. Experiment proved the soundness of his surmise, and another advance in lamp making was scored. In leading the wires bearing a current into a lamp, inventors encountered a good deal of difficulty. This was overcome on discovery that platinum, when heated, has much the same rate of expansibility as glass.

CONTINUOUS ALTERNATING CURRENTS.

In producing current for lighting the choice lies between two plans, that of a continuous current, usually of comparatively low voltage, or pressure, and that of an alternating one, usually, but not necessarily, of high voltage. The alternating current, which may have its polarity reversed 100 to 1000 times a second, has the advantage of lending itself to economical transformation, that is to the production of changes in its pressure. It can be regulated also with less loss of energy than a continuous electrical stream. The continuous current when furnished, as it usually is, at 250 volts, is well within the safety limit, and on the three-wire system supplies incandescent lamps at 125 volts, avoiding the toll exacted by even the best transformer. This is the current suitable for compact city circuits; with a scattered circle of custom, such as that of a suburban district, the alternating system is preferred.

Strange Inscription on a Murdered Man's Tomb.

A despatch from Sofia states that profound emotion has been caused there by the discovery of the following inscription written by an unknown hand on the tombstone of M. Beltscheff, the murdered Finance Secretary: "Forgive us. We aimed at Stambouloff, we failed, and struck you. The second time we will not fail. Stambouloff shall not find the guilty persons; there are too many.—Your Mourning Murderers."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Masked Venom.

Does anybody imagine that he or she can breathe air impregnated with malaria for any length of time and yet go scatheless? If any such there be let them incur the risk and then doubt. The poison in disguise as surely enters the system as a dose of prussic acid swallowed with suicidal intent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the sole reliable defense against the malarial virus. Rheumatism, dyspepsia and constipation are remedied by it.

It is a mistake to expect to find a $1,000 angel in a $1 a week servant.

Big, but bad—the old-fashioned pill. Bad to take, and bad to have taken. Inefficient, too. It's only temporary relief you can get from it.

Try something better. With Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets the benefit is lasting. They cleanse and regulate the liver, stomach and bowels. Taken in time, they prevent trouble. In any case, they cure it.

And they cure it easily; they're mild and gentle, but thorough and effective. There's no disturbance to the system, diet or occupation. One tiny, sugar-coated Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic. Sick and Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels are promptly relieved and permanently cured.

They're purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest, and the easiest to take—but besides that, they're the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get. This is true only of Dr. Pierce's medicines.

Boils! Pimples! Blotches,

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER X.—CONTINUED.

Between the right side of the bed and the wall was a square table,—on which stood the lamp,—with the saddle-back chair beside it. On the left-hand side of the bed was a tall, carved black press. A large chimney, with a sculptured mantel and an open hearth, faced the door. A screen shut off the washstand, which stood to the left of the oriel. A broad settle, with a valance, and covered with a stuff similar to the hangings of the bed, ran round the three-sided recess formed by the window,—curtains of the same kind shut off this recess. A corner cabinet, with folding doors in the lower part, fitted the angle of the walls to the right; between this and the door was a deep, wide, and long chest, and above it a large mirror. An escritoire, some high-backed chairs, and a second table, completed the furniture. There was no door but the one opening upon the corridor, and no windows save the oriel.

In the early part of the night, I had described these particulars to Van Hoeck, at his request, and he had made me examine the press, the old chest, the hangings of the bed and settles; everything, in fact, which might afford a hiding-place to Lola or another.

I had even gone down upon my knees, and looked under the bed, to appease his anxiety. And yet, now, a vague uneasiness possessed me as I raised the lamp shade, and looked around the room. The dark oak wainscot, the sombre hangings, the painted ceiling overhead, absorbed the light; there was a black void on the opposite side of the bed, where the light from the lamp was intercepted by the curtains; I could not see even the outline of the great press.

I readjusted the shade, turned the wick higher, and, half-undressed, threw myself upon the bed. I was not afraid,—in strength I was a match for any natural foe, and I did not believe in the existence of any other,—yet I felt myself infected with Van Hoeck's presentiment of impending calamity.

Van Hoeck's theory of Lola's complicity in a plot to steal the diamond, had been upset by the fact that I was watching her asleep at my door at the very time Edith believed she saw the girl looking through her blinds; but this had in no wise shaken his conviction that the mysterious appearance was connected with a scheme to rob us.

"Are a man's convictions to be limited by his senses?" he asked. "You are convinced that a cloud is rising in the horizon because you see it; but am I to deny its existence because I have no sight? Are you justified, then, in declaring that we are not menaced by this disaster which is to overwhelm us because you have not my faculty of prevision? You who can not deny prescience to a bee, the presentiment of coming storm to cattle, tell me that my conviction is nothing. It is only by conviction that we live. What saves us from destruction but the conviction that, by stepping into an abyss, we must fall? I tell you to look about you; we are on the edge of an abyss. There are signs to strike the dullest intelligence. Your turn will come!"

I had hung my watch in the pocket upon the hanging at the head of the bed; its lively ticking sounded strangely out of keeping with the gloom and stillness of the surroundings. The shaded light gave a funeral aspect to the bed hangings; the baldaquin over my head might have been a catalalque for the dead. I wondered how many men had ended their days in this bed since these hangings had been put up. Would Van Hoeck's presentiment be fulfilled? Should I be found there in the morning dead?

It was well suited for a murder, that bed, with its pall-like hangings to conceal the lurking murderer.

Tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac.

My ear had become so familiar to the brisk movement of my watch that the slightest sound was audible above it. And a sound slight indeed I heard.

To my mind, dwelling then upon assassins, it sounded like the drawing of a dagger from its sheath.

Turning my head toward the side from which the sound seemed to proceed, I fancied I saw the heavy curtain move; it was between me and the lamp. The movement was as slight as the sound. If it was a fact that I heard one, it was a fact that I saw the other.

I drew myself up gradually; and, leaning forward, I suddenly flung back the curtain with my left hand. There was no resistance to my hand; nothing could be seen beyond but the lamp burning steadily on the table, the saddle-back chair, and the dim outline of the big chimney-piece.

I got upon my knees, and pushed the curtain flat against the wall, to be sure there could by no possibility be any one concealed in the heavy folds; —to assure myself that my suspicion was utterly without foundation.

This end of the room was comparitively light, and the saddleback chair was so placed as to preclude the possibility of any one hiding beyond it.

If the curtain had indeed moved, it must have been by a hand from under the bed. It was easier to believe that I had been mistaken in seeing the slight movement than to suppose that I had over-looked a concealed thief when I looked under the bed, to satisfy Van Hoeck; so I let the curtain fall, and lay down again.

My thoughts still dwelt upon the idea of assassination. Setting aside the idea of an intrigue in which Lola was concerned, there was yet nothing prosperous in Van Hoeck's presentiment. There was eight or ten servants in the house, and undoubtedly ever one of them knew of the marvelous treasure in my keeping. They would tell their friends in the adjacent village, the keepers, the tradespeople, —in a few days the story would be carried about and made known to hundreds; and was there none amongst them whose cupidity might take practical form? It was quite possible that under this very roof there was one with the ingenuity and daring to plan and execute the robbery. A servant intimately acquainted with the arrangement of the rooms and the peculiarities of the building, would probably know of the external means of communication between the bay and oriel windows. Without this knowledge, no one, it seemed to me, would dare to attempt that hazardous passage at night and in the dark; but with that knowledge, and possibly some previous practice, the feat was sufficiently practicable. In that case, Edith might actually have heard and seen what she had since attributed to imagination.

But what end could be served by these repeated attacks upon her sensibility?

A cause is sometimes discovered by examining the effect. Now what effect had been produced by these attacks? The first had frightened Edith excessively; the second had made a slighter impression,—thus far the effect had been confined to her; but the third—for only to a third fright could I attribute her scream of terror—had brought her father and myself from our rooms. Instantly, something like the truth flashed upon my mind.

To bring me from my room was the very object with which the attack upon Edith had been made.

Unriddling the mystery with this key, I assumed that the thief had watched me close the door upon Van Hoeck and return to my room; that, after allowing me sufficient time to get into bed, but not to fall into sound sleep, he had made the attack upon Edith, opening her door beforehand to provide a speedy means of escape, and to allow her cry to be more distinctly heard; that, having succeeded in terrifying her, he had sped down the stairs in the left block, passed through the library and dining-room, and ascended by the stairs in the right block about the same time that I might be supposed to have reached Edith's room, and that, reckoning upon my keeping the Great Hesper under my pillow, and leaving it there in my alarm upon Edith's account, he had expected to have possessed himself of our treasure. If what I thus assumed was the fact, then indeed this plan might have succeeded but for Van Hoeck's prudent insistance upon my strapping the diamond to my wrist.

As I thus explained what had happened, a more startling reflection occurred to my mind. The thief had been disapointed in not finding the diamond beneath my pillow, but he yet might not have relinquished the hope of getting it.

He might not have left the room. He might be hidden there at that very moment!

What was more easy, being in the room, than to conceal himself in it? The curtain that moved the oriel, the great chest, the settle, the press, were all suggestive of that course. The fellow might be under the very bed I was lying upon.

The movement I had seen in the curtain, the sound similar to the drawing of a blade from its sheath—which might well be caused by the movement of the heavy valance of the bed, strengthened the suspicion. Was he lying there waiting for the sound of my heavy breathing to assure him that I slept?

There was scarcely the necessity to wait for that; for what resistance could I, lying upon my back there, make against a foe springing out of the dark upon me?

I thought of the clasp-knife Van Hoeck had given me, and, stretching out my hand, I felt for it where I had stuck it,—between the mattress and the bedstead. I could not find it.

Pushing the curtain so that the light from the lamp fell upon the edge of the bedstead, I assured myself that it was not where I had left it. It must have slipped through—or been drawn out.

The latter supposition explained the sound and movement I had heard and seen. Yet it might have made that sound in slipping through,—its fall upon the floor deadened by the carpet, or its point sticking in the boards; but I fancied the horn handle was too wide to allow of its slipping through.

To satisfy myself at once upon this point, I leaped out of bed, resolved to strike a match and look under the valance. I stood for a moment stupefied; the box of vestas was gone from the table, where I was certain I had laid them.

They must have been taken whilst I lay screened by the bed curtains.

I glanced over my shoulder.

The folds of the curtain against the bed were not the same as when I pushed them back to the wall; one fold stood out at an angle; and as, slowly turning around, I looked more closely, I saw against the dark oak panel of the wall about the mid-height of a man, and protruding but an inch or so from the edge of the curtain, the bright point of a knife blade.

Now, indeed, there was no longer any doubt. The man who had come to rob was there to murder me. Had I stopped but another moment on the bed, he might have knifed me.

What was I to do? I had him, standing there behind the curtain, at a certain advantage.

Should I spring upon him and strangle him against the wall in the folds of the curtain?

It was not a sure victory for me, and a partial one might, in the end, be fatal. The thick stuff would prevent my getting a firm grip of him, and his right hand, the one that held the knife, was free. My chance was too small, the danger too great, to justify that attack, though the muscles of my arms and fingers were strung up to make the tempting effort.

Keeping my eye upon the curtain, I drew back to the foot of the bed. To get to the door, I must cross the room, and inevitably be seen by the murderous rascal as he stood there on the inner side of the bed curtain; and, arrived at the door, I must turn the key twice, and the handle as well, before he overtook me. On the other hand, to disengage himself from the folds of the curtain, and recover the start I had of him.

The chances were pretty equal, and I determined to save myself by flight rather than risk the fatal result of the unequal encounter.

I made my way noiselessly, in a straight line down the room, until I got opposite the door; then I made a rush for it, across the open space. I got to the door, and, with furious haste, groped about for the key. It was gone!

I grasped the handle, in the hope that I might be able to tear the lock off; the screw had been taken out, and the knob slid off the spindle in my hand. I was lost.

It astonishes me, now, to think with what celerity and adroitness these precautions against my escape had been made.

The man had not rushed after me; there was no desperate pursuit of that kind; he knew I was trapped. Only, as I turned my eyes back to the place where he stood, I perceived that the light was dying out.

There was but a narrow rim of blue flame above the wick; it faded away, and all was dark.

There are degrees of darkness; this seemed to me the last degree. I felt as if I was sunk in a lake of pitch.

If I called for help, it was not certain that the heavy-sleeping Judge would hear me. Possibly Sir Edmund was yet awake, but I thought of Edith; and besides, I knew that before assistance could come, before the door could be burst, all would be over.

Probably my foe was already approaching me; my cry would be the signal for him to spring upon me.

No; my only chance of escape was in maintaining silence, and keeping him in ignorance of my position. If accident brought us into contact, I trusted to my physical strength and good luck to be a match for him and his knife in the subsequent struggle. The diamond, buckled to my wrist, might serve me in the fight, I might stun the fellow with it, if fortune only favored my arm.

It was a duel between us, and, anyway, I would sell my life dearly.

With this resolve, I drew away from the door toward that part of the room where, as I fancied, the carved press stood. I kept my arms free, my body crouched together, and every muscle tense and ready.

I backed a few feet from the door, and then I stopped, as the reflection crossed my mind that I might be backing toward my adversary! Then I regretted that I had left the door, where at least I might have stood safe from a rear attack.

I could hear nothing but the throbbing of the blood in my temples and the quick tic-tac, tic tac, tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac of my watch behind me, yet I knew that the murderer must be moving.

He had his work to do, and must have made up his mind how to do it before putting out the light. I could see nothing, and the silence and darkness were horrible, with the possibility of falling upon me from behind. Yet, how was I to guard against that attack, not knowing where he was? Possibly his visual power was stronger than mine.

I knew by the ticking of my watch that the bed was somewhere behind me, and that I ought to be facing the oriel; and, as I strained my eyes to catch any rays of light that might exist, I fancied I detected a dim gray seam in the blackness before me,—possibly the curtain masking the oriel were slightly parted.

As I continued to stare in that direction, I became convinced that this was the fact, and, slight though the assurance was, it gave me some feeling of security; in that direction I might know of my foes approach. And, sure enough, at that very moment the gray seam was blocked out.

He was there, between me and the oriel. My first impulse was to end the terrible suspense, and spring forward upon him; but prudence checked me.

He might be close to me, or he might be close to the oriel,—it was impossible for me to tell merely by the absence of a faint light.

E PLURIBUS DUO.

Doctors Are Easily Fooled, as These Instances Clearly Show.

Doctor Brunton, in an address lately reported in the London Lancet, was cautioning his hearers—the members of a medical society against hastily expressed opinions as to the nature of patients' diseases, and emphasized his warning by two professional anecdotes. He was once present at a clinic, the subject of which was a man evidently suffering from some disease of the heart.

An unnatural murmuring sound could be heard from that organ, and the pupil of one of his eyes was very much dilated. The peculiar appearance of the eye seemed to have some connection with the cardiac affection, but various opinions were expressed by the different students as to what the precise nature of this relation could be.

The discussion was just becoming interesting when the patient remarked that his strange-looking eye was made of glass!

At another clinic the professor in charge was discussing learnedly about the importance of attending to minor symptoms.

"Now, gentlemen," he said, "in the case of this woman here, certain things could be confidently affirmed from the condition of her teeth."

He was proceeding to particularize, but just then the patient broke in upon him.

"Please, sir," she said, as she took out her teeth, "I will hand them round; the young gentleman might like to look at them closer."

The Strawberry,

Boston Transcript.

The rose, the apple and the strawberry seem especially intended by nature for the use and pleasure of mankind. Not only does the beauty and fragrance of the one and the grateful flavor of the other point to this, but the very wide distribution of each over the face of the earth, as well as their great susceptibility to improvement and adapation under the fostering hand of man, seem to indicate unusual designs in this direction. The strawberry is, perhaps, the most universally acceptible of the many delicious fruits intended for the human palate. Some variety of it is found growing wild in nearly every part of Europe, many of the finest sorts are indigenous to North and South America, and even India has a native variety, though of slight food value. Since the cultivation of the strawberry began, moreover, it has adapted itself readily to nearly all climates and soils, no other fruit, probably, being now as widely disseminated.

Notwithstanding this, such is the power of popular fallocies that the ancient belief still holds strongly in the minds of that only rare skill and the most unwearying labor suffice to insure a crop of this heaven-bestowed fruit. It is false. The strawberry is as easy of cultivation as sweet corn—indeed, needs much the same care, except in the paticular of water. It ought to be univesally grown by garden proprietors. What is more delightful or appetizing than the sight upon one's breakfast table of a generous dish piled to a toppling mountain with the blushing and fragrant cones, fresh picked from the garden and inhaling the cool breath of a June morning? A rare charm, too, and one in which the supply from the private garden holds an immense superiority over that of the market, lies in the mingling of the various kinds, thereby bringing out by contrast the subtle variations for which the strawberry is famous.

He Wanted a Pass.

The multitudes who think they ought not to pay railroad fare are never at a loss for grounds upon which to base their applications for passes. The passenger agents are used to the most extraordinary petitions, some piteous, some audacious, and now and then one that is downright humorous. Under this last head comes an application that was made to Passenger Agent Ed Smith of the Baltimore & Ohio the other day.

Mr Smith was busy in his office on 5th avenue, when a tall and very lean young man came in and asked to see the passenger agent. Mr. Smith noticed that the young man's hair was very long and that the bottoms of his trousers were frayed, but in spite of these ominous signs he said cheerily: "Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

"I want to get to Baltimore," said the long-haired young man in a sepulchral voice.

"You've come to the right place, sir; we sell tickets for Baltimore to any one," said Mr. Smith, waving his hand toward the ticket counter.

"No, you don't understand me," went on the young man, "I have some beautiful poems here, and when I've read you one or two I am sure you will see your way to transporting me to Baltimore," and with this the young man fished out a bundle of manuscript from his coat tail pocket. It was a warm day and Mr. Smith did not feel inclined to precipitate a conflict; so he sank back into his chair and the long-haired poet began to read aloud his effusions. He read two poems of considerable length, and he might have read more, but the second poem had a refrain in which "along the shore" was rhymed with "all the more" and "Baltimore," and Mr. Smith's good nature ouldn't stand that. He called to the clerks and they deposited the lank and lean poet with the long hair on the sidewalk. For some days yet Baltimore is safe.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Japanese Frugality.

Some remarkable statements are made by Professor Rein, a scientist who has been investigating the material resources of Japan. They reveal a national frugality and economy of a marvelous type. The area of Japan is less than of California. Its cultivated land is less than one-tenth of its total acreage, yet its products support about 38,000,000. In Japan 2,560 persons subsist from each square mile of tilled land. A people existing in such circumstances must, from necessity of preservation, be provident, painstaking, hard working, ingenious and frugal. The Japs appear to deserve all these adjectives. Agriculture with them is literally marked gardening, because the soil is required to produce more than any other place in the world.—Once a Week.

As a Soldier.

The religion of Dahomey Land is to the effect that any soldier killed while fighting white men goes straight to heaven to become a handsome young man of 25, who is provided with fifteen beautiful wives and all the game he can eat for a thousand years. Under this belief hundreds of them do their best to get killed, and its rather funny to think how they are bamboozled when they wake up "over there."—Detroit Free Press.

NOT TO BE TOLD QUIETLY.

A Boston Maid's Kindly Intention Thwarted by a Defect of Hearing.

She was a middle-aged woman dressed in black, and wearing eyeglasses says the Boston Journal. She carried both her head and her bundles in a way that indicated self-reliance, and, having failed to find a seat in the Old Colony car she entered first, although the train was now in motion she bravely crossed the platform and went into the next car.

A masculine eye would probably have noticed nothing peculiar in her personal appearance, but nearly every woman that she passed noticed that the new-comer still wore a draped overskirt and that this part of her attire, instead of having the necessary symmetry, was hitched around on one side in a way that was not only unfashionable, but entirely ungraceful and unbecoming. Woman like, they wanted to tell her of it.

She had found a seat, had seated herself, and was calmly depositing her bundles by her side, when a very pretty girl in the seat just behind leaned forward and said, in a low tone:

"I beg your pardon, madam, but something seems to be wrong with your dress. The skirt is caught to one side in some way, and——"

"Hey?" said the woman, sharply.

The girl repeated in substance what she had said before, and added humbly: "I thought you would like to know, so as to fix it before you go on the street again."

The woman didn't understand. She turned around, and throwing her head back, in order to direct her gaze through her glasses, carefully scrutinized the young lady's features. Then, in a loud tone, with due deliberation, she said: "I—don't—think—I—know you."

The young lady blushed. This reception of her well-meant information was more than she had bargained for, and her voice, though subdued, was very distinct. The passengers near by were becoming interested.

"I don't want to seem rude, but your skirt is somewhat one-sided."

The woman had a puzzled look on her face, and she slowly repeated: "I am a little deaf," she added; "can't you speak a little louder?"

Her own tones by this time were loud enough for an open-air orator, and the audience to the dialogue now comprised all the passengers in the car.

The pretty girl had gone too far to back out, and in a tone that would have done credit to an elocutionist she tried again. "Your skirt is one-sided!"

For the first time the face of the woman lighted up with a show of interest, and with a delusive smile that raised false hopes in the fair maiden's breast she leaned far back so as to get the full import of the reply and shouted:

"Did you say you came from Rochester?"

She was a little deaf. It took the combined efforts of all the ladies near her to make her understand, but when she knew what they wanted she seemed truly grateful, and, turning round, would doubtless have added to her acknowledgement some words of apology to the young lady, but the seat was vacant. The fair Samaritan was gone.

SOCIETY IN THE GULCH.

Jim Couldn't Go Because He Was Short on Ornaments.

There was to be a dance that night in the gulch, and all her beauty and her chivalry were to be on hand, says New York Truth.

Upon the mountain side a light flickered from the window of Dandy Jim's cabin.

The revealers observed it as they went in groups to the ball and wondered.

Jim was always the very first at all festive occasions and the last to leave.

An hour after the latest arrivals had made their appearance Jim had not come.

Wonders gave place to alarm then and a committee of three were appointed to go to Jim's cabin and investigate.

The light from the window streamed down the path and the visitors found no difficulty in reaching the cabin though the night was dark.

In response to their knock they were invited to enter and within they found Dandy Jim seated in the corner in the deepest dejection.

"Hello, Jim," greeted the spokesman, cheerily, "why ain't yer at the shindig?"

"Can't boys. I can't come," and Jim's lips quivered.

"What's the row? Got news from the East? Is yer mother dead or yer wife livin'? We've been sent up to find out."

"Wasn't that, boys. I ain't got nuthin' to wear. Both my revolvers are out of order and a Winchester is such—bad form, besides bein' awkward to dance in."

Jim hastily brushed his eyes and the visitors looked mournfully at each other.

They knew that on such a night there were no spare garments in the gulch that would fit Dandy Jim.

A Methodical Man.

Once an old Englishman, James Scott by name, traveled about on business until he was nearly eighty years of age. He became celebrated for his punctuality and his methodical habits. Upon one occasion a gentleman stopped at an inn much frequented by Mr. Scott and saw a fine fowl cooking.

"That is very good," said the hungry guest. "You may serve that for my dinner."

"You cannot have that, sir," replied the landlord. "That is being cooked for Mr. Scott, the traveler."

"I know Mr. Scott very well," said the gentleman. "Is he stopping here?"

"Oh, no, sir," answered the landlord. "But six months ago he ordered a fowl to be ready for him at precisely 2 o'clock today and we are expecting him every minute."

Raised on the Bottle.

A gentleman not long since, in one of his rides in Southern Illinois, sought to make himself interesting to a good-looking mother of a sweet baby occupying the next seat in the car. After duly praising the baby he remarked to the mother:

"He's a real Sucker, I suppose?" (meaning Illinois born.)

"No sir," said the lady blushing; "We had to raise him on the bottle."

The gentleman resumed his reading and has not bragged on any strange babies since.—National Weekly.

The Gallant Hungarian.

Lady of the House: "Pardon my interrupting you, gentlemen, but my daughter is now going to sing 'By the sad sea waves.'"

Hungarian: "That won't disturb us in the least, Madame, it's a pretty long way off, isn't it?"

UNITED STATES COURT.

An Editor Acquitted of the Charge of Printing a Lottery Advertisement.

Joseph Mueller who was charged with having published a lottery advertisement in the Dodge County Pioneer, at Mayville, was acquitted in the United States Court yesterday. The case is an important victory for the Louisiana State Lottery. It was charged that a certain notice that appeared in the paper, which is a German weekly, was an advertisement under the new law forbidding the mailing of publications containing lottery advertisements. The card read as follows:

CONRAD! CONRAD! CONRAD!

CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

While it is true that I have been elected president of the Louisiana State Lottery company, vice M. A. Dauphin, deceased, I am still president of the Gulf Coast Ice and Manufacturing company, and all orders for material, machinery, etc., as well as all other business letters should be addressed to me as before. Paul Conrad, box 1,358, New Orleans.

Gen. E. S. Bragg, of Fond du Lac defended Mueller, arguring that the advertisement did not come within the scope of the statute. The jury was out but a few minutes.—Milwaukee, Wis., Sentinel.

Child on the Track.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special. —A thrilling incident occurred near Tyron station, on the Chippewa Valley division of the Milwaukee road, yesterday. The up train was rushing along towards Eau Claire when a little child was discovered in the middle of the track waving a pair of tiny arms at the approaching locomotive. Engineer McGuire put on the air-brakes and the train was brought to a standstill within a few feet of the child.

Stone for the Fair.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special. —F. Prentice to-day received instructions from the state board of world's fair managers to proceed with the brown stone monolith for the world's fair. The contract for erecting the same was let to Henry Buestun of Milwaukee. Mr. Prentice will have a force of men put on at the quarry at once and will soon have the stone out.

One Pure Baking Powder.

Like Telling a Secret.

A story is told and it is a true story that over seventy per cent. of all the baking powders sold contain either alum or ammonia, and many of these powders contain both. The ill effects upon the system of food raised by alum or ammonia powders are the more dangerous because of their insidious character. It would be less dangerous for the people were it fatal at once, for then such food would be avoided, but their baneful action because imperceptible at first and slow in its advances, is no less certain.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is declared by all authorities as free from alum, ammonia or any other adulterant. Its purity has never been questioned, and while it does finer and better work, it costs no more at retail than many of the adulterated powders.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

W. H. Dixon, the widely known railroad man, dies suddenly in St. Paul.

Two St. Paul laborers quarreled and one is struck with perhaps fatal results.

Patrick Shanley, the St. Paul man who was shot at the dog fight in Anoka county, dies as the result of an amputation.

August Holmberg, who drives a delivery wagon at Cloquet, was thrown from it and had his leg broken.

A young lady is drowned near Crookston, Minn., under very mysterious circumstances.

The latest idea in connection with Duluth-railway terminals is to tunnel the ship canal.

Judge Mills dissolved the injunction against the city of Moorhead in the jail question.

A voucher clerk of the Northern Pacific is arrested in St. Paul for securing over $4,000 by raising checks.

Mamie Malone, a little girl living in Jerome's addition, Crookston was shot in the left hand by some playmates who were shooting at mice in an old barn.

Seeding will commence on the high ground the latter part of the week, the past few days of warm wind and sunshine having dried the land very fast.

The Bank of Echo was opened by Griffith, Smith & Co., of Sleepy Eye, Minn., with a capital stock of $10,000. J. B. Lorge is cashier.

Andrew Olson, who was struck recently by a falling ore bucket in one of the mines on the Mesaba, died. This is the first fatal accident on the new range.

Five members of the Sleepy Eye Mill company purchased the Marshall River mills, paying $50,000 for it. They will assume charge of it May 1.

Asage Rasaaen, a young farmer living in Blackhammer, near Caledonia, committed suicide by hanging. He leaves a widow and two children.

John H. H. Canfield, son of Hon. Thomas H. Canfield, one of the early directors of the Northern Pacific railroad, died at Lake Park after an illness of forty hours of spinal meningitis.

Patrick Kelly was bailed out of jail at Albert Lea, where he had lain for nearly a week, charged with an attempt to shoot an officer. He got out in time to attend his father's funeral.

Lyon county's quota to the world's fair fund will be speedily raised. Supt. Hunt arrived at Marshall from Tracy, where he secured the pledge for one-half the county's apportionment and Marshall will readily raise the balance.

Albert Quieltner, a 14-year-old lad was arrested at Anoka, on a warrant of a Mr. Sawyer charging the boy with stealing a horse from his barn and trying to sell it. The culprit was brought to Anoka and lodged in jail.

Miss Brule was found in the river at Crookston. Neighbors searched for her the night previous. Her parents reside near Gentilly, in this county. Coroner Shepard did not think an inquest necessary as the death was evidently accidental.

An unknown man was found squeezed in between telegraph poles loaded on a flat car on a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul freight train that arrived at Winona, the other morning. The man, who was about 22 years of age, had been dead about 15 hours. He was badly mangled.

A North Branch Special says: Seeding in this section nearly finished. A large acreage of new ground has been broken last fall and this spring. More grain has been sown this season than formerly. The potato crop will have about the same acreage as last year.

All the present saloon keepers of Litchfield have decided to abide by the law, as interpreted by the attorney-general, and close their saloons April 24, 20 days after election. All have made applications for new licenses, which will no doubt be granted.

The new portion of the Imperial mill at Duluth was started and is operating successfully. It has a capacity of 3,500 barrels daily, and with the older portion of the mill that has been in operation about four years, gives the mill a daily capacity of 6,000 bbls.

B. C. Sanborn, the editor and founder of the Madelia Times paper, that has existed under his guidance for fifteen years or more, was convicted after a four day's trial, of cruelty to animals and fined $10 and costs. The charge was starvation and lack of shelter to a horse.

J. H. Dobbell, of Pine City, who was reported missing, is supposed to be drowned. The boat was found at the mouth of the Mission creek, 2½ miles from here. One seat was torn out and the boat capsized. His companion and hired man, named Frank, is also missing. The river will be dragged.

The Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. of Minnesota will hold their annual session at the State Capitol, St. Paul, May 3, 4 and 5. The governor has kindly tendered the use of the hall of the house of representatives for the meeting. This rapidly increasing order now numbers close on to 10,000 members in this state.

Sam Dougherty, fifty years old and single, a laborer in Paulsen's sawmill, at Park Rapids, was found near the railroad track in a dying condition from a blow on the head. He was taken to Wadena by the train crew, where he died in a few hours. Later circumstances indicate foul play.

John Endres of Verndale was found dead on the Northern Pacific track at Detroit. Sheriff Smith had him in charge for forging his father-in-law's name, and as the train was approaching the station he either jumped or threw himself from the train. He was an old resident of Detroit, and leaves a widow and two children.

The Seventh Annual Encampment of Minnesota Division, Sons of Veterans, will be held at Worthington, June 21-22. This excellent order has gained a wonderful growth during the past year, and if the deep interest taken in its welfare by the officers and members goes for anything, it will not be long till it will have advanced to the front rank of fraternal orders. It is expected that there will be a large gathering at the encampment.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

At a public meeting at Howard, citizens pledged a carload of wheat for the Russian sufferers.

It may be safely said for the first time this season that seeding has actively begun in the entire Jim Valley. The acreage will be largely increased in many localities.

Many farmers began seeding wheat at Harrison in February and it is not all sown yet.—Land is advancing in value rapidly, owing to the prosperous outlook and the number of land buyers who are arriving daily.

Fred Larson, a young man, met a fearful death near Webster. In an effort to separate two vicious dogs who were fighting, a man named Olson, who was using the handle of a pitchfork on the dogs, drew back and one of the tines struck Larson just below the brow and above the ball of the right eye, penetrating the brain.

James Everett came very near death at Watertown. He was agitating a soda fountain which had been charged when it exploded, injuring him severely, but not dangerously. One piece of the fountain made its exit through an open doorway and was fifty yards from the scene of the explosion.

A Miller Special says Sowing grain is now in full blast again, although the ground is in a moist condition for the work. The scarcity of farm help is quite a drawback to the rapid advancement of the work, and it will be the first of May before all the wheat is sown.

Prof. James E. Todd has been elected to the chair of geology and mineralogy, left vacant by Prof. G. E. Culver. Prof. Todd previously occupied the chair of natural sciences at Tabor college, Iowa. He has also filled the chair of geology at Beloit. Few, if any other, geologists have had the practical field experience in South Dakota geology enjoyed by Prof. Todd.

The Sisseton reservation boom is by no means over, although the rush for land is about over. A town site fever epidemic has taken possession of a great many, and numerous are the prospective fortunes of the boomers. At present indications are that the liveliest town will be at the crossing of the Milwaukee road and the proposed Sioux City, Watertown & Duluth.

NORTH DAKOTA.

A Grand Forks bank cashier embezzles. He attributes his downfall to gambling.

Executive Manager Tyler, of the state world's fair board, spent a day at Jamestown recently working up interest in the state exhibit.

The working of the industrial school at Fort Totten is being investigated by Supervision of Indian Schools Ansley, and testimony is being taken at Devil's Lake.

An Edinburgh special says: Seeding is in progress, having commenced. The soil is in good condition. The acreage will be about two-thirds that of last year, as but little plowing was done last fall.

The Normal School Board, in session at Valley City recently accepted the designs and plans of W. B. Hancock, of Fargo, for the new normal school building to be built here. Mr. Hancock is to superintend the work.

At the school election at Grand Forks, D. Lay was relected member at large. The board of directors are: James Elton, Second ward; J. D. Bacon, Fourth ward; W. L. Wilder, Sixth ward.

Roadmaster McNamara, of the Northern Pacific, has been arrested at Grand Forks on a charge of falsifying his pay rolls, drawing money for fictitious employes and forging signatures to the pay roll, pocketing the proceeds. He is in custody at Pembina. He is said to have made a full confession.

Heavy immigration still continues. The Great Northern is carrying loaded trains. The Northern Pacific also is doing a heavy business. Settlers are scattering out among the small towns west of Grand Forks. A large party from Indianapolis, Ind., passed through to take government homesteads in Towner county.

WISCONSIN.

Property valued at $100,000 is burned at Kenosha, Wis.

A 10-year old daughter of James E. Cornwell, living three miles north of Downing burned to death while playing with fire during intermission at school.

Rodin, a photographer, living at West Superior, was killed on the Eastern Minnesota road, fifteen miles south of this city, County Supervisor P. J. Ryan's residence at Durand, was totally destroyed by fire. His wife was alone with small children at the time. The origin is unknown. Loss over $2,000.

The home of A. D. White, the agent for the Singer Sewing Machine company at Brandon, was entered by thieves while the family was at church and $1,000 in money stolen.

Albert W. Weisbrod, a prominent lawyer of Northern Wisconsin, and one of the attorneys in the celebrated state treasury cases, died at Oshkosh suddenly.

Two children were poisoned by eating something they picked up on the street, which is supposed to have been strychnine, as both died in a short time of convulsions. One was five and the other six years of age.

The wife of Theodore H. Specht, of the firm of Specht, Crœnen & Co., carriage manufacturers, of Milwaukee, presented her husband with three babies, two boys and a girl, weighing exactly six pounds each. All are doing well.

A row boat was found near the shore in Green lake Dartford containing the dead body of a boy, aged fifteen, the son of the wealthy owner of "Sunnyside," one of the finest summer houses on the lake. The lad had just breathed his last. He had evidently been killed by the accidental discharge of his gun.

Wm. Bortel, who tried to get out of Barron county with a livery team, was captured at Eau Claire by Deputy Sheriff Deitz, who returned with him and the team.

IOWA.

A number of prominent capitalists of Dubuque organized the Dubuque Life Insurance Company recently. The details are not yet perfected.

A man named Kellsey was fatally injured at Iowa Falls by being caught in a cog at the bottle works. The engine could not be stopped in time.

The corner stone of the new Hardin county court house, which will cost $75,000, was laid with appropriate ceremony. Hon. G. W. Ball, of Iowa City, will deliver the address.

Charles Blackman, a cattle thief who for five years has eluded officers of the law has been captured and placed in jail at Creston. There are several indictments pending against him for wholesale cattle stealing.

Vac Adamel, is held in bonds of $1,000 at Cedar Rapids to answer to the charge of attempting to rape Mrs. Hosik, a prominent Bohemian lady. Adamel is married, but it is claimed he has another wife living in Prague.

Workmen while digging down a bank in the eastern part of Cedar Rapidi, unearthed the skeleton of a man with a broad-brimmed hat on his head, a silk tie around his neck and a part of a vest. There is no clue as to who it is.

William Stackhouse, a German, while engaged in erecting a windmill tower seven miles west of Eldora, was killed. He was at the top of the shaft and fell, killing him almost instantly. He lived at Hubbard, on Chicago & Northwestern railroad.

The federal inspection of beef went into effect at the slaughter house of E. Haakinson & Co., and 50 head of cattle and 260 head of sheep were tagged out. It is expected that pork inspection will begin soon.

It has just been reported at Des Moines that a farmer named Cockerham, living six miles north, has killed his wife by shooting her. The couple have had trouble and were not living together. He had threatened to kill her before. There are no particulars.

Herbert Davy, the 14-year-old son of Geo. Davy, a prominent citizen of Earlville, Delaware county, committed suicide by hanging himself in his father's barn. The boy appeared to be in his right mind and was unusually cheerful.

ALMOST A CURE-ALL.

The Praises of the Humble Onion Sounded by a Devotee.

They are invaluable for soup. They are blood purifiers. A liberal use of them is recommended as a cure for boils, and they tend to make the complexion clear and the face free from pimples. The children of those nationalities who eat them most largely noticeably escape that bane of childhood worm. Their use is beneficial to the digestive organs, they are excellent in diseases of the bladder and kidneys, are of benefit in liver complaints, and their power for good in lung troubles is well known. They are the best cure for insomnia.

A favorite remedy for a cough is a syrup made by alternating slices of raw onion with white sugar. Cut a large onion, horizontally, into thin slices, put one in a dish, sprinkle sugar over it, then add another slice of onion, building it up thus by layers until all are used. Cover the dish. About once in three hours a teaspoonful of syrup will have formed, which should be taken at intervals of about this length, throughout the day.

Hot poultices made of onions and mixed with goose oil, have been used advantageously in croup. Roasted onions are used sometimes bound to the feet and placed upon the chests of the little ones suffering from the effects of a cold. Placed raw upon a cloth, then beaten to a pulp, bandaging with this the throat and well up over the ears, they have given relief in cases of diptheria.—Good Housekeeping.

BROUGHT ITS OWN ANSWER.

Remarkable Coincidence Concerning Two Letters That Went to Sea.

Among the stories of extraordinary coincidences, writes the London correspondent of the Leeds Mercury, not the least curious is the history of a letter, for accuracy of which he can vouch. A short time ago a lady in London wished to write to a friend in America, whose address she did not know. The only means she had of procuring the address was to write to a mutual friend, who also lived in America. This she accordingly did, and the letter was duly dispatched. The ship which carried the letter was wrecked, and the mails for a time lost. They were eventually recovered and brought back to England, the letters now much damaged by sea water, being returned through the dead letter office to the senders.

The letter in question was sent back to the lady, who naturally examined it minutely. To her surprise she found that another letter had become closely stuck to it. Holding up the two-fold missive to the light, she deciphered the address on the one which was stuck to her own. It was a letter addressed to the friend to whom she had wished to write, and to discover whose whereabouts her own letter had been dispatched. Her letter thus literally brought back its own answer.

Those Hyperbolical Southerners.

Three pupils of the Marseilles School of Art were chatting together in the Cannebiere. Said one of them:—"Look here, my friend, the other day I painted a little deal board in imitation of marble with such accuracy that, on being thrown into the water, it immediately sank to the bottom."

"Faugh!" said another. "Yesterday I hung my thermometer on the easel supporting my view of the Polar Regions. It fell twenty degrees below freezing-point."

"All that is nothing," remarked the third, in conclusion. "My portrait of Marquis De la Camargue is so life-like that it requires to be shaved twice a week."—Le Masque de Fer.

His Eye Was Cold.

"Ah, yes," she murmurs, "you say that you love me. But I find nothing in your eyes but coldness."

"No, you wrong me. What I say I feel—so deeply."

"My dear, you don't look it."

"Tell me, dearest, tell me that you can love a man with a glass eye!"

Then she fainted.

SPOONS AND FORKS.

Their History from the Time of Primitive Man to the Present Day.

The implements of the table is the subject of a charming article in the current number of the Revue de Famille. Plates, tumblers, knives, spoons, forks, and salt-cellars are called upon to give an account of their creation, or rather of their evolution. The plate comes first, and a curious story is told of the first china plates, which, in the dark middle ages, arrived in Europe from the east. As soon as the dainty ware with its curious hieroglyphics made its appearance rumors became current that if a poisonous substance was put upon them their whiteness became immediately clouded, and, as the fear of being poisoned was very great among the rulers, the china plates were substituted for the more ancient test of dipping the tooth of a serpent or a piece of a horn of a unicorn into the food. This fear of poison prevailed to such an extent that it became the custom to bring padlocked boxes of the table, which were opened the moment dinner was served, and which everybody kept his own knife and spoon. Thus Saint Simon writes: "The king of England sat down with the queen on his right and our king on his left. They all had their padlocked boxes by their side." But long before the aristocratic dinner ware of the Chinese and Japanese came across the sea wooden and metal plants had been in use, which had slowly developed from a perfect flatness into the shapely sauces or gravies from running off the flat plates pieces of bread were provided by which the fluids were sucked up, and which, after the meal, were graciously distributed among the people of more common clay.

The sovereign or grandee of the middle ages, seated in front of his flat plate, cut his food with a knife begins in the darkness of prehistoric day, when the European savage made himself axes of stone. Each century, almost each generation, tried to improve the knife, and the mediæval dinner, whose habits, like those of Gaston de Foix, were somewhat peculiar, could even indulge in using his own pocket-knife in preference to the article supplied by his host. Later the knife-handles were adorned with fanciful carvings, the music and words of church hymns were cut into them, their size and shape varied almost infinitely, and slowly they arrived at their present state of perfection.

The palm of the hand was the spoons of primitive man. Then came the reign of the shell from the seashore; but, while in ancient Rome and Greece and on the banks of the Nile the full-blown spoon this side of the Alps, even in the fifteen century. Gradually the handle grew, became flatter and more shapely, and behold, when Louis XV. reigned over France the modern silver spoon, with dainty decorations, had become de rigueur.

The vocabularies of ancient Greece have no name equivalent for the term "fork," nor do later dictionaries supply the deficiency, consequently it may be assumed that they used "Father Adam's fork," only, notwithstanding the fact that on a number of celebrated French paintings depicting scenes from Greek history or mythology, men and women are armed with forks which might have come from the shop of a modern silversmith. And so entirely was even France devoted to its manner of eating by the sole assistance of its fingers, where spoon or knife would not suffice, that the first forks brought across the mountains at the end of the fifteenth century were received with undisguised repugnance. Fruit only was eaten with forks, and when, in 1611, Tom Coryat brought some of the tridents from Italy the Britisher looked upon him in utter stupefaction and dubbed him "fursiver"—that is, the man of the fork.

A Good Failure.

A young man named McLean courted a Brooklyn maiden and they became engaged to be married. In the impetuosity of youth they forgot the maiden's mother. But the old lady didn't forget the young folks. With the perversity only known to a parent she suddenly announced the engagement off, locked the girl up in a dark room and sent word to the young man to keep out of Penn street.

The thoughtless reader may be inclined to express sympathy for the imprisoned young lady. There is no call for this pity; it was just what she wanted. She had sighed for opposition from the first. "This is too nice for anything," she said to herself; "James will rescue me." And James did make a feeble effort in that direction; that is, he called on her mother. But the mother had dealt with young men before he was born, so she told him, and she hit him, as she says, with the sharp end of a flat iron and slammed the door in his face, so that it rattled off the plastering. The young lady heard the commotion and was delighted. When he went away she whispered to herself: "He will be back soon and carry me off next time." But she was soon a sorrowful girl. A half-hour later a red-headed man with a hole in his hat and a squint in one eye rang the door bell. He was a deputy sheriff, and produced a writ of habeas corpus. The mother put the flat iron back on the range, said she recognized his authority and brought out the girl, who, after shedding a few tears, walked away to court with the horrid man. Her mother followed. In the court room the girl met her lover, but she was changed. She gazed on James G. McLean coldly. "I can never be yours," she said to him. "I would as soon think of marrying the deputy." The judge looked over his spectacles and announced that the writ was dismissed. The mother gave the young man a little custic advice, for which he did not seem to be grateful, and led her daughter away. The judge called the case of Peters vs. Peters, for absolute divorce.

We cannot help rejoicing over the failure of the habeas corpus. We look on the writ of habeas corpus as the thin edge of the wedge which will eventually throw courtship into the hands of the grand jury. It should be fought at every turn. The man who carries on courtship with a lawyer and the county sheriff must be put down.—New York Tribune.

Ventilating Cool Rooms.

The oject of ventilation is to keep the cellar cool and dry, but this object often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead the cellar is made warm and damp. A cool place should never be ventilated unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or at least as cool as that, or very little warmer. The warmer the air, the more moisture it holds in suspension. Necessarily the cooler the air, the more the moisture is condensed and precipitated. When a cool cellar is aired on a warm day the entering air, being in motion, appears cool, but as it fills the cellar the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture is condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls, and may often be seen running down them in streams.

Then the cellar is damp, and soon becomes moldy. To avoid this, the windows should only be opened at night, and late—the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful; it is as pure as the air of midday, and really drier. The cool air enters the apartment during the night and circulates through it. The windows should be closed before sunrise in the morning, and kept closed and shaded during the day. If the air in the cellar is damp it may be throughly dried by placing in it a peck of fresh lime in an open box. A peck of lime will absorb about seven pounds or more than three quarts of water, and in this way a cellar or milk-room may soon be dried, even in the hottest weather. —Colman's Rural World.

Ants and Butterflies.

In the last number of the journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, Mr. Lionel de Niceville describes the manner in which the larvæ of a species of butterflies are cultivated and protected by the large, common black ants of Indian gardens and houses. As a rule, ants are the most deadly and inveterate enemies of butterflies, and ruthlessly destroy and eat them whenever they get a chance, but in the present case the larvæ exude a sweet liquid of some sort, of which the ants are inordinately fond, and which they obtain by stroking the larvæ gently with their antennæ. Hence the great care that is taken of them. The larvæ feed on a small, thorny bush of the jungle, and at the foot of this the ants construct a temporary nest.

About the middle of June, just before the rains set in, great activity is observable on the tree. The ants are busy all day running along the branches and leaves in search of the larvæ, and guiding and driving them down the stem of the tree towards the nest. Each prisoner is guarded until he is got safely into his place, when he falls into a doze and undergoes his transformation into a pupa. If the loose earth at the foot of the tree is scraped away, hundreds of larvæ and pupæ in all stages of development, arranged in a broad, even band all round the trunk, will be seen. When the butterfly is ready to emerge, in about a week it is tenderly assisted to disengage itself from its shell, and should it be strong and healthy is left undisturbed to spread its wings and fly away. For some time after they have gained strength they remain hovering over their old home. —The Naturalist.

Old Newspapers in the Household.

The real value of old newspapers about a house is fully comprehended by but few. Many people in wrapping up woolen goods to put away for the summer—a something that must soon be done for the coming season—use clear brown paper. Old newspapers are far preferable, for the ink on them has been observed to be very obnoxious to moths, insects, etc. A great benefit can also be derived by placing a layer of old newspapers upon the carpet paper spread under carpets, as it is a preventive to incroachments by vermin, which is so often the case. Another useful attribute of paper not generally known is for preserving ice in a pitcher of water. Fill the pitcher with ice and water, and place in the center of a piece of paper, then gather the paper up together at the top, and twist the ends tightly together, placing a strong rubber band around the coil to hold it close, so as to exclude the air. A pitcher of ice water treated in this manner has been known to stand over night with scarcely a perceptible melting of the ice.

The Insurance-Man and Chinaman.

A well-known insurance-man walked into a Chinese laundry on Fulton Street the other day and after looking at two Mongolians in the shop addressed the elder of the two.

"Say, John, I'm an insurance man come to look over your house.'

"Um?"

"Me insurance, want lookee over house."

"Um?"

"Oh, you know very well what I mean. I'm an insurance man and I want to look over your place to see that it is properly protected against fire."

"Um?"

"I want to go through your place for the insurance company."

"Me no tell."

"Say, don't you understand English?"

"Don't know."

"Don't know?"

"No."

"Me topside up down housee go through all same Hong Kong insulance. Do you understand that?"

"Don't know."

"Don't know, blank you?"

"No."

"Me Melican man, suppose fire burn Chinaman, give money, insulance, see? So we come here to go topside up tlough laundry look and see no fire burn, you no let me go tlough me no gives de money."

"Don't know."

This continued for fifteen minutes and the insurance man worked himself into a frenzy of excitement and talked pigeon English like a Canton merchant. Suddenly he was startled by hearing a voice behind him say.

"What do you want, anyway?"

Turning, he saw that it was the second Chinaman who had addressed him.

"You're a cuckoo!" was all the insurance man had spirit enough to say.

He went though the premises, and as he was going out the Chinaman who didn't understand English asked him:

"Well, how did you come out?"

"You're a cute Chinaman," said the insurance man.

"Me cute enough," said the Celestial, his features expanding into a broad grin.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Marvelous Clock.

The tower of the public buildings now in course of erection at Philadelphia is to be provided with a clock which, for size alone, will be one of the marvels of the world. The center of the dial (twenty-five feet in diameter) will be 351 feet above the street. It is caculated that it will take a year to place the clock machinery in the tower after the building shall have been completed. The bell is to weigh between twenty thousand and twenty-five thousand pounds and will be second in weight to the great Montreal cathedral bell, which weighs 28,000 pounds, and it is caculated that its peal will be heard even to the most distant parts of the city. Chimes similar to those of Westminster clock will be used, ringing at the quarter, half, three-quarter, and hour. To distinguish the time at night the dial will be illuminated by electricity, so that the position of the hands can be seen from any point in the city. The minute hand is to be twelve feet and the hour hand nine feet in length, while the Roman figures on the dial will measure two feet eight inches in length. A steam-engine will be placed in the tower to wind up the time-piece each day.—Iron.

Postage Stamps Good Until Used.

Persons having old postage stamps sometimes think they are rendered worthless by the issue of new ones. This is not so. The only obsolete stamps are those of the issues of 1847 and 1851, very few of which are now in existence in the north, and these are generally worth more than their face value for collectors. The issues of 1861, 1869 and 1870 are as good in the payment of postage as the new issues. The reason the issues of 1847 and 1851 are not accepted is because large amounts of these were outstanding in the south at the time of the rebellion, and the present holders of them probably secured them without rendering an equivalent to Uncle Sam.—Hartford Courant.

Lightning Strokes Statistics.

The statistics of lightning strokes in Germany during the past twenty-six years have been investigated by Herr Kastner, who shows that the anual number of cases has more than doubled in that time. In 1889 there were no fewer than 1, 145 strokes. They are most frequent in the hottest months of the year, June and July, and in the hottest hours of the day or those following them (from 3 to 4 p. m.) It appears that the thunderstorm proceed from the hills, and the parts of their course most liable to be struck are woodless and flat places, valleys of rivers and low meadows, near lakes, while wooded and hilly districts generally escape. This last deduction is hardly in accordance with our popular ideas on the subject.—London Globe.

CROOKSTON, - - - MINN

In Brazil an army officer who criticizes the Administration is dismissed from the services. It would be very sad if that sort of thing were to become Pan-American.

It has been decided to have Dr. Pierson remain at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in London, Spurgeon's Church, for five years, at an annual salary of $6,000. Dr. Pierson expects to visit America this summer.

Ward McAllister ha written an article for an eastern paper on his experience as a farmer. The article shows that Mack didn't have half the success running a farm that he does running New York's 400.

Mr. Gladstone is the owner of the largest lead pencil in the world. It is the gift of a pencil maker at Keswick, and is thirty-nine inches in length. In place of the customary rubber cap it has a gold cap. Its distinguished owner uses it for a walking stick.

Queen Victoria's appetite, always a matter of envy among her more delicate intimates, is said to be absolutely unimpared and remarkably halcyon and healthy, as it were, for a woman whose 73rd birthday is so near.

W. O. Fishback sassed the Circuit judge of his city, Terre Haute, in his paper; the judge sassed back with his little county jail and a thirty-day sentence for contempt. This is the freedom of the press mocked and the santicity of the judicial ermine soiled. But still honors are easy. Mr. Fishback is still sassing.

A man was guillotined in Switzerland the other day for assaulting and murdering a school teacher. It was the first execution in Switzerland for twenty-five years, capital punishment having been abolished in 1867, and that method of inflicting punishment having been resumed only recently.

The first female knights are said to have been women who stoutly defended Tortosa against the Moors in 1149, and were rewarded with large immunities for themselves and their descendants. When Edward III. founded the Garter he bestowed the robes and badges on his Queen and on the wives and daughters of the other knights.

Whitman and Lowell were both born in the same year, and the death of the one has been closely followed by the death of the other. The two men were totally unlike and probably were mutually appreciative. Yet our English critics frequently couple Lowell and Whitman together as the two greatest American poets.

There is a very strong dislike to the bat among the peasants of south Germany. A feeling of disgust and fear takes possession of the farmer who finds bats in his chimney, not only because he believes the creatures will feed upon his pork that hangs in the smoke, but because bats are regarded as unlucky and bring poverty and misfortune.

According to the school statistics of Finland there are this year 4,293 pupils attending the male schools and 1,567 the female schools. The population of Finland is 2,200,000, of which 200,000 are Swedes with a small admixture of other nationalties. To judge by the languages which the school children speak, the proportion of education is very unequally divided between the native Finns and there Swedish neighbors.

Evidently the Navy Department has been pleased with the results of the experiments which it has been conducting at Indian Head with cellulose. It is announced that orders are to be issued to contractors at navy yards to pack the exposed parts of the new ships with this material. This cellulose possesses the quality of immediately swelling after it has been penetrated by a shot, thus preventing an inrush of water. Ships so protected will not sink when armor has been penetrated by shells, and in this way, it is believed, they can be made much more effective for service.

Hypnotism at last has been recognized by the law as having an existence. Its indiscriminate and improper practice has just been forbidden by law in Belgium. It is admitted that in medical hands it is a valuable agency for people afflicted with nervous and cerebral disorders but that in unscrupulous hands the control of one individual over another is so great that innocent persons may be compelled to commit crimes. The law provides that any one using hypnotism without a physician's diploma shall be fined and imprisoned.

CATTLE FILCHING.

On This Charge Is a Nebraska Ex-Sheriff Arrested at Rapid City.

Accused of Being the Head of a Dangerous Gang of Cattle Thieves.

Rapid City, S. D., Special, April 25.—Yesterday Deputy United States Marshal Mathieson arrested John G. Little, for four terms sheriff of Cherry county, Neb., on a charge of cattle stealing. Little, it is claimed by the officeals, has been the leader of the worst gang of cattle thieves operating between the Indian reservations and the Northern Nebrasda towns. It is asserted that they have stolen and shipped hundreds of cattle to Chicago, but it has heretofore been impossible to fasten a case upon or arrest Little. The particular charge on which he was arrested is stealing seventy-two head from the heard on the Rosebud reservation belonging to Slaven of Kansas City, the agency beef contractor. They were driven into Nebraska and shipped to Chicago. Deputy United States marshals and Indian police are now in pursuit of the other members of the gang.

Little's arrest was kept secret yesterday, in order that they should not take warning and skip the country. It will break up the largest and most audacious gang of cattle thieves in this part of the country. Little's arrest was only accomplished after much planning and considerable stratagem, but bloodshed is expected before all are captured. United States District Attorney Sterling will return in a few days to personally attend to these cases.

DISTURBED AT THEIR WORK.

Omaha Policemen Encounter Jack Murray and His Gang—Murray Captured.

Omaha, Neb., April 25.—Two Omaha policemen disturbed a gang of safe-blowers operating in the bank district of the city just before daylight, and 100 shots were exchanged. Officers Haze and Hudson were standing at Thirteenth and Williams streets when they noticed some black shadows skulking suspiciously along the shady side of an adjacent bank building and sank out "Halt!" A volley of pistol shots was the answer, and four men sprang from the wall and broke away down the street, firing their pistols as they ran, the officers returning the fire. The fugitives disappeared in the darkness. A trail of blood along the sidewalk told that some one had been hit, and the officers followed the scent. A short distance down the street a pool of blood showed where the wounded man had rested. Under the sidewalk here the officers found a fine revolver and burglar's quill and drill. A little further down they halted a man who gave the name of Schultz and who came tearing down the street like a race horse. He said he had been awakened by the groans of a man whom he found lying on his doorstep, and who said he had been injured in a fall from a train and wanted a carriage to take him to a hospital. It was Jack Murray, an expert safe blower, train robber and all-round thief. He had a bullet through his leg and was carried to the station on a stretcher. Murray and his gang are no strangers to the police of Omaha. He has served time in the penitentiary at Jefferson City, Mo. A few weeks ago on North Sixteenth street he fired in the face of officers and made his escape. Six years ago he was with what was known as the Cook gang, and during a brush with the police a bullet from his revolver passed through Capt. Cormack's coat. The city is being scoured for his pals, of whom he refuses to say a word, though with all the shots which were fired the officers think that some of them must be carrying lead mementos o. their escapade.

A THREAT EXECUTED.

A Utah Man Kills His Niece and Fatally Shoots Himself.

Salt Lake, Utah, April 25.—News was received to-night of a terrible tragedy at Park City, Utah. As a young lady, Miss Grace Fuelling, was walking along the railway track conversing with a young man named Paradise, the young lady's uncle, Mr. Trottman, dogged their footsteps. Making a circuit, he got ahead of them and hid in the bushes. As the pair got opposite Trottman jumped out and shot the girl twice, once in the head and once in the back. She died instantly. Then Trottman, realizing the enormity of his crime, sat down beside the body of his niece and shot himself in the head. He is not dead, but has not recovered consciousness, and is expected to die at any moment. Five months ago the girl absented herself from home and her family thought the act was on account of Paradise, though no criminality was suspected, but her uncle, Trottman, told her if she had any more relations with Paradise he would shoot her. To-day he fulfilled his threat.

KILLED IN A ROW.

Three Men Slay One Another—Two of Them Kidnapers.

Fairmont, W. Va., April 25.—Three men were killed here last evening in a drunken row. Two days ago three tramps who had kidnaped two boys from Saginaw, Mich., came to Fairmont and camped near town, keeping the boys in confinement. Last evening the gang was joined by a man named Tracy of Dunbar, Pa. A row was started, and the gang turned their pistols on one another. Tracy was killed, one tramp was shot through the left breast, and another had his jugular vein cut. The boys gave the alarm.

Looking Out for O'Brien.

Montreal, April 25.—The Montreal police have received a notice from the New York police to keep a sharp lookout for Bunco O'Brien, the noted confidence man who escaped from custody and is believed to have made his way to Canada. Detectives to-day found what they think is a clue to his presence in Montreal and are still working on it. If arrested here he can be extradited.

Financial Education.

Philadelphia, April 25.—The committee appointed by the American Bankers' association at the last meeting in New Orleans to select someone to investigate the methods of business education in Europe has invited Prof. Edmund J. James, of the Wharton School of Finance and Economy, University of Pennsylvania, to undertake the work. Prof. James will make a thorough study of English, French, Italian and German methods of financial education and deliver an address on the subject at the next meeting of the association at San Francisco. His full report will afterward be published by the association.

BELGIUM'S CONSTITUTION.

The Country Much Agitated Over the Question of Revision.

Brussells, April 25.—All classes in Belgium are on the qui vive over the question of constitutional revision. The present constitution is the only one Belgium ever had. It was adopted soon after the declaration of independence of the kingdom in 1831, and though at that time its liberality was far in advance of that of any other form of government in Europe, and the franchise was given to 120,000 citizens, the lapse of sixty years has wrought a great change in this respect. Other nations have been extending their franchises, while the constitution has remained unaltered. Tuesday next in the chamber of deputies the question of revision will be voted upon. King Leopold will then dissolve the chambers, and new elections will be held under the provisions of this same constitution. The bourgeoise will make a desperate effort to secure the election of conservative candidates pledged to alter the franchise as little as possible. The revision of the constitution will be the sole business before the next chambers. When the work is completed the king will again dissolve parliament and another election will take place, this time under the new or revised constitution. The working men, among whom many are socialists, demand that the franchise be extended to at least 1,300,000, and perhaps to 1,500,000. They are very much in earnest, and will make trouble if their views are not well met. King Leopold is very liberal in his ideas and hopes for a wide extension of the franchise. He is also anxious to have a clause inserted in the revised constitution allowing him to appeal to the people whenever he cannot come to an agreement with his cabinet. Most of the ministers are opposed to this innovation, which, they argue, will put a dangerous power in the hands of monarchs, and will in the end react unfavorably upon him, by reason of a right which the people would feel had ought to be appealed to on trivial questions.

THE MISSING JUDGE.

Belief That Judge Marr of New Orleans Is No Longer Among the Living.

New Orleans, April 25.—In spite of the most persistent search on the part of the friends, not a single clew has yet been found as to the whereabouts of the venerable Judge Marr. The last information of him was on Tuesday evening, when he was seen walking along the river bank in the vicinity of Carrollton. There are none now who believe that the judge is alive. If he had sought shelter at any of the cottages near Carrollton some information as to his whereabouts would have come long since to relieve the anxiety of his heart-broken family. It was believed by many that Judge Marr had wandered away intentionally in the hope of escaping the importunities for the reprieve of Murderer Deschamps, and proposed remaining in hiding until after the execution or until the day set for it had passed. Now that Friday has come and gone and the jurist has still failed to materialize, all hope of his return has been abandoned by those who clung to the belief that he was still alive. The family and friends of Judge Marr are sparing no pains or expense to discover something about him that will tend to relieve their terrible anxiety. Perhaps the muddy waters of the Mississippi will give up their secret in a few days and clear away the mystery.

FORTUNATE MISFORTUNE.

Marvelous Escape of a Train Load of People From Death.

Kent, Ohio, April 25.—Passengers on Erie Train No. 5 brought the news of an odd accident that happened to the train at Salamanca, N. Y., early this morning. It was about 3 o'clock and the train was rounding a curve just east of the city, when it struck a heavily loaded coal car which projected over toward the main track. It caught the corners o. the coaches and tore out the entire sides of each one of them. All of the cars were vestibuled, and many of them were sleepers filled with people, yet not a single passenger was injured. The private car of First Vice President Thomas containing himself and several other officials of the road was attached to the rear of the train, and it was the only one that was not badly crippled. As it was, one corner of it was torn off. The two hundred passengers all tumbled out in their night clothes and there was great excitement for a while. No. 5 is known as the vestibuled flyer and runs from New York to Chicago. It was delayed about two hours while a train of day coaches was made up and the journey continued.

Let the Hammer Slip.

Farmington, Minn., Special, April 25.—A serious accident occurred here yesterday. Some boys were playing, one of their number having a shotgun. One of the boys, John Finn, in lowering the hammer let it slip from his fingers, when the weapon was discharged, the charge from the gun striking Scott Kingsley in the back of the head, just above the ear. The boy is still alive, but cannot survive. He is thirteen years old.

He Defended Guiteau.

Baltimore, April 25.—Charles H. Reed, of counsel for Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield, is dead in this city, aged fifty-eight. Mr. Reed had made his residence in this city for the last four or five years. During the trial of Guiteau several young ladies of Baltimore were in the habit of visiting the court room, and one of them, Miss Fanny Daniels, daughter of a wealthy brewer of this city, made the acquaintance of Mr. Reed and a marriage followed in a short time after the trial.

Horsewhipped for a Turkey.

Oshkosh, Wis., April 25.—Mrs. Augusta Anklam visited the home of Mrs. Minnie Weise to recover a lost turkey. A dispute occurred, and Mrs. Anklam horsewhipped Mrs. Weise while she was held by the former's hired man, who twisted Mrs. Weise's hand so that he burst the ligaments. Both are under arrest on the charge of assault with intent to do great bodily harm.

Twenty Men Drowned.

Paris, April 25.—An official telegram from Hue, the capital city of Annam, tells of a drowning accident by which over a score of lives were lost. On April 20 a sloop, the property of the Messageries Fluviales, foundered in the river Claire and thirty soldiers aboard the vessel were drowned, together with the captain.

The Author of the "Marseillaise."

Paris, April 25.—A statue of Rouget de Lisle, who wrote the words and music of the "Marseillaise" just 100 years ago, was unveiled to day at Choisy de Roi. Ex-Minister Goblet delivered an oration. President Carnot was represented at the ceremony.

New York, April 25.—The French society L'Orphion Francaise to-night celebrated in proper manner at Tammany hall the 100th anniversary of the composition of the famous French war song "La Marseillaise," by the French officer Rouget at Strasbourg. The exercises included a concert and tableau representing the first singing of the hymn before the mayor of Strasbourg.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

Saturday, April 16.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

A bill was reported favorably to the house to-day to declare all Indian citizens who have attended school ten years at the government's expense, provided they are 21 years of age.

The house to-day embarked upon the sea of debate, the pending measure being the naval appropriation bill. Telling speeches in favor of the rehabilitation of the navy were made by Mr. Fellows of New York, Mr. Cummings of New York and Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts.

Monday, April 18.

SENATE.

Senator Vest introduced a bill providing that when the postmaster general shall be satisfied that any steamship company receiving a subsidy from the government has unjustly discriminated in its course of business against any port of the United States and has declined to deliver coffee or other imports at any of those ports, it shall be his duty to refuse to consider any proposition from the offending company to carry foreign mails of the United States.

The senate passed a bill granting to the state of California 5 per cent of the net proceeds for cash sales of public lands in that state. The amount involved is $700,000.

The Pettigrew bill authorizing the entry of lands chiefly valuable for building stone under the placer mining law passed the senate.

HOUSE.

After some miscellaneous business today, the house went into committee of the whole, Mr. Shiveley, Indiana, in the chair, on the naval appropriation bill.

After considerable discussion the committee rose and after the rejection of an amendment offered by Mr. Boutelle the bill was passed.

Tuesday, April 19.

SENATE.

In his message transmitting the Behring sea, modus vivendi convention to the senate, the president asked that immediate action be taken. The senate acceded the request and after two hour's discussion it was ratified.

The bill to amend the act of June 25, 1890, approving the funding act of Arizona, was taken up and read.

Mr. Kyle moved to strike out the words "in gold coin of the United States," and to insert in lieu of them the words "in lawful money of the United States."

It was caused by a vote of 28 by 21. The bill as amended was then passed.

HOUSE.

In the house to-day, Mr. O'Ferrall (Va.) called up the Noyes-Rockwell contested election case. He gave notice that at the end of 10 hours' debate he would demand the previous question.

Several senators entered into the discussion of the matter.

Wednesday, April 20.

SENATE.

After the usual morning business Mr. Sherman notified the senate that further examination of the Chinese immigration question had convinced the committee on foreign relations that the existing Chinese exclusion legislation would not expire till 1894, and that there was therefore no pressure for immediate action on the question. He would, however, call it up at the convenience of the senators who desired to speak on the subject.

Senator Morgan called up his silver resolutions and Senator Teller addressed the senate at some length in favor of the bill.

Mr. Cullom, from the interstate commerce committee, reported a bill to the senate directing the interstate commerce of a uniform system of automatic coupling.

A bill appropriating $50,000 for the erection of a public building at Menominee, Mich., was favorably reported to the senate.

HOUSE.

The house committee on labor ordered a favorable report on a bill limiting the hours for a day's labor.

After preliminary business the house resumed the consideration of the Noyes-Rockwell contested election case. The matter was still under discussion when the house adjourned.

Thursday, April 21.

SENATE.

The urgent deficiency bill as reported from the senate committee contains an appropriation of $7,231 to reimburse the state of Montana for the expenses of the constitutional convention.

The senate today passed the following bills:

House bill to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judical purposes; senate bill for the appointment of consuls to the Congo Free State; to amend the laws relating to the purchase of and contracts for supplies; providing for sundry lighthouses and other aids to navigation. (This bill appropriates $504,300 for a large number of lighthouses and other aids to navigation, mostly on the great lakes); to establish a military post near Helena, Mont. (appropriating $300,000.)

The house bill to prohibit, absolutely, the coming of Chinese persons into the United States was taken up for consideration in the senate today, and after considerable debate the senate adjourned without action.

HOUSE.

The house gave further consideration to the Noyes-Rockwell election contest. The debate was uninteresting.

Friday, April 22.

SENATE.

The Chinese exclusion act was up in the Senate to-day. Mr. Chandler addressed the senate and presented some testimony as to the continuous introduction of Chinese from Canada and British Columbia.

Senator Davis, of Minnesota made an address against the exclusion of the Chinese. He spoke for over an hour and was listened to by a large audience. He denounced the Cahensly scheme and complimented the Catholic hierarchy in this country for their opposition to the scheme.

At the close of Mr. Davis's address the senate went into executive session without taking any action on the bill and shortly afterwards adjoined.

HOUSE.

The Hoyes-Rockwell contest attracted a large crowd to the house to-day. The debate took up considerable time and some interesting speeches were made. Mr. Rockwell was returned to his seat by a vote of 140 to 98.

The house committee on post office and post roads ordered a favorable report upon the bill consolidating third and fourth-class mail-matter under the head of third class, and fixing rates of postage at 1 cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof.

On motion of Mr. Bacon (New York), the senate amendments to the house bill to promote the safety of national banks were non-concurred in, and a conference committee was ordered.

The house passed 13 private pension bills in committee of the whole at the evening session.

FOOD AND DAIRY COMMISSION.

Two Essentials for a Baking Powder That Will Make Perfect Bread.

The late report of the Minnesota State Food and Dairy Commission contains the result of a series of experiments. Baking powders that vary in strength before use, are unreliable and will not give even results; besides it is an indication of the use of improper ingredients in their compounding. The tests showed the strength of the leavening power of the Royal very much better than that of the others. The uniformity of strenth of all the samples of Royal tested, no matter what their age, was remarkable. Its leavening power was practically unimpaired even in the oldest specimens. The difference in the amount of leavening gas in different samples of the other brands was so great as to seriously impair their usefulness in baking. As much as 24 per cent. loss was found in samples a few months old. All the samples of Royal examined by State Chemist Drew were reported of satisfactory strength and quality.

Dr. Drew states that the "Royal" being of greater strength than any other, and possessing better keeping qualities, is the natural conclusion that it is the best baking powder made.

As errors of refraction, defects of sight of the eye are daily assuming more importance and engaging more and more attention of our most able and scientific oculists, I have made the adaptation of Spectacles a Specialty.

Certain forms of eye troubles, which were formerly looked upon as diseases of the inner covering of the eye are today relieved by scientific test of the eye by using such glasses to correct the error of refraction and accommodation as the examination will prove,

Eyes of Different Focus.

As many eyes, on careful examination, are found to be of different focus it is found to be necessary that such eyes should be fitted by a competent optician, an examination with the opthalmascope, as the ordinary test with the optometer or test types cannot be relied upon in such cases.

I correct the most difficult cases, in the various forms of Hypermetropia, or far sight; Myopia, or near sight; Diplopia, or double sight; Asthenopia, or weak sight; Amblyopia, or loss of accommodation; Presbyopia, or old sight; Astigmatism, or blurred vision; Strabismus, or cross-eyes.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Twelve and 50-100 dollars ($12.50), which became due on the first day of December, 1890, and in the payment of a like and final sum, which became due on the first day of December, 1891, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John H. Lien and Ragnhild Lien, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1888, which mortgage, together with a power of sale contained therein was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of November A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., in Book 40 of mortgages, on pages 497, 498, and 499; which said sums with interest thereon respectively at ten per cent. per annum from the first day of December, 1890, and the 1st day of December 1891, are the whole sum secured by said mortgage and remaining unpaid.

John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured; and the amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice is twenty-seven dollars ($27.00); and no action or proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number twenty-two (22) in Township one hundred and forty-eight (148) north, of Range number forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one Hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on at 11 o'clock of the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars Attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

John Milton Oliver,
Mortgagee.
C. M. Hertig,

Mississippi Valley Regatta.

CHICAGO, May 3,—The executive committee of the Mississippi Valley Amateur Rowing association has decided to hold the annual regatta at St. Joseph, Mo., on Lake Contrary. There will be a large entry list this year, including Detroit, Grand Rapids, Toronto, St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, and no doubt entries will be received from New Orleans and Salt Lake. Already the local boat clubs are getting shells in shape for this meeting. At the annual meeting of the Iowa State Amateur Rowing association Spirit Lake was selected as the place to hold this summer's regatta, on July 12 and 13.

JOHNSON FOR SECRETARY.

The Chief Clerk Mentioned for the Position in the Big Convention.

WASHINGTON, Special. May 3.—Col. Charles W. Johnson, chief clerk of the United States senate, will probably be made secretary of the Republican national convention at Minneapolis. He has already received such recommendations from members of the national committee as will probably secure for him this place. Members of the committee who have already written and assured him of their support are Payne of Wisconsin, Clayton of Arkansas, Conger of Ohio, Hyde of Massachusetts, Brady of Virginia, Fessenden of Connecticut, Evans of Minnesota, Hooker of Vermont, Cheney of New Hampshire and Pinchback of Louisiana. Besides these he has received cordial assurances from four members of the national committee who are members of the United States senate, as well as a l the Republican senators to whom he has spoken on the subject. Both of the Minnesota senators are in favor of his selection for the place and are doing what they can for him. Aside from the national committee and senatorial endorsements, the following from Maj. McKinley, who heads the Ohio delegation, is significant:

> Replying to your favor of April 25, I beg to say that I think your selection for secretary of the convention would be an admirable one, and would be glad to render you any service I can in that direction.

IN JOHNSON'S FAVOR.

One of the reasons why Col. Johnson would be well fitted for the position is his wide acquaintance with public men and his valuable knowledge of all parliamentary affairs and situations. He would be of great assistance to the presiding officer, both because he would know at sight every prominent man in the convention, and being able to assist the presiding officer in any parliamentary way on any occasion that might arise instantly without any consultation or consideration. Besides this, Col. Johnson has sufficient voice to be heard in the convention hall, and, having tried the capacity of the exposition building, where the convention will be held, knows that he can make himself heard in every part of it. As a reading clerk he will be a success in the convention. As the convention is to be held in Minnesota the people of that state will be gratified to have one of her citizens selected for this important position. One member of the committee has raised the question as to whether it would be advisable to select a Minnesota man for secretary in view of the fact that the convention is held in Minnesota; but this has little weight, as there will be assistant secretaries and assistant reading clerks chosen from outside states. But it seems to be very proper thing to select a man like Col. Johnson for chief secretary of the convention for the reason above stated. Members of the national committee were very favorably impressed with the admirable statement Col. Johnson read before the committee when he was urging upon them the selection of Minneapolis as a place of holding the convention. So far there has been no other application for the place and there is no doubt that Col. Johnson will be selected secretary of the national convention.

DEEMING TO DIE.

The Notorious Wife Murderer Found Guilty by a Jury in Melbourne.

He is Roasted by the Judge and Then Sentenced to Be Hanged.

MELBOURNE, May 3.—The trial of Deeming for the murder of his late wife, formerly Miss Mather of Rain Hill, ended to-day with a verdict of guilty, and he was sentenced to be hanged.

Deeming turned white and trembled when the judge turned toward him and passed upon him the sentence of death. The judge said that in all his experience with criminals he had never seen such a consummate wretch as the prisoner. He spoke of Deeming's shameless effrontery during the trial, and remarked that the jury had rightfully ignored the prisoner's clownish attempts to prove himself irresponsible. As the judge pronounced the words, "to be hanged by the neck until dead," Deeming gasped and tottered, but recovered himself enough to nod with assumed indifference. He then sank back in his seat. The audience in the court room applauded the verdict and sentence. Deeming was then taken back to prison.

The crown counsel contended that there was not a particle of evidence of the insanity of the prisoner, and he said that the jury ought to dismiss all such nonsense from their minds. At this point Deeming interrupted the crown counsel. It was not the law, he said, but the press that was trying him. If he could bring himself to believe he had committed murder, he would plead guilty rather than submit to the gaze of the crowd in the court room, the ugliest race he had ever seen. Some of the witnesses against him had deliberately lied. Whatever he could say would be disbelieved. His witnesses had been kept out of the way. People had sworn to seeing him where he had never been in his life. No time had been allowed him to communicate with his witnesses in England and India. For weeks together he had suffered lapses of memory. In his own mind he knew he was not guilty.

Tar and Feathers for Teed.

CHICAGO, May 3.—Dr. Cyrus Teed, the wrecker of many happy homes on the Pacific coast as well as the destroyer of harmony in the once harmonious Economite society in Pennsylvania, and who, it is alleged, left San Francisco with a squad of young women traveling under the cognomen of "Angels," was to arrive here to-day. He did not arrive, or if he did he has managed to make himself invisible to the physical vision. Perhaps it is well for Teed and his proselytes that he has made himself scarce, as the people of Washington heights, where the new Christ has purchased the old Hilliard homestead for the purpose of establishing a "Heaven," had made up their minds that a coat of tar and feathers would justifiably meet the exigencies of the case.

The Road Has the Best of It.

WASHINGTON, Special, May 3.—The Red river valley lands claimed by the Great Northern were under consideration in the senate committee on public lands to-day, but no agreement was reached, there being considerable division of opinion in the committee as to what would be the best method of procedure under the circumstances. Some of the members think the railroad company has got far the best of the situation, and there is also yet some doubt as to whether the company, under the supreme court decision, is entitled to the lands in the northern part of the state, or what is known as the lower Red river valley.

Rates on Salt.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—The interstate commerce commission has decided in the cases brought by Kansas salt companies that any advantage which inures to Michigan salt manufacturers from rates to points in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Nebraska are advantages arising from natural situation. It is held further that rates on salt to points south and southwest of Hutchinson, Kan., and St. Louis do constitute undue preference in favor of Michigan as against Kansas salt, and that they should be readjusted.

Purchased by Boomers.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Special, May 3.—One-half of the townsite of Conductor, on the west line of the Great Northern railway, has been sold to a syndicate of Kansas capitalists for $7,000 cash. The company will expend $40,000 in improving the property and erecting buildings. The syndicate is also buying land for a colony of Kansas farmers who will arrive about the 15th inst.

Clarkson Will Come.

NEW YORK, May 3.—A. B. Humphrey, secretary of the National Republican league, of which Gen. J. S. Clarkson is president, said to-day that the alarming reports published about Gen. Clarkson's health are greatly exaggerated. Gen. Clarkson will be in New York May 15 and at the Minneapolis convention as the chairman of the Republican national committee.

Cancelled Their Contracts.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, May 3.—Iowa trunk lines, the Rock Island, the Burlington and the Milwaukee, have cancelled their freight transfer contracts with the Union Pacific, having decide that it will be advantageous to transfer their own freight instead of turning it over to the latter road. The Northwestern and Wabash will continue under the present arrangement.

Chicago Roads Hesitate.

CHICAGO, May 3.—A meeting of the Chicago freight committee of the Central Traffic association was held to-day, to decide whether the rate on six h-class freight should be reduced to the rate of 20 cents per 100 pounds from Chicago to New York, to meet the action of the St. Louis lines. After some discussion it was decided to defer action until to-morrow. In the meantime advices from Peoria state that the reduced rates were put into effect from that point to-day by the Pennsylvania road in connection with the Toledo, Peoria & Western. It is now practically settled that the Chicago lines will be authorized to adopt the new basis to-morrow.

There will be a large entry list this year, including Detroit, Grand Rapids, Toronto, St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, and no doubt entries will be received from New Orleans and Salt Lake. Already the local boat clubs are getting shells in shape for this meeting. At the annual meeting of the Iowa State Amateur Rowing association Spirit Lake was selected as the place to hold this summer's regatta, on July 12 and 13.

JOHNSON FOR SECRETARY.

The Chief Clerk Mentioned for the Position in the Big Convention.

Washington, Special. May 3.—Col. Charles W. Johnson, chief clerk of the United States senate, will probably be made secretary of the Republican national convention at Minneapolis. He has already received such recommendations from members of the national committee as will probably secure for him this place. Members of the committee who have already written and assured him of their support are Payne of Wisconsin, Clayton of Arkansas, Conger of Ohio, Hyde of Massachusetts, Brady of Virginia, Fessenden of Connecticut, Evans of Minnesota, Hooker of Vermont, Cheney of New Hampshire and Pinchback of Louisiana. Besides these he has received cordial assurances from four members of the national committee who are members of the United States senate, as well as a l the Republican senators to whom he has spoken on the subject. Both of the Minnesota senators are in favor of his selection for the place and are doing what they can for him. Aside from the national committee and senatorial endorsements, the following from Maj. McKinley, who heads the Ohio delegation, is significant:

> Replying to your favor of April 25, I beg to say that I think your selection for secretary of the convention would be an admirable one, and would be glad to render you any service I can in that direction.

IN JOHNSON'S FAVOR.

One of the reasons why Col. Johnson would be well fitted for the position is his wide acquaintance with public men and his valuable knowledge of all parliamentary affairs and situations. He would be of great assistance to the presiding officer, both because he would know at sight every prominent man in the convention, and being able to assist the presiding officer in any parliamentary way on any occasion that might arise instantly without any consultation or consideration. Besides this, Col. Johnson has sufficient voice to be heard in the convention hall, and, having tried the capacity of the exposition building, where the convention will be held, knows that he can make himself heard in every part of it. As a reading clerk he will be a success in the convention. As the convention is to be held in Minnesota the people of that state will be gratified to have one of her citizens selected for this important position. One member of the committee has raised the question as to whether it would be advisable to select a Minnesota man for secretary in view of the fact that the convention is held in Minnesota; but this has little weight, as there will be assistant secretaries and assistant reading clerks chosen from outside states. But it seems to be very proper thing to select a man like Col. Johnson for chief secretary of the convention for the reason above stated. Members of the national committee were very favorably impressed with the admirable statement Col. Johnson read before the committee when he was urging upon them the selection of Minneapolis as a place of holding the convention. So far there has been no other application for the place and there is no doubt that Col. Johnson will be selected secretary of the national convention.

DEEMING TO DIE.

The Notorious Wife Murderer Found Guilty by a Jury in Melbourne.

He is Roasted by the Judge and Then Sentenced to Be Hanged.

Melbourne, May 3.—The trial of Deeming for the murder of his late wife, formerly Miss Mather of Rain Hill, ended to-day with a verdict of guilty, and he was sentenced to be hanged.

Deeming turned white and trembled when the judge turned toward him and passed upon him the sentence of death. The judge said that in all his experience with criminals he had never seen such a consummate wretch as the prisoner. He spoke of Deeming's shameless effrontery during the trial, and remarked that the jury had rightfully ignored the prisoner's clownish attempts to prove himself irresponsible. As the judge pronounced the words, "to be hanged by the neck until dead," Deeming gasped and tottered, but recovered himself enough to nod with assumed indifference. He then sank back in his seat. The audience in the court room applauded the verdict and sentence. Deeming was then taken back to prison.

The crown counsel contended that there was not a particle of evidence of the insanity of the prisoner, and he said that the jury ought to dismiss all such nonsense from their minds. At this point Deeming interrupted the crown counsel. It was not the law, he said, but the press that was trying him. If he could bring himself to believe he had committed murder, he would plead guilty rather than submit to the gaze of the crowd in the court room, the ugliest race he had ever seen. Some of the witnesses against him had deliberately lied. Whatever he could say would be disbelieved. His witnesses had been kept out of the way. People had sworn to seeing him where he had never been in his life. No time had been allowed him to communicate with his witnesses in England and India. For weeks together he had suffered lapses of memory. In his own mind he knew he was not guilty.

Tar and Feathers for Teed.

Chicago, May 3.—Dr. Cyrus Teed, the wrecker of many happy homes on the Pacific coast as well as the destroyer of harmony in the once harmonious Economite society in Pennsylvania, and who, it is alleged, left San Francisco with a squad of young women traveling under the cognomen of "Angels," was to arrive here to-day. He did not arrive, or if he did he has managed to make himself invisible to the physical vision. Perhaps it is well for Teed and his proselytes that he has made himself scarce, as the people of Washington heights, where the new Christ has purchased the old Hilliard homestead for the purpose of establishing a "Heaven," had made up their minds that a coat of tar and feathers would justifiably meet the exigencies of the case.

The Road Has the Best of It.

Washington, Special, May 3.—The Red river valley lands claimed by the Great Northern were under consideration in the senate committee on public lands to-day, but no agreement was reached, there being considerable division of opinion in the committee as to what would be the best method of procedure under the circumstances. Some of the members think the railroad company has got far the best of the situation, and there is also yet some doubt as to whether the company, under the supreme court decision, is entitled to the lands in the northern part of the state, or what is known as the lower Red river valley.

Rates on Salt.

Washington, May 3.—The interstate commerce commission has decided in the cases brought by Kansas salt companies that any advantage which inures to Michigan salt manufacturers from rates to points in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Nebraska are advantages arising from natural situation. It is held further that rates on salt to points south and southwest of Hutchinson, Kan., and St. Louis do constitute undue preference in favor of Michigan as against Kansas salt, and that they should be readjusted.

Purchased by Boomers.

Grand Forks, N. D., Special, May 3.—One-half of the townsite of Conductor, on the west line of the Great Northern railway, has been sold to a syndicate of Kansas capitalists for $7,000 cash. The company will expend $40,000 in improving the property and erecting buildings. The syndicate is also buying land for a colony of Kansas farmers who will arrive about the 15th inst.

Clarkson Will Come.

New York, May 3.—A. B. Humphrey, secretary of the National Republican league, of which Gen. J. S. Clarkson is president, said to-day that the alarming reports published about Gen. Clarkson's health are greatly exaggerated. Gen. Clarkson will be in New York May 15 and at the Minneapolis convention as the chairman of the Republican national committee.

Cancelled Their Contracts.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, May 3.—Iowa trunk lines, the Rock Island, the Burlington and the Milwaukee, have cancelled their freight transfer contracts with the Union Pacific, having decide that it will be advantageous to transfer their own freight instead of turning it over to the latter road. The Northwestern and Wabash will continue under the present arrangement.

Chicago Roads Hesitate.

Chicago, May 3.—A meeting of the Chicago freight committee of the Central Traffic association was held to-day, to decide whether the rate on six h-class freight should be reduced to the rate of 20 cents per 100 pounds from Chicago to New York, to meet the action of the St. Louis lines. After some discussion it was decided to defer action until to-morrow. In the meantime advices from Peoria state that the reduced rates were put into effect from that point to-day by the Pennsylvania road in connection with the Toledo, Peoria & Western. It is now practically settled that the Chicago lines will be authorized to adopt the new basis to-morrow.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

YOUTH AND AGE.

"O, Youth is always best!" he said,
With glowing eyes and lifted head.
"There is so much for us to win
From years that keep the sunshine in,
For every life-force we have lost
'Tis Age, the debtor, pays the cost—
O, Youth is best!" he said.

"O, Age is surely best!" he said,
With soulful eyes and silvered head.
"We rest within the sunset light,
And feel the soft approach of night;
Behind us lie the pain and strife,
And just beyond the larger life—
O, Age is best!" he said.

—Saturday Evening Post.

TRAVELING ALONE.

"I feel very uncomfortable about letting you travel alone," said Mr. A——, as he put his spouse on the northward-bound train at C——.

"Why, I have done it over and over again," said his wife languidly. She was a tall, fair woman, whose pretty face bore traces of recent illness; and, as she spoke, she passed her delicate hand, laden with costly rings, over her forehead.

"It is too vexatious, too," continued her husband, noting anxiously the gesture, "that every seat in the drawing-room car is taken. Don't you think I had better ask the conductor to look after you?"

"No, please don't Jack," answered his wife; "he would only worry me. I shall be comfortable enough, and, after all, it is only six hours before I arrive at R——, where I will meet the B——s. Good-bye, dear, and don't fret; I will wire you this evening."

After her husband left, Mrs. A—— gave a careless look at her fellow-passengers. In the seat across the aisle sat a respectable looking, ruddy-faced, middle-aged woman, whom the invalid regarded with satisfaction. A man and a woman, with a family of several children, occupied the place near the door; the rest of the car seemed empty, but as her eyes followed the line of seats, she felt a disagreeable start on finding her gaze met by the bold, direct stare of a well-dressed, sinister-looking man, who occupied the third seat in her rear. By his side sat a burly-looking giant, who, although cleanly and neatly dressed, was evidently of an inferior class. Disagreeably impressed, she knew not why, she turned around, and, opening her book, endeavored to beguile the tedium of the journey.

After a couple of hours the express stopped at ——, and here, to her regret, she saw her kind-looking neighbor leave her seat. The family party that she had noticed also hurried past with children and bundles, pushing past the new people who were coming in, and it was with a feeling of positive annoyance that she saw the two men behind her leave their place, and quietly take possession of the seats the pleasant-faced woman had left vacant.

Again the train sped on. Mrs. A—— felt quite vexed with herself on account of the uneasy, nervous feeling that gradually stole over her, and the half dread she felt of the dark, Mephistophelian-looking man who had placed himself so near her. Several times she looked toward him, feeling instinctively that his eyes were fixed upon her, and each time she never failed to find the bold and glittering orbs staring into her face.

"How absurd I am!" she said to herself, impatiently; "what harm could any one do me in a car full of people?" and she resolutely turned her back and began to read.

But, suddenly, she gave a violent start and a half-scream as she felt, rather than saw, the dreaded face bending over her shoulder, while he said: "We get out at the next station, madam."

Just at that moment the welcome sound of "Tickets!" was heard from the conductor, who was making his rounds before the train stopped. The man, to her great relief, left her immediately, but, to her surprise, walked up to the official and, drawing him aside, engaged him in earnest conversation. In spite of herself, she could not help turning around to see what her persecutor was about, although she devoutly hoped to see him leave the train, thus making it unnecessary to take any notice of his behavior. That they were talking about her was evident, for the conductor kept glancing toward her as the man spoke, and, to her annoyance, she saw him resume his seat and begin to confer rapidly with his companion.

Resolved to save herself from further trouble, she laid her hand on the conductor's arm as he passed.

"Please bend down your head," she said to him in a low voice, "that man must be out of his senses; he has been annoying me ever since we left C—. Will you please take me to the next car?"

To her utter amazement and terror, the conductor only gave her a compassionate glance, and said gently: "Madam, you are under this gentleman's charge, and he is going to take you where you will be made quite well again; I am sure a lady like you will go with him quietly."

Like a flash the frightful situation dawned upon her bewildered senses. The man was pretending she was mad, and that he, with his assistant, were taking her to an asylum. In vain she attempted an explanation; terror paralyzed her tongue, and made her quite incoherent. The horrible man smiled down upon her, and she felt in her weakness that a grewsome fate, over which she had no control, put her in his power. Her vehement protestations and sobs were regarded by the kindly conductor as so many symptoms of her malady.

Meanwhile the train was stopping. A little crowd collected around the "poor mad lady," who was protesting so vainly against her fate; and so in the broad day light, in the midst of pitying, warm-hearted people, the unfortunate woman was gently forced out of the train, put in a carriage by the two men, and driven rapidly away. More dead than alive, she finally fainted.

When she came to herself, she was alone in a strange room, lying on a sofa. All the most recent dreadful occurrences rushed over her distracted mind as she came to herself. The cause for the desperate piece of villainy was not difficult to find; her costly diamond and ruby rings, her pocket-book containing a roll of bills of several hundreds of dollars, her watch and charm, and even the little pin that held her collar—all had vanished. But, thanks to heaven, she was alone.

Tottering to her feet, she found she was in a bare, clean little room, with an open window looking out on a tranquil village street. As she opened the door and looked out into the hall, an angular, freckled-faced maiden appeared at the foot of the stairs.

"D'you feel better?" she asked, with a good-natured smile on her homely face. "Your brother, he said you'd git all right soon; he told me to tell you that he'd be back this afternoon late."

The kindly voice and the comforting sense of a woman's companionship caused the distraught, terrified creature to burst into a storm of sobs, and she brokenly told her story to the landlord's daughter, who "kep' house for pa." It naturally excited incredulity at first, but the good people believed her at last, and a telegram was sent to her husband from the nearest station.

Although the greatest efforts were made, no clew was ever found to the daring robbers. The man who drove the carriage said they engaged him to drive a crazy lady to the next village. She arrived in a faint, her natural weakness probably assisted by chloroform. Her so-called "brother" explained to the landlord that she was ill and subject to such "sinking" turns, left her in the care of the daughter, and it was all done so naturally, and apparently in such a straightforward manner, that no suspicion had been engendered in the minds of any one. Dreading the publicity, the A——s never prosecuted the matter very far, and they contrived to keep the matter very quiet; but it is well known as an actual occurrence not so very long ago.

The moral of the story is this: No delicate, nervous, and timid woman, lacking self-control and presence of mind, should be allowed to travel alone.—New York Tribune.

"OLD BOOEY."

He Came for Bones, and the Farmer's Wife Felt Insulted.

Up in a little Pennsylvania town, perched on the top of the Alleghanies, lives a patriarchal colored man known as "Old Booey," says the Youth's Companion. On the first day of the week he leads a little flock of his fellow-countrymen in their devotional exercises, expounding to them the law, with many commentaries strictly his own. The other six days he devotes to gathering bones from far and near, which, after a sufficient quantity has been accumulated, he conveys to a fertilizing factory in a neighboring city, where such wares find a ready market.

So great has been his diligence in this good work that the neighborhood long since became thoroughly picked of its bones; and all sources of possible supply are now watched most narrowly.

It happened that a farmer of the locality, being of a thrifty turn, had himself been saving such bones as came in his way from time to time, thinking that when he had secured a sizable load he would carry them to the factory. But he had at last abandoned the project, and, chancing recently to meet the old professional, he said: "Mr. Booey, there is a small pile of bones back of my barn which you can have, if you want them."

"Thank ye, sah, thank ye, sah; I'se mighty glad to get them."

He proved his sincerity by repairing almost immediately to the farmer's house. The farmer had not yet returned, and his wife, a particularly thin and rather acrimonious woman, came to the door.

"Good mawnin', ma'am," said Mr. Booey, with great courtesy.

"Well, what do you want?" she replied, a little sharply, for she was a woman who believed in wasting neither manners nor time upon those she thought beneath her.

"I'se come fuh yoh bones,"

"My what?"

"Yoh bones."

"How dare you talk to me that way?" she exclaimed, greatly incensed, for her extreme thinness was a very sensitive point with her. "You shall answer for this when my husband comes home."

"Why, ma'am, yoh husban' tole me to come aftah them. He said he got tiahd seein' 'em round, and he be glad if I cart 'em off fur fertilizing."

She stood speechless, for a moment, with amazement and rage.

"My husband sent you?"

"Yas, ma'am."

"Oh, wait till I see that man!" she exclaimed, for she had given that meek and uncomplaining person a sound rating just before he left home that morning, especially charging him with excessive fatness and laziness; and she firmly believed he had taken this way to get his revenge.

"Yas, ma'm," continued the venerable bone collector, greatly nonplussed at this unexpected reception, but still intent upon accomplishing his errand; "he say dey ain't many, and dey pooty old, and he reckon dey pooty dry; but if I put 'em 'long with the old hoss by de crick, he reckon I git a load."

Most opportunely the farmer at that moment drove into the yard, and seeing his visitor, called out; "You'll find those bones down under the big apple tree the other side of the wall."

It was a week before the farmer's wife recovered her cheerfulness.

AN INDIAN MOTHER'S GRIEF.

Pathetic Incident of a Stormy Night on a Reservation.

In the rounds of duty incident to the business of stock raising I camped one night on a little creek within the borders of the great Nez Perces Indian reservation, writes a correspondent of the Detroit Free Press. It was a cold evening in early spring, and no notes were taken of the surroundings before darkness settled over the sheltered little plat of wild meadow and brought to a close a day of hard work. There were Indian cabins of dingy, unpainted boards, and smoky old log houses up and down the river, but the peaceable owners were not astir, and I heard not a sound to denote the presence of mankind. This silence and inactivity is not unusual in the settlements of the native redman. Poor, shaggy saddle ponies were feeding about on the scanty grass. The dogs were barking in answer to the shrill notes of the howling, hungry coyotes and the echoes played from side to side of the rocky canyon. The river, too, sent up a changing rumble, rising and falling like sighs from a troubled heart. But my loneliness did not keep me from sleep. I was tired and slept soundly for several hours when I was aroused by the beating of rain drops in my face. The wind had whirled down into my sheltered cove and carried away the blanket that formed my tent. The calm, cold evening had become a blustering stormy night. I gathered my blanket about me for protection from the storm as best I could and tried to sleep again. As the wind lulled I heard a strange noise. It was the voice of someone—a child, I thought—in distress. It was dark and it would be impossible in that storm for me to prepare a light. I tried to resist the impulse that urged me to go to the relief of the one in distress, but again and again I heard the cry—someone weeping and wailing in distress. I hastily put on my clothes and started in the direction from which came the pitiful cry. I clambered over stiff, unyielding brush and cragged rocks till I reached a bare knoll that stood out from the mountains like a mound. I came in contact with what I knew to be the fence around an Indian grave. The strange cry came to me more distinctly. It was the pathetic wail of an Indian woman. I heard the same sad cry of hopelessness before I was within a few feet of her. She must have been aware of my approach, but so intense was her grief that she was not startled to such an extent that it called her mind for one instant from the dead. I turned away and left her to bear her burden with only the darkness of night and the fury of the wind to help her. When daylight came I went again to the grave. It was that of a very small child. Its heartbroken mother was the mourner whom all the world could not comfort. There was a rude fence around the little new-made grave and there were flags waving above it to frighten the wild beasts that howled so ghoulishly the evening before. The storm that came so suddenly that night was the first to beat upon the lonely resting place of the little one, and the mother came from her house near by and threw herself upon the grave beause it in some way relieved her to protect all that remained for her of her heart's treasure.

A BOY WITH A PURPOSE.

How Cornelius Vanderbilt Worked His Way Up.

Cornelius Vanderbilt's real education was gained in working on his father's farm, and in learning to sail a boat and drive a horse. He showed in boyhood the very quality which distinguished him as a man—the power of accomplishing things in spite of difficulty and opposition. When he was 12 years old his father took a contract for getting the cargo out of a vessel stranded near Sandy Hook and transporting it to New York in lighters.

It was necessary to carry the cargo in wagons across a sandy spot, says Youth's Companion. Cornelius, with a little fleet of lighters, three wagons, their horses and drivers, started from home charged with the management of this difficult affair.

After loading the lighters and starting them for the city, he had to conduct his wagons home by land—a long distance over Jersey sands.

He left the beach with only $6 and reached South Amboy penniless with six horses and three men, all hungry, still far from home, and separated from Staten Island by an arm of the sea half a mile wide, that could only be crossed by paying the ferryman [illegible].

This was a puzzling predicament for a boy of 12, and he pondered long how he could get out of it. At length he went boldly to the only inn-keeper of the place and said:

"I have three teams here that I want to get over to Staten Island. If you will lend me the money to pay the ferryman I'll leave you my best horse, and if I don't send you back the money within forty-eight hours you can keep the horse."

The inn-keeper looked into the bright, honest eyes of the boy for a moment and said, "I'll do it."

He gave the boy the money, and a horse was left in pawn, but he was redeemed within the time promised.

A Lake Underground.

An underground lake has been discovered three miles from Genesee, Idaho. It was found by a well-digger. At a depth of sixteen feet clear, pure lake water ran out over the surface for a time, then settled back to the earth's level. The most curious part of it is that fish were brought to the surface by the overflow. They have a peculiar appearance and are sightless, indicating that they are underground fish. The spring has attracted much attention, and many farmers in the vicinity fear that their farms will drop into the lake.

TAKE THE SUNNY SIDE.

Let's oftener talk of noble deeds,
And rarer of the bad ones,
And sing about our happy days,
And not about the sad ones.
We are not made to fret and sigh,
And when grief sleeps, to wake it.
Bright happiness is standing by,
This life is what we make it.

Let's find the sunny side of men
Or be believers in it;
A light there is in every soul
That takes the pains to win it.
Oh, there is slumbering good in all,
And we, perchance may wake it;
Our hands contain the magic wand;
This life is what we make it.

Then here's to those whose loving hearts
Shed light and joy about them!
Thanks be to them for countless gems
We ne'er had known without them.
Oh! this should be a happy world
To all who may partake it;
The fault's our own if it is not—
This life is what we make it.

SAUCY SALLY.

Remember to hold the fort dame! If a ship go by without sending thee her pass, fire on her. Thou knowest where the touch-hole is and the linstock; if not, call Dan to do it.

"I'll do it! I'll do it father!" shouted a sturdy little maid robed in a chintz petticoat and short gown flowered with roses as red as her own cheeks and lips, and with a quaint linen cap tied over her curling gold hair, not so closely but that here and there a ringlet escaped against the ribbon strings that was just the color of her speedwell blue eyes.

"Thou do it indeed, Miss Pert. Sampler and hornbook are thy trade. Was ever a maid so thwart as my Saucy Sally. With that Capt. Coffing caught his small daughter up in his strong arms and kissed her over and over.

It was a strange thing in those days to see a little maid so forward and so merry as Sally; but she was the only one left of seven children, and her parents loved her exceedingly; she was all that made life bright for them. War had set in between England and the American colonies, and the captain was a strong loyalist. He had been appointed to the command of the fort at Harbormouth, and when the revolution broke out, soon after the battle of Lexington; a company of volunteers surprised the fort and took the gallant captain and his family prisoners of war. In that unpleasant adventure Sally distinguished herself; she was neither frightened nor tearful, but kept her sunny, saucy ways and charmed the hearts of the "rebel crew." She amused her anxious mother with all sorts of quips and pranks, and cheered her father, who felt his position very keenly, with caresses and fantastic tricks. After a few weeks Captain Coffing was released on parole and allowed to reoccupy the fort, though not with a garrison. This treatment at the hands of the rebels embittered his dislike of them and their cause, and even their allowing his discharge on parole could not make him disloyal to the king he served, or faithless to his friends; he greatly loved and admired Governor John Wentworth, who just about the time of Captain Coffing's capture, had given great offense to the "rebels" as the British called them, was obliged to fly to Boston and put himself under the protection of the British government there. He got as far as the fort at Harbormouth without trouble, but was forced to secrete himself there for some days, till the commandant thought it safe to escort him to Boston.

At last, however, came a day—or rather a night—when it was thought best for the governor to try and reach Boston. Harbormouth was full of rebel troops, and there was much talk and rumor over Gov. Wentworth's whereabouts. So Capt. Coffing gave strict charge to his wife that no vessel should run by without due challenge and exhibition of her pass, and by midnight had slipped into a little boat at the pier-head and rowed away with his guest, leaving for garrison Mrs. Coffing, Sally, fat Dan the serving man, two maids, and the washerwoman with her three children, who had taken refuge there from the wrath of the rebels when her husband deserted to the king's troops. The very next day a stately ship came down the river, so close to the fort that Dan hailed it from the redoubt nearest the town, but the ringing challenge received no answer, the brig only shifted its helm and tacked skillfully; Mrs. Coffing saw the maneuver and said to Dan:

"Fire, fellow! It is the captain's order." Dan shook in his shoes; he was a dreadful coward.

"Deed, 'm, I darsn't do it. What if they should fire back? I'm afeard of my life. I don't see well, nytha. I've but the one eye, mum, as you know."

Sally jumped up and down in a rage.

"You big goose! You mis'er'ble man."

"There mammy, I've lit the linstock at the hearth myself. I can't reach the touch-hole, but you can!"

Mrs. Coffing seized the linstock. She knew the turn of the channel must bring the ship on its next tack very near the fort, and quick as thought the ready powder and the great gun sent its thundering summons to the reluctant vessel.

Once was enough. The startled shipmaster sent a boat in with his pass, which was duly inspected and signed, while Sally danced for joy at her mother's bravery and Dan crouched behind a parapet, shivering with terror.

But if he was afraid of his life that day, what was his terror the day after when a company of rebel soldiers marched up from Harbormouth and demanded admission to search for "the body of that noxious traitor, John Wentworth, sometimes styled governor of New Hampshire."

There was no use in resisting this demand, and Mrs. Coffing knew it was needless, but she used all the delay possible in admitting the party and offered them no aid in their search.

Sally was wildly indignant, all the more that she recognized among them Bobby Greene, a very youthful officer who had been one of the guard set over Capt. Coffing and his family during their imprisonment and who had been a devoted admirer of the saucy little tory maiden, and in spite of her usual scorn had often won a grateful smile by smuggled gifts of fruit or flowers and over all a tiny, lovely kitten that was dear still in her heart.

"You here," cried Sally, as the men filed in after their lieutenant and went up the winding stair.

"Didn't my mother tell you the dear governor was not here. Do you dare to think Madam Coffing lies?"

"Hush, Sally!" interposed her mother. "These matters are not for your meddling." While the lieutenant's fair boyish face turned red to the cap.

He made a military salute to the lady and said respectfully:

"I regret this unpleasant duty, madam, but a soldier must obey orders."

So they proceeded to ransack the building from top to bottom, but found no trace of the loyalist governor; at last they came to the cellar door, which opened on a gulf of darkness, for Saucy Sally had piled mats and rugs against the grated windows on the outside till not a ray of light could enter.

"I think, madam, I must trouble you for lights," said Lieut. Greene, lifting his cap.

"I'll fetch a candle, mammy! I'll hold it!" whispered Sally in her mother's ear.

Mrs. Coffing was astonished at this sudden change in Sally's manner, but thinking that perhaps the child wanted to atone for her previous incivility she nodded assent, and Sally, holding a blazing tallow candle, stationed herself on the stairs, the soldiers one by one filing past her. Very carefully she threw the beams of her light about the cellar till they came to a part where the ceiling was not only much lower but crossed and recrossed with great beams in order to support a platform above, on which heavy guns were mounted. As they groped toward this region, suddenly a quick blast from Sally's rosy lips put out the candle and left the party in utter darkness. Then began trouble! Heads were knocked with sharp force, feet stumbled over certain obstacles and their owners fell prostrate on the hard floor, becoming in turn traps to trip up their bewildered comrades. Loud and deep and long were the objurgations the enraged rebels uttered; louder and harder grew the knocks on the head received by those who still kept their footing, and Sally on the stairs shrieking with laughter, derided them with mocking inquiries as to whether they had the governor, and why they knocked him down so often! But she heard her mother's step coming, and skipped out of sight quickly, mounting to the highest parapet, from which she waved her little British flag over the heads of the demoralized soldiers as they struggled out, and called to the battered young lieutenant, whose bloody face and swollen nose testified to his disagreeable experience:

"Ha! ha! Bobby Greene! How d'ye like hunting governors when I hold the candle?"

Time has its own revenges; long after the war of the revolution was over and the colonies became states, it is recorded somewhere that Mistress Sarah Coffing, daughter of the late Admiral Coffing, R. N., was wedded to the gallant Captain Robert Greene, U. S. A.

I wonder if she ever held a candle for him again, or ceased to be Saucy Sally!—Detroit Sunday News.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Remember That Your Studying To-Day Will be Worth Money.

The boy who is wanted in the business world of to-day must be educated. If his parents cannot afford to give him a high school or college education he must learn to study without the aid of a teacher in the early morning before business begins and in the evening after business hours. It can no longer be truthfully said that an education is out of any one's reach.

"Our splendid school system," writes Russell Sage, "where one can study by day or in the evening, has put the priceless treasure of an education within the reach of all. The main thing, in the beginning, that I would impress upon boys is one of the great commandments: 'Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.' The boy who respects his father and mother, who treats his sisters and brothers with loving kindness, has laid a good foundation for a successful career. You will do as your parents tell you, and that certainly will be to study. Don't be in a hurry to get away from your school books. The cares and responsibilities of business life will come soon enough.

"Go to school as long as you can, and remember, every hour spent in study in your youth will be werth money to you in after life. Read good books, the bible above all. Make yourself acquainted with history. Study the progress of nations and the careers of men who have made nations great. If you have no library of your own join one of the numerous associations to be found in all cities, where good, healthful books may be obtained. Study religion, science, statecraft and history. Learn to read intelligently, so that you may turn to practical use in after life the readings of your youth. Be sure you begin right. Do not waste time in reading trashy books."

LEGENDS OF HAUNTED HILL.

One a Tale of Love and Jealousy, of Blood and Death.

Haunted Hill, in Frazier, on the road from Springville to Potterville, is an odd-looking mound which is wrapped in the mysteries of several Indian legends, says the Tulare, Cal., Times. Some of the traditions were told to us in 1874, when we first visited this region, and ever since we have endeavored to learn the true stories. The Indians are scattered and their legends are difficult to obtain; those possessed of intelligence will not or do not care to talk. But from the white men living here many years ago, and who learned to speak in the Indian language, we have gathered the partial narrative of the legends of Haunted Hill, known in the Indian tongue as "Wailing Mountain."

Two stories are told—one a tale of Indian love and jealousy, the other of a dreadful and fatal battle between the Tule River Indians and their enemies, the Mexicans residing near San Diego, in this state.

Regarding the first tradition but scanty details can be made. It is probably the older of the legends, and the time of its origin dates back ages ago, and it has been handed down from parent to child among the Tulare Indians for hundreds of years. This much only can be learned: A tribe living on the banks of the Tule, east of the hill, gave origin to the legend. Among some members of the tribe a bitter jealousy arose, having love for a source. A faction having won the affections of six women, the rivals resolved on sanguinary revenge. Abiding time and awaiting an unguarded hour, they pursued these women to the top of Wailing Mountain and murdered them. Every night, the Indians aver, the ground on the summit opens and the six women appear, only to vanish instantly. Since then no Indian will visit the hill at night.

The other legend is perhaps the more authentic. It is the one sadly told by the few surviving members of the once prosperous and numerous Tulare Indians. In brief, it is this: The Mexicans from Southern California were wont to make raids into this valley and drive away the ponies of the Indians. Armed with superior weapons, they could defy the Indians. Driven to desperation, the natives resolved to offer battle, and, if possible, drive the marauders from the valley, otherwise to crush them. Learning this, the Mexicans came in large numbers, prepared for the trial of strength. The opposing forces met in the valley at the base of the hill.

The Indians, terrified at the Mexican weapons and the slaughter among their numbers, fled to the top of the hill. There, crouching behind the many rock ledges, they made a last desperate, but ineffectual, stand. Soon the Mexicans gained the crest, when disorder again prevailed among the Indians, large numbers falling at each volley from their enemy. Only the more cowardly escaped, the real warriors dying amid the rock piles, for no quarter was asked or given. It is told that 500 Indians perished that day at the base and on the summit of this hill, which, ever since, is known to the Indians as the "Wailing Mountain." Passing the hill at night the Indians say that the piteous wailing of the slain can be distinctly heard, hence its name and its dread to all aborigines of the Tulare Valley.

WELL-THROWN.

A Snow-Ball Saves a Church From Being Burned.

On a day in January, thirty-two years ago, the people of Madison Village, Maine, were fighting fire. The west wind blew a hurricane; the tavern and adjoining dwellinghouses had already burned to the ground, and the entire village was threatened. The Congregational church stood in direct line with the fire, but the wide village green might save it.

Hundreds of anxious eyes were on the watch lest some spark or live cinder should fall upon its exposed roof and walls, which were kept drenched with water. A blazing cinder whirled high across the green, and a strong, sucking current of air carried it and held it against a clapboard of the tall steeple; held it until the dry, pitch-filled strip of wood ignited, and a brisk smoke was rising on the steeple's south side.

A groan burst from the watching crowd, says the Youth's Companion. No ladder could reach the spot, and the loved church must burn.

A red tongue of flame shot out from the blackened hole that the live cinder had charred, then—whiz went a flying snow-ball up from the crowd, a single, big moist snow-ball, that snuffed out that blaze as one snuffs out a candle.

Warren Bacon with his good right hand had quickly shaped and thrown the snow-ball, and the church was saved.

The building still stands, and the pierced clapboards on the south side of the steeple still show where the blazing cinder and then the flame gained a foothold.

FLAWING A TITLE.

Queer Real Estate Transaction at a Delinquent Tax Sale.

"Talking about funny real estate transactions," said a real estate man the other day to a New York Tribune reporter, "I think about the funniest, and certainly the most unique, took place in San Diego, Cal. It was at a delinquent tax sale, which is conducted on the principle of reducing bids.

"That is to say, the tax collector must accept the bid of the man who will pay the delinquent taxes and take the least fraction of the lot in payment therefor.

"Theoretically you might suppose a bidder wouldn't be willing to take a fraction intrinsically worth less than the taxes he would have to pay, but practically that consideration doesn't come in at all, since his ownership of even an infinitesimal portion of the lot prevents any one else from getting a clear title to it, and in that way he is amply secured for the amount of taxes he pays.

"For this reason rival bidders at these sales are in the habit of bidding for exceedingly small fractions of lots, until some time ago it was thought that the limit had been reached when a man bid for the one thousandth of an inch of a lot. But the bid I refer to made the transaction seem gigantic in comparison.

"The bidders were three men named Payne, Frame and Kipp, and Tax Collector Kennedy began the proceedings by reading: 'Lot A, block 261; New San Diego; taxes due, $16.25.' Payne began by saying that he would take the whole lot.

"This was followed by a series of reducing bids, until Kipp called out: 'One thousandth of an inch.' 'One hundred thousandth,' said Payne, in a tone of triumph, feeling that was the limit, but it proved to be miles above it.

"'One millionth,' said Frame. 'One billionth,' suavely remarked Kipp. 'One trillionth,' called out Frame, as he got ready to put up the money. 'One quintillionth,' bawled out Kipp.

"'Let's see,' said Frame, trying to remember his arithmetic. 'Never mind the next two steps. I'll run her down to one octillionth,' as he looked around in triumph.

"'You haven't touched bed-rock yet,' said Kipp, who was up in arithmetic. 'I'll pay the taxes for one vigintillionth of an inch of the lot.' 'Is there any thing lower than that,' said Frame in despair. 'No, sir,' replied Kipp, 'I've got you; that is the lowest figure in the arithmetic; and you can't bid lower.' And as Mr. Kennedy agreed with him, Kipp was declared the successful bidder.

"Then came the question how this astounding sale should be recorded. Every one gave it up, until finally an arithmetic was hunted up, and it was decided that one-vigintillionth of an inch should be expressed decimally in this way: .000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,001.

"A strip of land one-vigintillionth of an inch in width is not very wide—not even wide enough to build a New York flat-house on—but it is plenty wide enough to throw a good-sized shadow on the title to the property."

A GOOD DOMESTIC.

How a Rare Treasure May Be Kept in a House.

A lady possessing a treasure of a domestic was surprised and angry to learn that said treasure was about to leave her employ, says the Detroit Free Press.

"I consider your conduct very ungrateful," she said angrily. "I have paid you good wages, and taught you to do many things, and this is the way you treat me. It is shameful."

The girl murmured something about being sorry but persisted in her determination to go.

"You can at least tell me why you are leaving," said her mistress.

"Well," said the girl, "when you were sick I gave my bed to the nurse and slept on the floor, and I cannot get over the cold I caught then, and carrying all your meals up stairs gave me a hurt in the side, and I froze my fingers hanging out clothes and the doctors say it's too hard, an' if I don't quit I'll break down."

"Nellie, is this true?" asked her mistress, with tears in her eyes. "I never thought of it before. You shall stay and I will get some one to help you, and I'll take care of you myself until you are quite well and strong."

Nellie stayed and her mistress did as she promised, and this true story is commended to other housekeepers who have a treasure they are thoughtlessly over-burdening.

By Force of Will.

The Boston Journal tells a story illustrating the power of a strong will. Some forty years ago a Massachusetts good wife lay in her bed apparently dying with consumption. As the family lived four miles from the undertaker and pastor, and as the roads were badly blocked with snow, the husband when called to the village on business on Tuesday decided—thoughtful man!—to save an extra journey in that bitter weather by engaging the minister and undertaker at once, and appointing the funeral for Friday. In some way on Wednesday the sick woman heard of this, and arousing herself from her supposed dying condition declared: "There'll be no funeral in this house this week!" The funeral was accordingly postponed. It took place recently forty years after it was originally set. The husband is still living at the age of eighty.

PATENTS

procured in the United States and foreign countries. Twenty-five years' experience as solicitors before the Patent Office and as attorneys in patent causes before the courts has given us an extensive practice as experts. We give special attention to cases rejected in other hands, also to interferences, appeals, reissues, trade-marks, the preparation of opinion as to infringement, scope and validity of patents, and the prosecution and defense of suits for infringement. Limiting our practice enables us to carefully study each case and get claims in the original patent as broad as the invention. This is now especially important in view of the difficulty of obtaining a reissue of a defective patent and of maintaining it in the courts after it is obtained. The employment of competent attorneys is important.

Upon receipt of model, sketch or photograph we give our opinion as to patentability free of charge. If favorable, the inventor is advised as to cost of proceeding, etc. Our fees are always reasonable. We refer to all ex-commissioners of patents during the past quarter of a century and to clients in all parts of the country, of whom names in your state will be given upon request. SAUCY SALLY.

Remember to hold the fort dame! If a ship go by without sending thee her pass, fire on her. Thou knowest where the touch-hole is and the linstock; if not, call Dan to do it.

"I'll do it! I'll do it father!" shouted a sturdy little maid robed in a chintz petticoat and short gown flowered with roses as red as her own cheeks and lips, and with a quaint linen cap tied over her curling gold hair, not so closely but that here and there a ringlet escaped against the ribbon strings that was just the color of her speedwell blue eyes.

"Thou do it indeed, Miss Pert. Sampler and hornbook are thy trade. Was ever a maid so thwart as my Saucy Sally. With that Capt. Coffing caught his small daughter up in his strong arms and kissed her over and over.

It was a strange thing in those days to see a little maid so forward and so merry as Sally; but she was the only one left of seven children, and her parents loved her exceedingly; she was all that made life bright for them. War had set in between England and the American colonies, and the captain was a strong loyalist. He had been appointed to the command of the fort at Harbormouth, and when the revolution broke out, soon after the battle of Lexington; a company of volunteers surprised the fort and took the gallant captain and his family prisoners of war. In that unpleasant adventure Sally distinguished herself; she was neither frightened nor tearful, but kept her sunny, saucy ways and charmed the hearts of the "rebel crew." She amused her anxious mother with all sorts of quips and pranks, and cheered her father, who felt his position very keenly, with caresses and fantastic tricks. After a few weeks Captain Coffing was released on parole and allowed to reoccupy the fort, though not with a garrison. This treatment at the hands of the rebels embittered his dislike of them and their cause, and even their allowing his discharge on parole could not make him disloyal to the king he served, or faithless to his friends; he greatly loved and admired Governor John Wentworth, who just about the time of Captain Coffing's capture, had given great offense to the "rebels" as the British called them, was obliged to fly to Boston and put himself under the protection of the British government there. He got as far as the fort at Harbormouth without trouble, but was forced to secrete himself there for some days, till the commandant thought it safe to escort him to Boston.

At last, however, came a day—or rather a night—when it was thought best for the governor to try and reach Boston. Harbormouth was full of rebel troops, and there was much talk and rumor over Gov. Wentworth's whereabouts. So Capt. Coffing gave strict charge to his wife that no vessel should run by without due challenge and exhibition of her pass, and by midnight had slipped into a little boat at the pier-head and rowed away with his guest, leaving for garrison Mrs. Coffing, Sally, fat Dan the serving man, two maids, and the washerwoman with her three children, who had taken refuge there from the wrath of the rebels when her husband deserted to the king's troops. The very next day a stately ship came down the river, so close to the fort that Dan hailed it from the redoubt nearest the town, but the ringing challenge received no answer, the brig only shifted its helm and tacked skillfully; Mrs. Coffing saw the maneuver and said to Dan:

"Fire, fellow! It is the captain's order." Dan shook in his shoes; he was a dreadful coward.

"Deed, 'm, I darsn't do it. What if they should fire back? I'm afeard of my life. I don't see well, nytha. I've but the one eye, mum, as you know."

Sally jumped up and down in a rage.

"You big goose! You mis'er'ble man."

"There mammy, I've lit the linstock at the hearth myself. I can't reach the touch-hole, but you can!"

Mrs. Coffing seized the linstock. She knew the turn of the channel must bring the ship on its next tack very near the fort, and quick as thought the ready powder and the great gun sent its thundering summons to the reluctant vessel.

Once was enough. The startled shipmaster sent a boat in with his pass, which was duly inspected and signed, while Sally danced for joy at her mother's bravery and Dan crouched behind a parapet, shivering with terror.

But if he was afraid of his life that day, what was his terror the day after when a company of rebel soldiers marched up from Harbormouth and demanded admission to search for "the body of that noxious traitor, John Wentworth, sometimes styled governor of New Hampshire."

There was no use in resisting this demand, and Mrs. Coffing knew it was needless, but she used all the delay possible in admitting the party and offered them no aid in their search.

Sally was wildly indignant, all the more that she recognized among them Bobby Greene, a very youthful officer who had been one of the guard set over Capt. Coffing and his family during their imprisonment and who had been a devoted admirer of the saucy little tory maiden, and in spite of her usual scorn had often won a grateful smile by smuggled gifts of fruit or flowers and over all a tiny, lovely kitten that was dear still in her heart.

"You here," cried Sally, as the men filed in after their lieutenant and went up the winding stair.

"Didn't my mother tell you the dear governor was not here. Do you dare to think Madam Coffing lies?"

"Hush, Sally!" interposed her mother. "These matters are not for your meddling." While the lieutenant's fair boyish face turned red to the cap.

He made a military salute to the lady and said respectfully:

"I regret this unpleasant duty, madam, but a soldier must obey orders."

So they proceeded to ransack the building from top to bottom, but found no trace of the loyalist governor; at last they came to the cellar door, which opened on a gulf of darkness, for Saucy Sally had piled mats and rugs against the grated windows on the outside till not a ray of light could enter.

"I think, madam, I must trouble you for lights," said Lieut. Greene, lifting his cap.

"I'll fetch a candle, mammy! I'll hold it!" whispered Sally in her mother's ear.

Mrs. Coffing was astonished at this sudden change in Sally's manner, but thinking that perhaps the child wanted to atone for her previous incivility she nodded assent, and Sally, holding a blazing tallow candle, stationed herself on the stairs, the soldiers one by one filing past her. Very carefully she threw the beams of her light about the cellar till they came to a part where the ceiling was not only much lower but crossed and recrossed with great beams in order to support a platform above, on which heavy guns were mounted. As they groped toward this region, suddenly a quick blast from Sally's rosy lips put out the candle and left the party in utter darkness. Then began trouble! Heads were knocked with sharp force, feet stumbled over certain obstacles and their owners fell prostrate on the hard floor, becoming in turn traps to trip up their bewildered comrades. Loud and deep and long were the objurgations the enraged rebels uttered; louder and harder grew the knocks on the head received by those who still kept their footing, and Sally on the stairs shrieking with laughter, derided them with mocking inquiries as to whether they had the governor, and why they knocked him down so often! But she heard her mother's step coming, and skipped out of sight quickly, mounting to the highest parapet, from which she waved her little British flag over the heads of the demoralized soldiers as they struggled out, and called to the battered young lieutenant, whose bloody face and swollen nose testified to his disagreeable experience:

"Ha! ha! Bobby Greene! How d'ye like hunting governors when I hold the candle?"

Time has its own revenges; long after the war of the revolution was over and the colonies became states, it is recorded somewhere that Mistress Sarah Coffing, daughter of the late Admiral Coffing, R. N., was wedded to the gallant Captain Robert Greene, U. S. A.

I wonder if she ever held a candle for him again, or ceased to be Saucy Sally!—Detroit Sunday News.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Remember That Your Studying To-Day Will be Worth Money.

The boy who is wanted in the business world of to-day must be educated. If his parents cannot afford to give him a high school or college education he must learn to study without the aid of a teacher in the early morning before business begins and in the evening after business hours. It can no longer be truthfully said that an education is out of any one's reach.

"Our splendid school system," writes Russell Sage, "where one can study by day or in the evening, has put the priceless treasure of an education within the reach of all. The main thing, in the beginning, that I would impress upon boys is one of the great commandments: 'Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.' The boy who respects his father and mother, who treats his sisters and brothers with loving kindness, has laid a good foundation for a successful career. You will do as your parents tell you, and that certainly will be to study. Don't be in a hurry to get away from your school books. The cares and responsibilities of business life will come soon enough.

"Go to school as long as you can, and remember, every hour spent in study in your youth will be worth money to you in after life. Read good books, the bible above all. Make yourself acquainted with history. Study the progress of nations and the careers of men who have made nations great. If you have no library of your own join one of the numerous associations to be found in all cities, where good, healthful books may be obtained. Study religion, science, statecraft and history. Learn to read intelligently, so that you may turn to practical use in after life the readings of your youth. Be sure you begin right. Do not waste time in reading trashy books."

LEGENDS OF HAUNTED HILL.

One a Tale of Love and Jealousy, of Blood and Death.

Haunted Hill, in Frazier, on the road from Springville to Potterville, is an odd-looking mound which is wrapped in the mysteries of several Indian legends, says the Tulare, Cal., Times. Some of the traditions were told to us in 1874, when we first visited this region, and ever since we have endeavored to learn the true stories. The Indians are scattered and their legends are difficult to obtain; those possessed of intelligence will not or do not care to talk. But from the white men living here many years ago, and who learned to speak in the Indian language, we have gathered the partial narrative of the legends of Haunted Hill, known in the Indian tongue as "Wailing Mountain."

Two stories are told—one a tale of Indian love and jealousy, the other of a dreadful and fatal battle between the Tule River Indians and their enemies, the Mexicans residing near San Diego, in this state.

Regarding the first tradition but scanty details can be made. It is probably the older of the legends, and the time of its origin dates back ages ago, and it has been handed down from parent to child among the Tulare Indians for hundreds of years. This much only can be learned: A tribe living on the banks of the Tule, east of the hill, gave origin to the legend. Among some members of the tribe a bitter jealousy arose, having love for a source. A faction having won the affections of six women, the rivals resolved on sanguinary revenge. Abiding time and awaiting an unguarded hour, they pursued these women to the top of Wailing Mountain and murdered them. Every night the Indians aver, the ground on the summit opens and the six women appear, only to vanish instantly. Since then no Indian will visit the hill at night.

The other legend is perhaps the more authentic. It is the one sadly told by the few surviving members of the once prosperous and numerous Tulare Indians. In brief, it is this: The Mexicans from Southern California were wont to make raids into this valley and drive away the ponies of the Indians. Armed with superior weapons, they could defy the Indians. Driven to desperation, the natives resolved to offer battle, and, if possible, drive the marauders from the valley, otherwise to crush them. Learning this, the Mexicans came in large numbers, prepared for the trial of strength. The opposing forces met in the valley at the base of the hill.

The Indians, terrified at the Mexican weapons and the slaughter among their numbers, fled to the top of the hill. There, crouching behind the many rock ledges, they made a last desperate, but ineffectual, stand. Soon the Mexicans gained the crest, when disorder again prevailed among the Indians, large numbers falling at each volley from their enemy. Only the more cowardly escaped, the real warriors dying amid the rock piles, for no quarter was asked or given. It is told that 500 Indians perished that day at the base and on the summit of this hill, which, ever since, is known to the Indians as the "Wailing Mountain." Passing the hill at night the Indians say that the piteous wailing of the slain can be distinctly heard, hence its name and its dread to all aborigines of the Tulare Valley.

WELL-THROWN.

A Snow-Ball Saves a Church From Being Burned.

On a day in January, thirty-two years ago, the people of Madison Village, Maine, were fighting fire. The west wind blew a hurricane; the tavern and adjoining dwellinghouses had already burned to the ground, and the entire village was threatened. The Congregational church stood in direct line with the fire, but the wide village green might save it.

Hundreds of anxious eyes were on the watch lest some spark or live cinder should fall upon its exposed roof and walls, which were kept drenched with water. A blazing cinder whirled high across the green, and a strong sucking current of air carried it and held it against a clapboard of the tall steeple; held it until the dry, pitch-filled strip of wood ignited, and a brisk smoke was rising on the steeple's south side.

A groan burst from the watching crowd, says the Youth's Companion. No ladder could reach the spot, and the loved church must burn.

A red tongue of flame shot out from the blackened hole that the live cinder had charred, then—whiz went a flying snow-ball up from the crowd, a single, big moist snow-ball, that snuffed out that blaze as one snuffs out a candle.

Warren Bacon with his good right hand had quickly shaped and thrown the snow-ball, and the church was saved.

The building still stands, and the pierced clapboards on the south side of the steeple still show where the blazing cinder and then the flame gained a foothold.

FLAWING A TITLE.

Queer Real Estate Transaction at a Delinquent Tax Sale.

"Talking about funny real estate transactions," said a real estate man the other day to a New York Tribune reporter, "I think about the funniest, and certainly the most unique, took place in San Diego, Cal. It was at a delinquent tax sale, which is conducted on the principle of reducing bids.

"That is to say, the tax collector must accept the bid of the man who will pay the delinquent taxes and take the least fraction of the lot in payment therefor.

"Theoretically you might suppose a bidder wouldn't be willing to take a fraction intrinsically worth less than the taxes he would have to pay, but practically that consideration doesn't come in at all, since his ownership of even an infinitesimal portion of the lot prevents any one else from getting a clear title to it, and in that way he is amply secured for the amount of taxes he pays.

"For this reason rival bidders at these sales are in the habit of bidding for exceedingly small fractions of lots, until some time ago it was thought that the limit had been reached when a man bid for the one thousandth of an inch of a lot. But the bid I refer to made the transaction seem gigantic in comparison.

"The bidders were three men named Payne, Frame and Kipp, and Tax Collector Kennedy began the proceedings by reading: 'Lot A, block 261; New San Diego; taxes due, $16.25.' Payne began by saying that he would take the whole lot.

"This was followed by a series of reducing bids, until Kipp called out: 'One thousandth of an inch.' 'One hundred thousandth,' said Payne, in a tone of triumph, feeling that was the limit, but it proved to be miles above it.

"'One millionth,' said Frame. 'One billionth,' suavely remarked Kipp. 'One trillionth,' called out Frame, as he got ready to put up the money. 'One quintillionth,' bawled out Kipp.

"'Let's see,' said Frame, trying to remember his arithmetic. 'Never mind the next two steps. I'll run her down to one octillionth,' as he looked around in triumph.

"'You haven't touched bed-rock yet,' said Kipp, who was up in arithmetic. 'I'll pay the taxes for one vigintillionth of an inch of the lot.' 'Is there any thing lower than that,' said Frame in despair. 'No, sir,' replied Kipp, 'I've got you; that is the lowest figure in the arithmetic; and you can't bid lower.' And as Mr. Kennedy agreed with him, Kipp was declared the successful bidder.

"Then came the question how this astounding sale should be recorded. Every one gave it up, until finally an arithmetic was hunted up, and it was decided that one-vigintillionth of an inch should be expressed decimally in this way: .000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,001.

"A strip of land one-vigintillionth of an inch in width is not very wide—not even wide enough to build a New York flat-house on—but it is plenty wide enough to throw a good-sized shadow on the title to the property."

A GOOD DOMESTIC.

How a Rare Treasure May Be Kept in a House.

A lady possessing a treasure of a domestic was surprised and angry to learn that said treasure was about to leave her employ, says the Detroit Free Press.

"I consider your conduct very ungrateful," she said angrily. "I have paid you good wages, and taught you to do many things, and this is the way you treat me. It is shameful."

The girl murmured something about being sorry but persisted in her determination to go.

"You can at least tell me why you are leaving," said her mistress.

"Well," said the girl, "when you were sick I gave my bed to the nurse and slept on the floor, and I cannot get over the cold I caught then, and carrying all your meals up stairs gave me a hurt in the side, and I froze my fingers hanging out clothes and the doctors say it's too hard, an' if I don't quit I'll break down."

"Nellie, is this true?" asked her mistress, with tears in her eyes. "I never thought of it before. You shall stay and I will get some one to help you, and I'll take care of you myself until you are quite well and strong."

Nellie stayed and her mistress did as she promised, and this true story is commended to other housekeepers who have a treasure they are thoughtlessly over-burdening.

By Force of Will.

The Boston Journal tells a story illustrating the power of a strong will. Some forty years ago a Massachusetts good wife lay in her bed apparently dying with consumption. As the family lived four miles from the undertaker and pastor, and as the roads were badly blocked with snow, the husband when called to the village on business on Tuesday decided—thoughtful man!—to save an extra journey in that bitter weather by engaging the minister and undertaker at once and appointing the funeral for Friday. In some way on Wednesday the sick woman heard of this, and arousing herself from her supposed dying condition declared: "There'll be no funeral in this house this week!" The funeral was accordingly postponed. It took place recently forty years after it was originally set. The husband is still living at the age of eighty.

PATENTS

procured in the United States and foreign countries. Twenty-five years' experience as solicitors before the Patent Office and as attorneys in patent causes before the courts has given us an extensive practice as experts. We give special attention to cases rejected in other hands, also to interferences, appeals, reissues, trade-marks, the preparation of opinion as to infringement, scope and validity of patents, and the prosecution and defense of suits for infringement. Limiting our practice enables us to carefully study each case and get claims in the original patent as broad as the invention. This is now especially important in view of the difficulty of obtaining a reissue of a defective patent and of maintaining it in the courts after it is obtained. The employment of competent attorneys is important.

Upon receipt of model, sketch or photograph we give our opinion as to patentability free of charge. If favorable, the inventor is advised as to cost of proceeding, etc. Our fees are always reasonable. We refer to all ex-commissioners of patents during the past quarter of a century and to clients in all parts of the country, of whom names in your state will be given upon request. Our book of instructions, terms, etc., sent free.

The board of railroad and warehouse commissioners give THE JOURNAL notice that they will be in Crookston on May 17th to listen to any complaints that may be presented.

The St. Vincent New Era, established by William G. Deacon, entered its ninth year last week. The Deacon is a fighter from 'way back, and woe to the luckless wight who dares tread on the tail of his coat.

In its large collection of timely portraits, the Review of Reviews for May has strikingly good pictures of three men who just now are of conspicuous prominence in the theological discussions of the English-speaking world, namely, Dr. Lyman Abbott, pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, and editor of the Christian Union; Prof. Charles S. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, and Principal Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford, who has just returned home from a visit to the United States.

The St. Paul Daily News, under the management of Mr. C. E. Sherin, is foremost in the ranks of Northwestern journalism. The News is an eight page paper, with a full telegraph news franchise and the best staff of news gatherers in the twin cities. It is independent, fearless and straightforward in the defence of American institutions and the exposure of corruption in politics. It has taken advanced ground and now on will lead where others follow. For the next thirty days only, the news announces that it will take subscribers at the unparalleld low subscription rate of $3.00 per year in advance. This is the most liberal offer ever made by a first class daily newspaper and the approach of a warm political campaign, in which the News will take an active independent part, makes the offer more liberal. The News has an able staff of political writers who hew to the line and take no notice of the falling chips. It is an excellent paper and should have a tremendous circulation throughout the state.

The New Hail Company.

In the last issue of the JOURNAL was a copy of the by-laws of the Minnesota Hail Association, the new company recently organized in Crookston. The plan of operation is pretty fully outlined in the By-Laws, and a perusal of them will give an understanding of the mode of conducting the business of the company.

It is a mutual concern organized under the state insurance laws, and the names of the men who are at the head of it is a sufficient guarantee that it is a thoroughly reliable company, and that its affairs will be conducted in a straightforward and business-like manner. The incorporators are well known citizens of Polk county—men who would hesitate before undertaking a doubtful venture.

The affairs of the company are controlled by a board of directors, elected by the members of the association, and as each man who insures his crop is a member, the farmers will control the company and elect whom they please to manage it.

Among the present board of directors are such men as Hugh Thompson, register of the Crookston land office, T. J. McAdams, mayor of East Grand Forks, A. C. Rhinehart, county commissioner of Polk county, L. C. Couvrette, city treasurer of Crookston, and Frank Bivins, a well known Polk county farmer. The previous records of these men in this county is the best assurance that the affairs of the new company will be properly managed.

The officers elected for this year are C. H. Warren, president; C. L. Graber, secretary; F. D. Lord, vice pres. and field manager; Hugh Thompson, treasurer. The president and secretary have occupied similar positions for about seven years with the Farmers' Mutual Protective association of North Dakota, a company which has done business successfully in that state since its organization, and given the farmers the best and cheapest protection against hail of any company which has ever done business there.

The vice president and field manager, F. D. Lord, has made the hail insurance business a study for years, and is acknowledged to be the most successful field manager in the northwest. He appoints and instructs agents, adjusts losses, etc., and the volume of business which the company will do depends largely on his efforts, and the JOURNAL is prepared to say that he will be equal to the occasion. His experience with the F. M. P. A. of Plankinton, S. D., and afterwards with the F. M. P. A. of North Dakota has proved his ability in the field, and his reputation has been well earned. The treasurer, Hugh Thompson, needs no introduction to the people of this county. His name is synonymous with honesty, integrity and business principles.

As none of these officers receive a salary, but are paid a commission it is necessary for them to do a large amount of business in order to receive adequate compensation for their labors.

The farmers should read these By-Laws and investigate the merits of the company, because cheap and safe hail insurance is one thing the farmers of this state are much in need of.

PRESS GLEANINGS.

St. Peter Tribune:—The Minneapolis Tribune publishes what is purported to be a scheme of Merriam's, that of getting John Lind to stand for governor, then join hands with Knute Nelson, and then let the convention decide between the two after all the other candidates have been killed off. Merriam claims he is not a candidate for senatorial honors, but wait and see. The article in the Tribune says Merriam is more anxious to kill off McGill than anything else. Don't believe it. In our estimation he is more anxious than anything else to create a division in the Minnesota Legislature that will make it impossible to nominate C. K. Davis, and then come in as the dark horse for the position. We do not believe in one man or a dozen men forever controlling the politics of any state, and we hope the Republican party, when it becomes convinced that Merriam is playing for a sucker, will sit beautifully down on him. Mark our words, Merriam is playing for the United States Senate, and while we have no animosity against the governor, we have no hesitancy in saying that it would be very unfortunate for Minnesota to retire the ablest man in the state, who is an acknowledged statesman, to satisfy the political ambition of an untried man in the exalted position of United States Senator.

Northfield News:—Mr. Knute Nelson has been unfairly criticised a number of times and it has been stated that he has not been in accord with the Republican party. Of course it is a matter of record that Mr. Nelson was one of the few Republican members of congress who voted in favor of the Mills bill four years ago; but in his Minneapolis speech in 1890 he explained that vote by saying that he was in favor of tariff revision and as the Mills bill was the best thing that offered, he cast his vote for it on its final passage. He then emphatically announced that in his judgment the McKinley bill was infinitely preferable from every stand point to the Mills bill; and gave the Republican measure his unqualified endorsement. He also endorsed the full Republican platform and ticket, and made an eloquent appeal to the farmers and workingmen to stand firmly by the Republican party in the campaign. Mr. Nelson should be fairly treated and honestly criticised.

Thief River Falls Press:—C. A. Robbecke, Carl Kretzschmar and daughter Olga had a hair-breadth escape from death last Friday. They started to ride in a row boat across the river above the dam. During the high water the old bridge has gone out and the frame of the short one over the sluice is left. Above the dam is a heavy swift current. As soon as the boat was pushed out it got in the current and started for the falls but a few feet below. The men worked for their lives but were powerless. Mr. Robbecke was in the head and Mr. Kretzschmar in the stern of the boat with the little girl in the centre. As the boat moved on they nearly lost hope until one corner of the boat caught about two inches on a post in the bridge frame and swung around and stopped across the current. That instant Mr. Robbecke grabbed Olga and jumped onto the frame and from there over a timber to the bank. Mr. Kretzschmar also jumped to the frame and walked a six inch plank across the rapids to land. The boat in a moment loosened and went over the falls in a way that would make one shiver. A moment delay or the space of two inches would have cost them their lives.

Madison Independent:—We notice that quite a number of our exchanges are working up a boom for A. R. McGill as a candidate for governor. Basing our opinion on the political condition of things in this county, we would state that McGill will not be in it this year. Everything is Nelson in this neck-o'-the woods.

Wabasha County Herald:—Senator Burkhardt returned from an extended visit to Crookston last week. He says Crookston is booming.

How She Was Thanked.

A good Christian woman recently sent to Prof. Blackie a present of some cheese, with a volume of Sankey's poems carefully laid on the top. To his present, according to a London paper, the following clever reply:

"Blessed is she who has done what she could
To make a lean man fat and a bad man good;
For the body, cheese—for the soul, Sankey;
For both—thank'ee."

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

Per Back, of Bear Park, Killed by Lightning Tuesday Night.

Fertile Journal:—News reaches us from Bear Park just before we go to press of a terrible casualty that occurred in that town Tuesday night. Per Back was the victim of the terrible flash from above and now lies cold in death. The casualty as reported to us is as follows: During the night Mr. Back and his wife were detained at the barn by a sick horse, a thunder storm came up suddenly during the night and the lightning was also making its deathly flashes here and there and without the night was a hidsous one and the unfortunates within huddled close together. During the storm a barbed wire fence, that was attached to the barn, was struck, the lightning followed the fence up to the barn and then to the horses on the inside, three of them being killed together with their owner. Mrs. Back was badly stunned but has since fully recovered.

Andy Stephens on Canute.

East Grand Forks News: Two years ago A. D. Stephens was chairman of the Republican campaign committee in Polk county. As such he ran against the hard heads of the Alliance and knows their composition. Among Minnesota Republican politicians there has been a fond belief that it Little Canute Nelson, of Alexandria, was nominated for governor, he would break up the Alliance. Stephens explodes that fallacy.

He says Mr. Nelson's candidacy would have no such effect. What Norwegians have joined the Alliance are as steadfast and stubborn in the advocacy of Alliance principles as anybody else, and in a great many cases more so. To establish the truth of this, Mr. Stephens produces some interesting little documents which he generally keeps concealed in his inside pocket. He has taken the pains to secure copies of resolutions passed by a number of local Alliances in the vicinity of Crookston, the membership which was largely, if not wholly, made up of Norwegians. These resolutions state that while it has been said that Mr. Nelson was likely to be the Republican nominee for governor mainly for his ability to take the Norwegian Alliance voters back to the Republican ranks, each and every member pledges himself to in every fair and honorable way work against Mr. Nelson's election in case he was nominated.

FOOD AND DAIRY COMMISSION.

Two Essentials for a Baking Powder That Will Make Perfect Bread.

The late report of the Minnesota State Food and Dairy Commission contains the result of a series of experiments. Baking powders that vary in strength before use, are unreliable and will not give even results; besides it is an indication of the use of improper ingredients in their compounding. The tests showed the strength of the leavening power of the Royal very much better than that of the others. The uniformity of strenth of all the samples of Royal tested, no matter what their age, was remarkable. Its leavening power was practically unimpaired even in the oldest specimens. The difference in the amount of leavening gas in different samples of the other brands was so great as to seriously impair their usefulness in baking. As much as 24 per cent. loss was found in samples a few months old. All the samples of Royal examined by State Chemist Drew were reported of satisfactory strength and quality.

Dr. Drew states that the "Royal" being of greater strength than any other, and possessing better keeping qualities, is the natural conclusion that it is the best baking powder made.

The First World's Fair.

A man of forty-five is not so very aged, yet world's fairs have become so common that some people suppose the first one must date a long way back. But a man now forty-five was born before a world's fair had ever been held. The first one was opened May 1st, 1851, in the Crystal Palace, at London, by Prince Albert, the consort of Queen Victoria. That was the first time that the nations of the world had met for competition in the arts of peace. Then these great exhibitions followed each other at intervals of a few years. The two Paris Expositions, that at Vienna, the Centennial of our own country, and soon will come the largest of all, the Columbian Exposition at Chicago. There is no need to urge any one to go—everybody is thinking of it, but we will remark that wherever you live, in Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin or Iowa, your best, shortest and quickest route to the great show will be by The Burlington lines. For any further information, call on any local agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Herding.

The undersigned will be prepared to herd cattle, sheep and colts in the town of Kertsonville during the coming season at 25 cents per head per month. Sheep, 25 cents per head for the season. Address, MOSES F. TRUDEAU, Gentilly post-office. [52-3]

Popular Talks On Law.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE, ESQ.

When is a Contract by Correspondence Complete?

As a first requisite to the forming of a valid contract, there must be a meeting of minds of the parties thereto. An offer can be revoked before its acceptance, but after the acceptance the offer becomes a promise. The time of acceptance of the offer is the moment of meeting of minds. It is not a difficult thing to determine this moment in the case of contracts made in the presence of both parties, but the question becomes difficult and very important when the offer and acceptance are made by letter, telegram, messenger, or otherwise. At what moment is the contract consummated? Is it the moment of the posting of the answer or the receipt of same? Is it the moment the message is started on its way or the moment it reaches and is thus communicated to the offerer. In general a communication of an acceptance is necessary to a forming of the contract. Is this essential requisite complied with when the party to whom the offer is made does all he can do to deliver his acceptance (whether it ever reaches its destination or not) or must the acceptance have reached its destination before it can have the effect of binding the parties?

It is now decided that the acceptance is made when the acceptor has done all that he can to communicate his intention. The moment then of despatch of acceptance is the moment the contract has its beginning and once having despatched the acceptance it is irrevocable. It is understood that one making an offer by letter is making that offer continuously during every instant of the time the letter is traveling, so that if the letter is delayed in transit, and on its receipt a letter is at once posted accepting the offer, the contract is complete, even though in the meantime the party offering may have sold the goods which are the basis of the offer. Suppose the letter of acceptance be lost and does not reach the party offering. Is there a contract? The logical result of the position that the contract is made when the acceptance is posted leads us to infer that the question demands an affirmative answer, and such is the law. The settled rule in our courts is that the time of mailing the acceptance is the time the contract is complete, and that the subsequent fate of the letter is immaterial. This is so on the theory that the postoffice is the agent of the person who makes an offer by post, and the delivery of the letter to the post is the delivery to the agent of the person making the offer.

Suppose that a letter revoking the proposal is mailed before the acceptance is mailed, this does not affect the result unless the revocation is received before the acceptance is mailed. One in making a proposal may state it as a condition to the making of the contract that the notice of the acceptance be received in order to be binding. Many other interesting and important conditions arise, a treatment of which we will postpone until our next.

Will Extend the Line.

WINONA, Minn., Special, May 3.—For some time past it has been known that the Winona & Southwestern was procuring the right of way from Osage to Mason City, about twenty-five miles. The annual meeting of the Winona & Southwestern Improvement company was held here to-day. It was decided to extend to Mason City during this summer. The old board of directors was re-elected, and the following officers were elected by the directors: V. Simpson, president; H. W. Lamberton, vice president; M. G. Norton, treasurer; E. G. Hornbrooke, secretary.

A Soup of Worms.

An animal growing between the high and low water marks on the Japanese coasts is a mud worm called sabella. It occupies a hard, limy tube of its own making, and gets its food when the high tide comes up over its hiding place by thrusting out a head bushy with tentacles and sucking in currents of water loaded with minute particles of nutriment. Out of this wriggling creature the shore people make a soup which is true vemicelli, not a paste imitation of "little worms," and is said to taste as badly as it smells.

The Sword.

The flat silk cord which is tied about Japanese swords are used by warriors in battle to hold back their flowing sleeves. Its ends were knotted and passed over the arms by a dexterous movement so that it was crossed on the back. The art of tieing this cord about the sword so that it could readily be unfastened is an accomplishment that still survives among the former military class in Japan.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

MONDAY, APRIL 25.

SENATE.

Senator McPherson introduced a proposed amendment to the naval appropriation bill authorizing the construction of three double turret iron or steel harbor defense vessels of the monitor type of at least 7,500 tons displacement and a speed of 15 knots, in place of the single cruiser proposed by the house bill. They are to carry two 13-inch rifled guns, and are to be so heavily armored as to be invulnerable to shot or shell.

HOUSE.

The pending questions, when the house met this morning, was the motion made by Mr. Reed, of Maine, Saturday last, to lay on the table the resolution expunging from the record such portions of the speech of Mr. Walker, of Massachusetts, which were not uttered on the floor and which reflected on his colleagues, Messrs. Williams and Hoar. After considerable parliamentary parleying the house adjourned.

If a bill introduced in the house by Mr. Clark, of Wyoming becomes a law, the right of franchise will be extended to every woman in the country over 31 years of age, to vote for representatives in congress.

TUESDAY, APRIL 26.

SENATE.

After some routine morning business Mr. Coke addressed the senate in favor of the free coinage of silver, basing his remarks on Mr. Morgan's resolution on that subject.

Mr. Daniel spoke on the same subject and on the same side of the question. At the close of Mr. Daniel's speech, the army appropriation bill was taken up. A long debate ensued but no action was taken.

On request of Mr. Morgan the communication was ordered printed and laid on the table for the present.

HOUSE.

After three private bills were passed, the regular order was demanded, and the speaker stated the regular order to be the passage of the Walker expunging resolution.

Mr. Blount of Georgia, asked unanimous consent that the house go into committee of the whole for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bills. It was agreed to. Mr. Blount explained the provisions of the measure.

After a long discussion unanimous consent was given that general debate on the bill should close after two hours' debate tomorrow.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27.

SENATE.

After routine business in the senate the army appropriation bill was taken up, the question being on striking out the house proviso which prohibits payment for transportation of troops and supplies of the army over any of the unbounded lines, owned, controlled or operated by the Union Pacific Railway company (including the lines of the Oregon Short Line or Utah Northern Railroad company), or by the Southern Pacific Railway company in its Pacific system, or lines embraced in its Pacific system. After a long speech by Senator Morgan the house proviso was struck out; yeas, 26, nays, 20. Mr. Morgan was the only Democrat who voted with the majority, and Messrs. Peffer and Pettigrew the only Republicans who voted with the minority. The bill was then passed and the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Representative Bland introduced a resolution in the house instructing the committee on ways and means to report a bill imposing an income tax sufficient to meet all the expenditures for pensions; and also a bill to repeal all taxes imposed upon currency issued by authority of the states.

The house went into committee of the whole on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, APRIL, 28.

SENATE.

The old story of government injustice to the Indians was discussed all day in the senate by Mr. Jones, of Arkansas, in connection with the suspended appropriation of nearly $3,000,000 for an area of land variously estimated at from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 acres, taken from the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. Mr. Jones contended that great injustice had been done by the president in holding up the appropriation, and the contrary view was taken by Messrs. Allison and Platt. Mr. Teller, of Colorado, and Mr. Perkins, of Kansas, criticised the action of the president in setting aside an appropriation passed by congress and approved by himself. Mr. Jones's resolution, which declared that there was not sufficient ground for withholding the appropriation, was still unacted on when the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Mr. Otis, of Kansas, introduced in the house a bill to repeal an act to set apart certain tracts of land in California as forest reservations, approved Oct. 1, 1890.

The house today wasted four hours in an attempt to proceed with the diplomatic and consular bill. The reductions made by the committee in the salary of several important missions, notably that of the envoy to Venezuela was not acceptable to the Republicans nor to many Democrats, and the house found itself without a voting quorum, although three calls of the committee disclosed a quorum each time. After repeated votes by tellers with no qourum voting a call of the house was ordered and after two hours wasted in an attempt to secure a voting quorum, the house adjourned until tomorrow.

FRIDAY, APRIL 29.

SENATE.

No business was transacted in the senate to-day.

HOUSE.

Twelve representatives were tried to-day for being absent without leave and were acquitted.

Representative Bailey, of Texas has introduced in the house an amendment to the rules which directs the sergeant-at-arms to withhold at the end of each month the pay of a member until he files with the sergeant-at-arms a written statement that he has not been absent from the house during the preceding month. If a member has been absent, and such absence was not necessary on account of the sickness of himself or some member of his family—the statement to set forth the exact number of days absence—other than the above causes, the sergeant-at-arms is to deduct the salary for the days of absence. Any violation of this rule by the sergeant-at-arms shall make him liable on his bond for all payments made contrary to the provisions of section 40.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The proposition of the committee on foreign affairs in the diplomatic appropriation bill to consolidate all the Scandinavian ministers into one mission, was opposed by the Republicans and a Republican (Post of Illinois) offered an amendment, leaving these missions the same as they have been in the past. After considerable discussion it was carried.

No Restrictions.

Bagley: "I never restrict my wife. She does exactly as she pleases."

Bailey: "And you?"

Bagley: "I do exactly as she pleases too."

DO SHARKS BITE?

Assertions That They Will Not Attack a Swimmer.

If there should arise a controversy over the statements of Mr. Herman Oelrichs that sharks will not attack men swimming, you may add an experience of my own the latter part of February. I was on a Pacific mail steamer in the Bay of Champerico. The water was clear, and we counted seven sharks, ranging from about seven to eleven feet in length. We got out a shark hook and line and bated it with pork.

Our principal assistant was a little chap who had just finished his time in the navy, and had been discharged from the Charleston at San Francisco on the eve of her starting to carry King Kalakaua's body home. While we were at luncheon a shark took a bite at the bate. The young seaman was too hasty, and as a result the big fish was badly hooked and dropped off when hauled about a foot out of the water.

However, our young friend seemed to know a lot about shark fishing and sharks, the result of his many cruises, and when stories were told of men bitten by sharks he scoffed and put it to the tests of experiments, just as did Mr. Oelrichs. To the consternation of nearly everybody he dived from the gangway and swam around to the spot where the sharks were awaiting the kitchen refuse. In every instance where one of them happened to see him it acted as if scared, and moved rapidly in another direction. It was the same in the bay at St. Jose, Guatemala.

There is a big spotted shark whom tourists easily recognize as an old friend and call "Joe." The little sailor chap swam after him, and he swam in front of him and in front of others. Several sharks must have seen the boy, but none showed the slightest inclination to attack. He said the same thing had been tried many a time, and that nobody in the navy now believed that there was any danger of attack from sharks when swimming, although it was possible that they might take a snap at a dead floating body.—New York Sun.

Robert Fairweather was in town Wednesday.

F. Tiedt took a trip to Argyle Tuesday.

Mr. Cottet has moved over on the west side of the track on a farm belonging to F. Tiedt. His son-in-law will occupy the old place.

The Euclid Horse Co. has just completed a barn, on Washington Avenue for the celebrated Clyde horse owned by them.

School opened Monday.

Some one should agitate the question of painting the church and schoolhouse. These buildings look as though they needed it badly.

John Tiedermann moved out on his farm Tuesday.

Mr. Mellotte has left town to make his home with his son-in-law, Sam Tieson.

Mr. Scotland representing the Deering Binder Co. was in town Friday.

J. M. Harris, general agent for the Singer sewing machine Company, was in town Friday.

Herman Wallace has got 100 acres seeded already.

A few farmers have begun seeding but more of them will have to wait until May 1st.

Euclid will organize a base ball nine this spring.

B. S. Chapin and family were up from Crookston Tuesday.

Verne Harrington of Fargo was visiting his brother here Tuesday.

Men and teams from Grand Forks recently from the lumber woods passed through here Thursday on their way to Warren where they have taken a contract to seed a farm this spring.

The Minneapolis & Northern elevator took in the largest wheat receipts for the year 1892 last Tuesday.

George Nelson, our new constable did a little official duty by selling a wagon Friday evening.

I. W. C. Misner took a run down Friday to see Uncle Tom—with him were Master Harold and Harvey Misner, Ray and Lillie Tiedt, Nellie and Harry Chapin and Lillie Losey.

N. Pratt arrived from Michigan Saturday morning with a car of stock and household effects. Mrs. Pratt will arrive in a day or two. They have come to see how we do it up in this neck of the woods and will spend the summer with the Misner and Chapin boys.

Seeding has commenced in earnest.

Services will be held in the new Congregational church on Sunday, May first.

The new restaurant begins to look very business-like.

Mr. Robert Knowles will soon erect a new residence.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Cleveland celebrated the fifth anniversary of their wedded life on Thursday last, with a wooden wedding. We wish the worthy couple many anniversaries of the same.

Prof. seems to have become disgusted with living in town and has moved down among the wood piles where he can have a little quiet.

Pete's new cottage is still vacant, but for what reason we are not prepared to say. Keep up your courage, Pete.

EUCLID, April 27th, 1892.

Council Resolutions

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April, 1892, Alderman Morrisey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Anderson.

Be it resolved that this city proceed to construct a sewer of 4½ feet diameter, made of brick, from intersection of Sixth street and Front street westerly to center of alley in block 39, original townsite, thence southerly through alley to and across Fifth street into Red Lake River, with necessary catch basins, manholes, etc., as may be required.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative; Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marlette, Morrisey, Marshall, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: none. Alderman Childs not voting.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 26th day of April, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the council.

Approved this 26th day of April, 1892.

Attest: WM. ANGLIM, Mayor.
E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

At an adjourned meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the 26th day of April 1892, Ald. Morriesey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Ald. Marshall:

Be it Resolved, That a sidewalk of pine plank, six feet wide, two inches thick, surfaced on one side, and well spiked with twenty penny spikes to three stringers 3x6 diameter, be conducted along the east side of Main street from Fifth to Sixth street in place of sidewalk condemned by city engineer.

Upon call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, Morrisey, Merlette, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the President of the Council.

Passed this 26th day of April, 1892.

HOW HE SOLD IT.

A Soap Agent Who Was Up To His Business.

An agent for a certain kind of scrubbing soap is so well versed in the vulnerable points of housekeepers that he seldom fails to dispose of at least one cake at every door, the Youth's Companion avers. Mrs. Candy, who was a noted housewife and who answered his ring in person.

He understood her characteristics at a glance, and saw that a jocose style would not be successful with her; so he said, with a crestfallen expression, as he looked beyond her into the spotless hall:

"My dear madam, I must beg pardon for having needlessly interrupted you. I have here a soap which is warranted to remove stains from paints, carpets, furniture and—but I see I have come to the wrong house; for there's not a stain on your paint or on your hall carpet, and doubtless your furniture is equally spick and span. So I'll say good mor"—

"Young man," interposed Mrs. Candy, with a slight relaxation of her severe countenance, "you may let me have a couple of them cakes. I ain't sure but they might come in handy some day!"

She gave one of the cakes to her niece a few day later, saying she had bought them of an uncommon civil-spoken young man, who had too much sense to be wastin' it in travelin' round as agent, but had evidently been drove to the business by misfortune."

Rubber Corset Laces.

A new use for rubber has been found in the manufacture of corset laces, the manufacturers claiming that they are superior to the present form of lace. They permit freer movement in stooping, and allow more freedom in respiration. There is also said to be a saving in the whalebone of the corsets, obviating the constant breaking of the parts. The cord is round, thinned at the ends, and is made of silk or cotton web.

In the same connection there has been made a form of rubber shoe-lace, which is stated to be a great relief to the feet, the shoe being held firmly in position on the foot, whether a long or short step is made.—Philadelphia Record.

A Wise Precaution.

Many eastern drug stores have adopted the precautionary measure of having two persons attend the preparation of any prescription containing poisonous drugs. The Medical Record calls attention to a recent murder trial in New York as an illustration of the importance of this check, because "if a single clerk received the prescription, prepared the capsules and delivered them it might readily have been claimed by the defense that a mistake had been made by the druggist. As it was, the druggist was able to go on the stand and testify that an assistant had also read the prescription and seen the amount of morphine which it called for properly weighed and dispensed."

The Corean Language.

A British consul in China, Dr. James Scott, who has written the first Corean grammar, declares that the Corean language is even more difficult than the Chinese. He estimates its age at 4,000 years.

THE FASTEST SPEED.

Curious Calculation of the Distance a Pen-Point Travels.

The fastest time in which a train has been known to travel a mile is forty-nine seconds and a fraction. To accomplish the same distance the fastest bicyclist who has hitherto ridden took two minutes and three-quarters, or just about three times as long. An ice yacht has traveled a mile in one minute and ten seconds, a running horse in one minute and thirty-five and one-half seconds, a torpedo-boat in one minute and fifty seconds, a steam yacht in two minutes and twelve seconds and a fraction, and a skater on ice, with favorable wind behind him, in two minutes and twelve seconds and rather a larger fraction.

A rapid writer can write thirty words a minute. To do this he must draw his pen through the space of a rod, sixteen and one-half feet. In forty minutes his pen travels a furlong, and in five hours and a third a full mile. He makes, on an average, sixteen curves or turns of the pen for each word written. Writing at the rate of thirty words per minute, he must make eight curves to each second; in an hour, 28,800; in five hours, 144,000, and in 300 days, working only five hours each day, he makes not less than 43,200,000 curves and turns of the pen.

The man who makes but 1,000,000 has done nothing remarkable; there are those who make four times that number. Here we have in the aggregate a mark 800 miles long to be traced on paper by a single writer in a year. In making each letter of the alphabet we make from three to seven strokes of the pen—on an average, three and a half to four.

READERS WITH PENCILS.

Carefully Watched in Libraries and Kept From Marking Books.

Next to the sneak thieves who infest public libraries the worst nuisance a librarian has to encounter is undoubtedly the reader with a pencil. It is a sight to watch the abandon with which the individual makes annotations or other markings upon property which is in no sense his.

The man who would step up to another's house and draw chalk marks on his doorstep would be held for trespass or other malicious mischief, says the Troy Chief. There is very little difference in the case of the vandal who defaces the public books, except that a lenient popular sentiment permits him to go free.

In all well-regulated libraries nowadays, however, alert attendants exercise keen supervision over the reader with a pencil. The moment the pencil is lifted from its vest pocket home the attendant edges up, and if a marginal hieroglyphic is attempted the offending reader is politely requested to desist.

The second offense draws down a less polite rebuke, and the third time is out—that is, the malefactor is "bounced." The habit undoubtedly arises from sheer thoughtlessness, but it is a very annoying one, and the individual reader who falls into it when perusing his own books is likely to get into trouble should he borrow from fastidious friends or visit well regulated public libraries.

Indigestible.

Young Farmer Medders (at supper)—Ouch: Wonark! Kah! Jeeminy jeeswax! What in heaven's name is the matter with this cake, Gloriosa?

"Tastes as if it was made of clam shells. Kah!"

"Oh, dearest! May be it was the fault of the eggs. I always thought eggs were soft and yellow inside but these were white and brittle all the way through, and I had to powder them with flat irons, and—"

"Where did you find them?"

"In the hen house, darling. There was only one egg in each nest, and—"

"Gloriosa, you have used my new china nest eggs!"—Puck

VERY HONEST.

More So Than Some People Far More Civilized.

A curious illustration of the honesty of some savage peoples is given in the report of a recent traveler in Yoruba, West Africa, states Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine. He says he often saw on a mat by the roadside several quantities of maize flour, bean bread, cooked yams or other articles of food carefully arranged for sale, while near at hand a broken calabash was placed for the receipt of cowries, which are the currency of the country. In passing the men in his caravan would choose the articles of food they desired and put a number of cowries into the calabash, after consulting among themselves as to the exact price which they had paid at the last town or market shed. For forty cowries, which is less than two cents, a man could fully satisfy his hunger, and the hunger of an African laboring under a heavy load for from fifteen to twenty miles a day is not to be easily appeased.

It never occurred to any of the carriers to underpay or to take anything of which they did not know the price. The owner of the article was probably a mile or two away working placidly at home, while her little commercial business at the roadside was taking care of itself.

In Yoruba water is stored in large jars near every hut or roadside shed, and may be had for the asking or taken freely by the passing traveler. It is one of the unwritten laws of the country that the traveler may stop at any farm or field and cook sufficient food from the standing crops for one meal, but it would be considered a heinous offense to carry any away with him. Such honesty would hardly be found among civilized people.

TRUE LOVE.

Unless you can think when the song is done,
No other is sweet in the rythm;
Unless you can tell, when left by one,
That all men else go with him;
Unless you can know when unpraised by his breath
That your beauty itself wants proving,
Unless you can swear—"For life or death"—
Oh, fear to call it loving!

Unless you can muse in a crowd all day
On the absent face that fixed you;
Unless you can love as the angels may,
With the breath of heaven betwixt you;
Unless you can dream that his faith is fast,
Through behooving and unbehooving,
Unless you can die when the dream is past—
Oh, never call it loving!

—Mrs. Browning.

HIS CHANCE AT LAST.

Clement and Henry Walford were twin brothers—how like and yet how unlike. In appearance there was everything to lead one to see that they could both lay claim to the same birthday; their faces were identical, their figures the same. Fortune, however, had placed them in totally distinct channels. Their mother, in her day (for she had been dead these twenty years), was an actress of rare ability, and people had crowded the theaters night after night to follow her impressive acting. Both her sons had inherited her talents in no small measure, and two years previous to her death they had launched out in their first struggle to win fresh laurels for the name around which all that was gifted had gathered. Talents, alas! may live and shine, yet they may live and scarcely flicker. To-day these two men were brothers only in name. The gifts of the one had been recognized by a fickle public, the abilities of the other never even had a thought.

Clement Walford! His name was on everybody's lips. The critics gave him columns in the papers, theatrical managers almost knelt at his feet, and paid eagerly the money he demanded to secure his services; society held open its doors, and the great actor entered at his ease. And Henry? A struggler—nothing more; a disappointed struggler. Clever, but unknown; gifted, but unheard of. His brother's success may have cut him, but it never discouraged him. He labored on, still hopeful. Whilst the popular man was rich in London, the other was hovering on the very edges of poverty. There were times when he had been forced to write to his brother a letter asking for help, but no reply ever came. The poor man's wife had even knocked at the great actor's door; but the response from a servant's lips was that "Mr. Walford was engaged." And so the brothers lived. The one utterly oblivious to the ties of relationship, the other hoping for recognition and reconciliation at last. Clement Walford's triumph was at hand. Hitherto Shakespeare's characters had with him remained untouched, but paragraphs in the newspapers had just appeared, announcing the fact that it was his intention to appear at an early date as Hamlet. Everybody, from manager to public, was sanguine of a great success; it was the topic of the clubs, the conversation of the critics. Clement Walford himself felt inwardly comfortable and satisfied that failure with him could never be.

The night drew near. The day before the performance had arrived and the last rehearsal had been held. Clement Walford returned to his rooms. He stood before the gilded mantelpiece and looked into the glass. He started back! He felt giddy. Again he looked into the mirror with straining eye. He had never seen such a deathly pallor on his face before. He smiled at his foolishness. He attempted to reach a chair, but found his feet would scarcely carry him. Make what effort he might, his head was dropping onto his breast, he felt his hands trembling and looked at them to see if it was true.

"Excitement — strain — anxiety—nervousness—overdoing it," he cried; "a drink of water—brandy—will set me right. Where's the bell rope? Ah! there it is," and crawling towards the cord, across the room, he just managed to reach it when he fell to the ground.

When he awoke he lay in bed, the doctor standing by. He lifted his eyes towards those of the doctor.

"Why—why am I here? How long have I been here? Is this—is this the first night?" he asked.

"You have been here a few hours, that is all," was the doctor's reply. "Lie quite still—keep your hand in bed, now."

"Thank God! Thank God!" the man said. "I was afraid it was the first night. What's the matter with me? What's the matter with me? Why don't you answer? Don't look at me like that; answer me!"

"You have been doing too much lately—you are not strong."

"Not strong!"

"And nothing but perfect rest will bring you round again," the doctor said. "You have—"

"What? what? Tell me quickly!"

"You have broken a blood vessel!"

The man looked at the doctor for a moment. Then he rose in his bed. His voice was scarcely discernable; it was cold and harsh: it was not the voice of a man whose tone had fascinated all his hearers. He looked the medical man wildly in the face. He asked quietly at first:

"Do you know what to-morrow night is? No; of course you don't. But I do. It is the first night of 'Hamlet' and I shall be there—there with the house before me, hanging on every word I utter. Do you think this bed will hold me from my triumph? Do you think you, or the warning of any man will prevent me from welcoming the hour of my success? Not strong! you don't know me. Give me a drink of water."

With trembling hands the man refused the aid of the doctor, but lifted the glass to his lips and gulped down the contents. Hour after hour passed. The night had gone, and with the first signs of approaching day the doctor—who had remained a faithful watcher all through the night—drew aside the window curtains, and the light streamed in upon the man as he lay in his bed. It lit up the face of a man whose life was fast going. He looked almost pitifully towards the doctor.

"Why do you stare at me? Keep your eyes on the book and not on me.

"For in that sleep of death what dreams may come."

Then the man stopped. He murmured these words yet again and again; then, turning to the doctor, he told him what he well knew—that he was dying.

"Do you know what would be my dream in that long sleep?" he asked wildly and yet plaintively. "I will tell you. My brother! He would mock at me that I was snapped off in the very moment of my triumph. He would point at me and laugh. I, who had refused to hold out a helping hand to him and exert my influence to better his position. Oh! I couldn't bear that! Harry, Harry, old fellow, if I could only see you again, if I could only ask you to forgive me before it is too late; if I—doctor," he cried suddenly. "I must see my brother Harry! I must see him! You'll find his address in that desk—send for him. Tell him his brother Clem wants to speak to him and do at last what he has always refused. There, in that desk."

The doctor quietly laid the patient's head upon the pillow. Then he told him that which brought a wild smile of gladness to his pallid face. He laughed at the news. His brother Harry was below waiting even then. When the doctor saw that the man was dying, he had asked the servants if their master had any relations living. They only knew of one—a brother he never saw, a brother who only a few days before had knocked at the door and had gone away unseen. They knew his address, for he had left it. He had come up to London hoping against hope that still the great actor would endeavor to get him an engagement. So the doctor telegraphed to him, and he had only just thas moment come.

"Send him to me—now—at once," the dying man said in a voice now weak. "Tell him before he comes up that his brother Clem is longing to see him."

The doctor went to the door and called; and when he saw Henry Walford ascending the stairs he started in surprise. How like these two men were; how wonderfully like. But one, though poverty had lined her story upon his face, looked strong and well, the other man was dying fast. Quietly he entered.

"Harry, old fellow," one said, lifting a hand out of bed with a last strength.

"Clem! Clem!" the other cried, taking the proffered hand and putting the other arm around his neck and lifting his head up. Then the two men kissed each other.

"Harry, old boy, I'm dying! I know it. I shall have missed to-night, shan't I? But I've found you. Come nearer to me and listen. Harry, I've been cruel to you—you forgive me?"

"Clem, my brother; I forgive you, Clem," Henry Walford said, through his tears.

"I shan't be able to talk much, so I must say it quickly. A little water—just wet my lips. Thank you, thank you, old fellow. Now, listen earnestly to me. Come very near. Harry, your chance has come at last—and to-night. You can take it in my stead, for I shan't be here. You know the part? Ah! I thought so: you have played it many times. But mine—mine is a daring plot. There is my fur coat on the back of that chair—put it on. Yes; never mind about letting go my hand—put it on, Harry."

"Yes—yes—it is myself. Go down to the theater to-night. Walk in at the stage door without saying a word. They will touch their hats to you and let you pass. Go to my room—it is the first on the left. Make-up—dress—everything is there. Be in readiness—the orchestra will commence, the curtain will rise, and—and—as—you—step on the stage, the house will ring with applause. Your chance—has—come—at—last. Thank God—I—your brother, Clem—can give it to you. Harry—Harry, old fellow—Harry—hold my hand—I'm—good-bye—put your arms—round me—Harry—Harry—"

The man fell back in his brother's arms—dead.

That night the theater was packed. The stage doorkeeper touched his hat to the great actor as he passed through without a word. The prompter's bell rang and the curtain rose. Hamlet entered and the noise was deafening, and when the curtain fell he who had played the prince was called again and again. On the morrow the newspapers devoted column after column in eulogizing a remarkable performance, "one that would live in the memory of all who had seen it." Then, when the truth came out, the excitement and curiosity were increased twofold. Clement Walford was ever remembered, Henry Walford from that night was never forgotten. His chance had come at last.—Strand Magazine.

Between forty and fifty species of bacteria have been found in normal milk and cream. This large number is due to the fact that milk is apt to collect any species of bacteria that may be floating in the air.

THE "WAR-HORSE."

A Sagacious Old Brahma and Her Adventures With a Hawk.

It is generally supposed, and not without reason, writes a Youth's Companion contributor, that the hen is a particularly stupid bird. I have within my yards, however, an old Brahma hen whom nature has endowed with an intelligence and originality which would do credit to the average dog. This old bird is so occupied with impressing her superiority upon the other hens that she has earned the sobriquet of "The War-Horse." She lays very few eggs, but she is an unsurpassable mother, and to her are entrusted only the most valuable sittings.

Last July this hen had charge of a fine brood of chickens. One morning, as I called the half-grown broods together for their breakfast, I heard a loud and angry cackling in the woods about 100 yards distant. I continued to call, and presently the War Horse appeared on the edge of the woods. She cackled louder than ever, but refused to come to breakfast.

All her chickens were feeding at the trough. I counted them. There was not one missing, so I paid no more attention to the old hen. In a minute or two she came up to the trough, but would not touch the food. I stepped around to pick her up, for she was a pet, but the moment I approached she started off again for the woods, all the while cackling and screaming fiercely.

About twenty yards away she stopped and looked around, as if to see if I were following. Her wishes were so plain that I determined to gratify them.

As soon as she saw that I was coming she ran into the woods at such a pace that I lost sight of her, but her energetic utterances were a sufficient guide. In a few seconds she stopped and I came up to her.

She was standing on the edge of a little open glade, in the center of which stood a hugh hawk devouring a chicken. The hen shrieked first at the hawk and then at me, as urging me to come forward and give battle to the marauder.

I came, hotly enough, but the hawk eluded my attack, and sailed off hastily through the tree tops. The dead chicken proved to be one of a brood whose mother was all this time feeding comfortably in the chicken yard.

While I was identifying the remains I saw the War Horse stride over to a pile of underbrush near by and make a great fuss as if she were trying to drive out something hidden therein, and presently a chicken belonging to another brood came forth, still panic-stricken, and was conducted by the War Horse home to breakfast.

To that wise hen I have promised an old age into which no fear of the knife shall ever intrude.

A MAN'S SKELETON.

Remains of a Murdered Man Found in an Extinct Volcano in Mexico.

A party of American tourists who have been rambling over the mountains of this part of the country for some weeks, have just brought to Chihuahua a story of a find in an extinct volcano which is most remarkable. The party was lunching at the edge of the old crater when one of the young men determined to explore the interior, and to this end went down on a rope to a distance of about 100 feet, and landed on a ledge of rock. Here he was surprised to find the skeleton of a man which was crumbling to pieces with age. By the side of the skeleton were found some old metal buttons and what appeared to be a piece of parchment upon which there was writing in red. The writing was examined with a microscope and it was found to be in Spanish. It read as follows, as near as could be made out:

"My name is Rodrigo Perez. I was placed in this place by Manuel Perez, my cousin, and his servants because he thought I had been in love with his wife. I am innocent. I am starving to death slowly. I have written this with my blood, this the 8th day of January, 1820. I have tried to dig steps in the rocks, but can not and must die. With my dying breath I declare that I am innocent of any wrong to my cousin."

The records of Chihuahua show that a man named Manuel Perez at one time lived in this city, and that he suddenly disappeared at the same time his cousin did. It is now believed that after murdering his cousin, Perez went back to Spain, and has probably died long ere this. This place where the bones are found is frequently visited, but has never before been explored, and for this reason was an excellent place to hide the crime.—St. Louis Chronicle.

Cleansing Linen.

A patent has recently been issued by the French patent office for a new method of cleansing linen, the liquid used for the purpose being composed largely of petroleum.

The patent directs that a quarter of a pound of camphor be dissolved in four and a half pounds of light petroleum, like kerosene. One pound of raw onions is placed in this camphorated solution, and at the end of the two days the principle residing in the onions has all been extracted, when the liquid is filtered.

The resulting fluid is used as follows: A tablespoonful of it is added to from four to eight gallons of water. The linen to be treated is first rubbed with soap until a lather is produced, when it is placed in this diluted petroleum solution and boiled for ten minutes, after which it is rinsed in cold water and dried.—Philadelphia Record.

CONCERNING PLANTS.

What Effect Transformation Has on Them—The Almond and Peach.

That the luscious peach has been derived from the hard-shelled almond can no longer be denied. It is said that the peach in its original soil was a virulent poison, and that the Persian warriors brought to Persia some of the seeds and planted them for the purpose of poisoning the points of their arrows, so as to render wounds caused by them to be fatal, but a change of climate and soil produced a fruit which is not only luscious, but esteemed exceedingly healthful.

The small black sloe has been transformed into the juicy and golden yellow gage plum, says the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette, and the most delicious pippins owe their origin to the diminutive, acrid crab apple. The savory cantelope, in a wild state in India, varies from the size of a plum to that of a lemon, and in most cases is either insipid or bitter.

In Sicily there is a wild grass which, when ripe at the end of the summer, is gathered by the peasantry, tied in bundles and set on fire, not, however, to be consumed, but for a mere scorching. The flame flies rapidly through the light husks and beard of the plant and leaves the seeds slightly roasted, in which state they are eaten with considerable relish by numbers of the rural population. The botanical name of this Sicilian grass is ægilops, or goat's eye, the Greeks having believed it to be a remedy for a disease that appears in one corner of the eye.

The most remarkable fact concerning this plant, the goat's eye, is that it has been proven by experiment to be the parent of cultivated wheat. This fact was accidentally discovered by a French agriculturist. He wished to determine what effect cultivation would have upon the goat's eye, and planted, remote from any field of grass that might mingle with it, a few of the seed. The first crop showed much difference from the original, being two or three times taller and more grains to the stalk. At the end of seven years' experimenting the yield was over [illegible]00 grains for each one planted, and the transformation was complete; every plant was a true representative of cultivated wheat. Later he sowed them in open fields, and in no instance have they returned to the form of the original goat's eye grass.

The same experiments have since been tried by the English Agricultural Society with the same results. The nearest form to true wheat now found growing wild is the creeping couch grass, a perennial closely agreeing in all essential particulars of structure with our cultivated annual wheat.

LETTING THE CAT ESCAPE.

Fanny Wanted to Tell Her Mother and Practically Succeeded.

George had proposed and been accepted for several weeks, but the girl's esteemed parents had not been informed of it and they were exceedingly anxious and curious to know how matters stood, says the Detroit Free Press. The other morning the mother began a little detective work on the daughter.

"Fannie," she said cautiously, hasn't George Smuggins been here every night this week?"

"Yes, mamma, every night so far," responded the dutiful Fannie.

"And this will be Saturday night?"

"Yes, mamma."

"He seems to be coming pretty often, doesn't he?"

"It doesn't seem to be very often to me, mamma."

"Oh," and the old lady elevated her eyebrows curiously. "Did you hear your father when he came in last night?"

"No, mamma," said the girl demurely.

"Oh, you didn't?" replied the mother quickly. "Didn't he see you sitting in George's lap as he came in?"

"No, mamma," and the girl never turned a hair.

"Well," snapped the old lady, feeling that she was foiled, "I'd like to know why he didn't."

The girl smiled a gentle, forgiving, trusting, happy little smile.

"Because, mamma," she whispered, coming over to her—"because the parlor door was shut."

Hair and Physical Strength.

The discussion as to abundance of hair being evidence of strength has again come up, some arguing that there was nothing novel in Samson's strength being in his hair, and others that as a rule the strongest men are least blessed with an abundant hair covering. There are necessarily exceptions to all rules, but most feats of strength of modern times have been performed by people with luxuriant hair. There are five or six women now traveling with dime museum shows lifting enormous weights with their hands or teeth and performing other extraordinary feats of strength, and nearly all of them have magnificent heads of hair.

Among prize fighters the same rule applies, and although athletes generally keep their hair cut very close to the head, they usually have a very thick growth of hair and are seldom bald. Ancient history [illegible] a great deal in the [illegible] the fact remains that the strongest men of to-day have in almost every instance not only heavy heads of hair [illegible] quite a substantial growth [illegible] and arms. "Send him to me—now—at once," the dying man said in a voice now weak. "Tell him before he comes up that his brother Clem is longing to see him."

The doctor went to the door and called; and when he saw Henry Walford ascending the stairs he started in surprise. How like these two men were; how wonderfully like. But one, though poverty had lined her story upon his face, looked strong and well, the other man was dying fast. Quietly he entered.

"Harry, old fellow," one said, lifting a hand out of bed with a last strength.

"Clem! Clem!" the other cried, taking the proffered hand and putting the other arm around his neck and lifting his head up. Then the two men kissed each other.

"Harry, old boy, I'm dying! I know it. I shall have missed to-night, shan't I? But I've found you. Come nearer to me and listen. Harry, I've been cruel to you—you forgive me?"

"Clem, my brother; I forgive you, Clem," Henry Walford said, through his tears.

"I shan't be able to talk much, so I must say it quickly. A little water—just wet my lips. Thank you, thank you, old fellow. Now, listen earnestly to me. Come very near. Harry, your chance has come at last—and to-night. You can take it in my stead, for I shan't be here. You know the part? Ah! I thought so: you have played it many times. But mine—mine is a daring plot. There is my fur coat on the back of that chair—put it on. Yes; never mind about letting go my hand—put it on, Harry."

"Yes—yes—it is myself. Go down to the theater to-night. Walk in at the stage door without saying a word. They will touch their hats to you and let you pass. Go to my room—it is the first on the left. Make-up—dress—everything is there. Be in readiness—the orchestra will commence, the curtain will rise, and—and—as—you—step on the stage, the house will ring with applause. Your chance—has—come—at—last. Thank God—I—your brother, Clem—can give it to you. Harry—Harry, old fellow—Harry—hold my hand—I'm—good-bye—put your arms—round me—Harry—Harry—"

The man fell back in his brother's arms—dead.

That night the theater was packed. The stage doorkeeper touched his hat to the great actor as he passed through without a word. The prompter's bell rang and the curtain rose. Hamlet entered and the noise was deafening, and when the curtain fell he who had played the prince was called again and again. On the morrow the newspapers devoted column after column in eulogizing a remarkable performance, "one that would live in the memory of all who had seen it." Then, when the truth came out, the excitement and curiosity were increased twofold. Clement Walford was ever remembered, Henry Walford from that night was never forgotten. His chance had come at last.—Strand Magazine.

College Libraries.

American colleges are every year adding largely to their libraries. Harvard now has 365,000 volumes; Yale, 200,000; Cornell, 150,000; Columbia, 90,000; Syracuse, 75,000; Dartmouth, 68,500; Princeton, 68,000.

Bacteria in Milk.

Between forty and fifty species of bacteria have been found in normal milk and cream. This large number is due to the fact that milk is apt to collect any species of bacteria that may be floating in the air.

THE "WAR-HORSE."

A Sagacious Old Brahma and Her Adventures With a Hawk.

It is generally supposed, and not without reason, writes a Youth's Companion contributor, that the hen is a particularly stupid bird. I have within my yards, however, an old Brahma hen whom nature has endowed with an intelligence and originality which would do credit to the average dog. This old bird is so occupied with impressing her superiority upon the other hens that she has earned the sobriquet of "The War-Horse." She lays very few eggs, but she is an unsurpassable mother, and to her are entrusted only the most valuable sittings.

Last July this hen had charge of a fine brood of chickens. One morning, as I called the half-grown broods together for their breakfast, I heard a loud and angry cackling in the woods about 100 yards distant. I continued to call, and presently the War Horse appeared on the edge of the woods. She cackled louder than ever, but refused to come to breakfast.

All her chickens were feeding at the trough. I counted them. There was not one missing, so I paid no more attention to the old hen. In a minute or two she came up to the trough, but would not touch the food. I stepped around to pick her up, for she was a pet, but the moment I approached she started off again for the woods, all the while cackling and screaming fiercely.

About twenty yards away she stopped and looked around, as if to see if I were following. Her wishes were so plain that I determined to gratify them.

As soon as she saw that I was coming she ran into the woods at such a pace that I lost sight of her, but her energetic utterances were a sufficient guide. In a few seconds she stopped and I came up to her.

She was standing on the edge of a little open glade, in the center of which stood a hugh hawk devouring a chicken. The hen shrieked first at the hawk and then at me, as urging me to come forward and give battle to the marauder.

I came, hotly enough, but the hawk eluded my attack, and sailed off hastily through the tree tops. The dead chicken proved to be one of a brood whose mother was all this time feeding comfortably in the chicken yard.

While I was identifying the remains I saw the War Horse stride over to a pile of underbrush near by and make a great fuss as if she were trying to drive out something hidden therein, and presently a chicken belonging to another brood came forth, still panic-stricken, and was conducted by the War Horse home to breakfast.

To that wise hen I have promised an old age into which no fear of the knife shall ever intrude.

A MAN'S SKELETON.

Remains of a Murdered Man Found in an Extinct Volcano in Mexico.

A party of American tourists who have been rambling over the mountains of this part of the country for some weeks have just brought to Chihuahua a story of a find in an extinct volcano which is most remarkable. The party was lunching at the edge of the old crater when one of the young men determined to explore the interior, and to this end went down on a rope to a distance of about 100 feet, and landed on a ledge of rock. Here he was surprised to find the skeleton of a man which was crumbling to pieces with age. By the side of the skeleton were found some old metal buttons and what appeared to be a piece of parchment upon which there was writing in red. The writing was examined with a microscope and it was found to be in Spanish. It read as follows, as near as could be made out:

"My name is Rodrigo Perez. I was placed in this place by Manuel Perez, my cousin, and his servants because he thought I had been in love with his wife. I am innocent. I am starving to death slowly. I have written this with my blood, this the 8th day of January, 1820. I have tried to dig steps in the rocks, but can not and must die. With my dying breath I declare that I am innocent of any wrong to my cousin."

The records of Chihuahua show that a man named Manuel Perez at one time lived in this city, and that he suddenly disappeared at the same time his cousin did. It is now believed that after murdering his cousin, Perez went back to Spain, and has probably died long ere this. This place where the bones are found is frequently visited, but has never before been explored, and for this reason was an excellent place to hide the crime.—St. Louis Chronicle.

Cleansing Linen.

A patent has recently been issued by the French patent office for a new method of cleansing linen, the liquid used for the purpose being composed largely of petroleum.

The patent directs that a quarter of a pound of camphor be dissolved in four and a half pounds of light petroleum, like kerosene. One pound of raw onions is placed in this camphorated solution, and at the end of the two days the principle residing in the onions has all been extracted, when the liquid is filtered.

The resulting fluid is used as follows: A tablespoonful of it is added to from four to eight gallons of water. The linen to be treated is first rubbed with soap until a lather is produced, when it is placed in this diluted petroleum solution and boiled for [illegible] minutes, after which it is rinsed in cold water and dried.—Philadelphia Record.

Why Gold [illegible]

Gold does not tarnish like other metals for the reason it is not acted on by oxygen or by water. It is the moisture in the atmosphere that causes other metals to tarnish or oxidize.

CONCERNING PLANTS.

What Effect Transformation Has on Them—The Almond and Peach.

That the luscious peach has been derived from the hard-shelled almond can no longer be denied. It is said that the peach in its original soil was a virulent poison, and that the Persian warriors brought to Persia some of the seeds and planted them for the purpose of poisoning the points of their arrows, so as to render wounds caused by them to be fatal, but a change of climate and soil produced a fruit which is not only luscious, but esteemed exceedingly healthful.

The small black sloe has been transformed into the juicy and golden yellow gage plum, says the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette, and the most delicious pippins owe their origin to the diminutive, acrid crab apple. The savory cantelope, in a wild state in India, varies from the size of a plum to that of a lemon, and in most cases is either insipid or bitter.

In Sicily there is a wild grass which, when ripe at the end of the summer, is gathered by the peasantry, tied in bundles and set on fire, not, however, to be consumed, but for a mere scorching. The flame flies rapidly through the light husks and beard of the plant and leaves the seeds slightly roasted, in which state they are eaten with considerable relish by numbers of the rural population. The botanical name of this Sicilian grass is ægilops, or goat's eye, the Greeks having believed it to be a remedy for a disease that appears in one corner of the eye.

The most remarkable fact concerning this plant, the goat's eye, is that it has been proven by experiment to be the parent of cultivated wheat. This fact was accidentally discovered by a French agriculturist. He wished to determine what effect cultivation would have upon the goat's eye, and planted, remote from any field of grass that might mingle with it, a few of the seed. The first crop showed much difference from the original, being two or three times taller and more grains to the stalk. At the end of seven years' experimenting the yield was over 300 grains for each one planted, and the transformation was complete; every plant was a true representative of cultivated wheat. Later he sowed them in open fields, and in no instance have they returned to the form of the original goat's eye grass.

The same experiments have since been tried by the English Agricultural Society with the same results. The nearest form to true wheat now found growing wild is the creeping couch grass, a perennial closely agreeing in all essential particulars of structure with our cultivated annual wheat.

LETTING THE CAT ESCAPE.

Fanny Wanted to Tell Her Mother and Practically Succeeded.

George had proposed and been accepted for several weeks, but the girl's esteemed parents had not been informed of it and they were exceedingly anxious and curious to know how matters stood, says the Detroit Free Press. The other morning the mother began a little detective work on the daughter.

"Fannie," she said cautiously, hasn't George Smuggins been here every night this week?"

"Yes, mamma, every night so far," responded the dutiful Fannie.

"And this will be Saturday night?"

"Yes, mamma."

"He seems to be coming pretty often, doesn't he?"

"It doesn't seem to be very often to me, mamma."

"Oh," and the old lady elevated her eyebrows curiously. "Did you hear your father when he came in last night?"

"No, mamma," said the girl demurely.

"Oh, you didn't?" replied the mother quickly. "Didn't he see you sitting in George's lap as he came in?"

"No, mamma," and the girl never turned a hair.

"Well," snapped the old lady, feeling that she was foiled. "I'd like to know why he didn't."

The girl smiled a gentle, forgiving, trusting, happy little smile.

"Because, mamma," she whispered, coming over to her—"because the parlor door was shut."

Hair and Physical Strength.

The discussion as to abundance of hair being evidence of strength has again come up, some arguing that there was nothing novel in Samson's strength being in his hair, and others that as a rule the strongest men are least blessed with an abundant hair covering. There are necessarily exceptions to all rules, but most feats of strength of modern times have been performed by people with luxuriant hair. There are five or six women now traveling with dime museum shows lifting enormous weights with their hands or teeth and performing other extraordinary feats of strength, and nearly all of them have magnificent heads of hair.

Among prize-fighters the same rule applies, and although athletes generally keep their hair cut very close to the head, they usually have a very thick growth of hair and are seldom bald. Ancient history [illegible] a great deal in the [illegible] the fact remains that the strongest men of to-day have in almost every instance not only heavy heads of hair, [illegible] quite a substantial growth on [illegible] and arms. WHAT NOT TO LOSE.

Don't lose courage; spirit brave
Carry with you to the grave.

Don't lose time in vain distress;
Work, not worry, brings success.

Don't lose hope; who lets her stray
Goes forlornly all the way.

Don't lose patience, come what will,
Patience oftimes outruns skill.

Don't lose gladness; every hour
Blooms for you some happy flower.

Though be foiled your dearest plan,
Don't lose faith in God and man.

A LOWLY HERO.

Like Rasselas, the Abyssinian, we lived the balmy days "only to know the soft vicissitudes of pleasure and repose." 'We wandered "in gardens of fragrance and slept in fortresses of security;,' but like all pleasure seekers we were now weary of the monotonous round of uneventful days, and former delights grew stale. Gentle Mrs. Gray and Miss Harland, the invalid whose thin, scarlet cheeks and bright eyes told too plainly the presence of the destroyer, the quiet rector and the somewhat pompous major, with his little blonde wife, made up our party.

"Someone tell a story, please," cooed the pretty blonde, tossing aside "Hero Worship." "Who ever knew a live hero?" she laughingly asked.

"I have," promptly answered Mrs. Gray.

"How delightful! Do tell us about him; who was he?"

"The one instance of true heroism that came under my immediate notice," said the little woman, "was displayed by a hero of ebon hue, a strong young Hercules, who though rough and untaught, possessed a nature grand, deep and noble."

"Yes," assented the sentimental major. "Often among the humblest flowers we find the rarest odors."

"And," resumed Mrs. Gray, "among the busy workers, with hardened hand and toil-stained faces, we find great hearts, strong and true, and minds, though uncultivated, ready and sagacious. During the late war," she continued, "my father and brother were in the army, and the overseer being drafted into service, my mother, my sisters and myself were compelled to leave our beautiful home in the city and go up the river to the plantation to manage, as best we could, the affairs of that place. Our people were trustworthy and kind, so we had but little trouble. A few weeks after our arrival at the plantation our hearts were saddened by the death of a much-loved servant—Rachel was her name; she had nursed my mother's older children, and we were all very much attached to her. Rachel died suddenly, of heart trouble, the physician said, and her little children were cared for by a good old granny. Albert, the husband of Rachel, was a 'field hand,' and a reliable man."

"Of what time do you speak?"

"This was in the spring of 1864. The trans-Mississippi department was under the command of the confederate general, E. Kirby Smith. The struggle east of the Mississippi river had drawn from us the chivalry of the great Southwest; the sons of Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas were scattered from Gettysburg to Vicksburg, and a diminished force composed of the fathers and husbands were left to meet the gathering foe that threatened, with General Steele at Little Rock, Ark., and General Banks at Alexandria, La. The conscript bureau had gleaned the fields of the last of the 'bearded grain,' and nothing was left but 'the flowers that grew between'—the boys too young to go far from home, realizing now the danger coming so near, as fast as allowed repaired to camps, and yet the force was not large enough.

"Then a new order came, and the men-slaves were impressed and sent to the shops as laborers and teamsters in the various departments, to fill such places as they could, in order that for every slave so employed another soldier could be relieved and go to the front. The burden of feeding and clothing the army devolved upon the women of the South. Cheerfully, and with untold sacrifices, did they do their part. Our people did not escape the impressment law.

"Excuse me, but whom do you mean by 'our people?'" chirped the beauty from the hammock.

"We called our slaves 'our people,'" responded Mrs. Gray with a smile. "They were impressed into service and sent to Shreveport, La., to work. Among the men was one who had been married only a year; he objected to leaving his wife and baby. Jake was his name. While they were discussing the question among themselves, Albert presented himself at the dining-room door.

"'Good mawnin', mistis,' he said, doffing his hat, an' skuse me for 'sturbin' yer brekfus, but Ise axin a favor dis mawnin'.'

"'All right, Albert. What is it?' asked my mother.

"'Yer see, mistis, as how Jake is 'pressed' along wid tudder niggers an' Jake he got a likely wife an' mighty antic boy.'

"'Well?'

"Albert hesitated and scratched his woolly pate.

"'I know,' my mother said sympathetically, 'I know all the circumstances, but am powerless.'

"'I aint blaimin' yer, mistis; the Lawd knows I aint er blaimin' nobody; but I druther go in Jake's place an' let him stay wid hees wife an' boy.'

"'Why, Albert!' exclaimed my mother. 'You can't mean it! How should I get along without you? Think of the number of women and children to be provided for; the men left behind are too old and the boys too young to be depended on.'

"'I'se recommembrin' all dat, mistis; but I knows what it is for a man an' wife to be sipperated. Oh, mistis! de days all lonesome and de nights a year long. Taint no sunshine for Albut here nor nowhar. Hits all a dark shadder an' de moonshine don't nigh tech Albut. No, mistis, hits all trial an' tribberlashins. Lemme go, please, mistis. Let Jake stay wid hees wife,' plead the earnest voice, half joked by sobs.

"'Unk Albert,' called my little sister, going to his side, 'would you really go away to save Jake from going?'

"'Yes, honey,' he replied, his sorrowful eyes lighting up with a pleasant expression, as with his great black hand he stroked her sunny curls. 'Yes, honey, Unk Albut aint got nuffin' t' stay here fer. Jake got hees wife. Honey, ax yer mudder t' let ole Albut go.'

"'Use your own pleasure, Albert,' at last consented my mother.

"'De Lawd bress mistis!' he cried, as he hastened to the quarters.

"'De Lawd sabe mistis!' echoes Uncle Gabe, waving his hat as he leaned on his crutch.

"They left us that afternoon, one hundred tall, strong sons of Ham, of varying ages from twenty to forty-five years.

"'Albert,' said my mother, 'I must tell you before you go that in Shreveport men die at the rate of fifty a day, often the death rate is greater, the fever is terrible.'

"She looked up into his face, hoping by this last appeal to discourage his going.

"'Kain' he'p it, mistis; I spec hits 'bout es nigh a route to Hebbin by Shrebepote as hit air by dis plantashin. Albut ain't keerin', mistis, kaze de big gates up yander's wide open waitin' fer Albut; an' Lawd! Rachel's er standin' jes' inside.'

"'Boys!' he cried turning to the multitude assembled under the oaks on the lawn. 'Boys, mind mistis, an' do right an' be bidderble. Be hones', boys; don't go to cuttin' up no disregyardable capers an' pranks. Jes whirl in an' up an' make de crap fer mistis. Nebber mine de cotton, but ten' de cawn; plow deep, boys, an' don't let de grass git de upper hand o' de crap.'

"'Move on there! Move on, boys!' commanded the conscript officer.

"'Good-by, mistis. Far'well, chillun,' cried Albert. 'Gawd bress mistis!'

"'Gawd bress mistis!' cried a chorus of an hundred voices as they marched away.

"In those turbulent times there were no established mail routes in our country; indeed, the receipt of a letter was quite an event. For two months we heard nothing of our men; then one ran away from Shreveport and came home more dead than alive. Of the hundred who had gone from our plantation twenty-two had died. Albert had been detailed on hospital duty, and before another month had passed, he too had given up the burden of life. Good, faithful Albert! Though he lives neither in song nor story, his was as grand a heroism as was ever recorded; his Rachel waited just within the 'big white gate' and waited not in vain." Mrs. Gray had "tears in her voice" as she concluded her pathetic story.

"We brush the skirts of martyrs and tread the path with heroes and are all unmindful; but God noteth all and will reward as surely as the day followeth a dark night," reverently spoke the white-haired rector, as we sat silent and thoughtful.

"And it's just as near Heaven by way of Silvandale as home," murmured the invalid, folding her light wrap closer about her.

The great umbrellas of the elders, white and tender, quivered in the sunlight above the pale forehead, and the blossoms permeated the balmy air with a delicate, grateful fragrance. Thickets of the slender golden-rod and a wild rose twined about an old stump as if to convert their sweetness and beauty into a mantle of charity to hide its decaying strength and sightliness. Looking up through the shimmering leaves above into the pure sapphire dome beyond, I thought of the hero who gave his life for his friend. After his "lonesome days" and weary nights he reached the haven.

"'And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes,'" softly quoted the rector, as if following the drift of my thoughts. "'And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away.'"—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Dakota Courtship.

Mrs. Sarah Blumfield, an Ohio woman who has recently taken up a Dakota claim and incidentally interested a large number of Dakota bachelors, rashly tells a friend of her first Western proposal.

It was an elderly, wealthy and influential citizen who stalked into the lady's little kitchen one morning without the formality of an introduction and blurted:

"Say, Miss, you don't want to git married, do you?"

"No, sir, I don't" (emphatically).

"No 'fence, I hope, mum?"

"None at all, sir. Good morning."

Notice of Mortgage Forclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of ten and 50-100 dollars ($10.50) which became due on the first day of October A. D. 1890, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaie Normandin and Philomene Normandin, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the first day of October A. D. 1888, which mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office o the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the first day of October A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., in book 40 of mortgages on pages 112 and 113.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagors shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of forty-one and 70-100 dollars ($41.70) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-five (25) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Eight and 25-100 dollars ($8.25) which became due on the first day of December, A. D. 1889, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edward L. Haven, an unmarried man, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1888, which mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of July A. D. 1888, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in Book 36 of Mortgages on pages 329 and 330.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

Jacob Stambaugh arrived from Youngstown, Ohio, on Monday morning to look after his business interests here. Mr. S. says the spring is almost as backward in Ohio as here.

Ole Mortenson went down to his farm on the west side this week. Says farmers are all busy seeding—mostly with the broadcast seeder which seems to be preferred to the drill this spring.

Reports from the different sections of the county indicate that farmers are all busy seeding and very much wheat will go in this week. The broadcast seeder seems to be the favorite this spring.

L. C. McKnight and wife have returned from California where they went last fall with the intention of remaining. THE JOURNAL is informed that they are glad to get back to civilization again and intend to remain.

J. E. Morrisey is making some large castings for the new Fournet block. Crookston has an institution of which she may well be proud. The improvements put in this spring render the foundry capable of turning out any kind of work desired in that line.

At last we have our new press room nearly completed, our engine and press up and in running order and we hope ere another week to be fully ready to meet every demand on us for work in every department. Seven hands have been kept busy trying to keep up with the work and we are on the look-out for more help.

The owner of the lot on Robert street, on which stood the building occupied by Holmboe & Larson seems to be playing a sort of a dog-in-the-manger policy; he will neither sell at a reasonable figure nor re-build upon it, although his neighbors are anxious to build. He is fully able to build and for this reason it would seem as though it was his deliberate intention to block the progress of Robert street. Such a course should meet with the severe condemnation that it deserves.

W. N. Burrell, who came up from the shops at Chicago to set up our gasoline engine, returned home on Monday evening. Mr. B. is a practical machinist and an all around good man. While here waiting for our building to be made ready he occupied his time chiefly in talking up the good points of the Lewis gasoline engine to any of our citizens who would listen to him, and judging from the crowd who came to see him start it up he succeeded in interesting a good many. The company has in Mr. B. an invaluable man. Mr. B. goes to Texas soon to set up some 35 or 40 engines the company has sold down there.

R. L. Elder was up from Beltrami on Friday of last week.

Judge Mills comes up this week to hear several court cases that were unfinished at last term of court.

M. W. Jenson, the boss miller of McIntosh was in the city last week. Jenson owns and runs one of the best mills in the county.

P. C. Schmidt came up from Duluth on Tuesday morning. Says the weather is no colder here than in Chicago where he was last week.

M. G. Jennings was in from his farm in Parnell this week. Says he has got his seeding well along because he had his plowing done last fall.

John C. Wells was up from his farm at Edna last week. Has commenced his seeding operations but is delayed somewhat by wet weather.

The weather for the past week has been execrable. Too cold for enjoyment and too wet for plowing. ——— the McKinley bill anyhow.

E. C. Davis has a $75,000 contract from the Crookston Water Power and Light Co., and will begin to throw dirt as soon as the weather is settled.

Geo. Young has bought a fine large team of greys for his dray business. Everybody says "that is a dandy team!" What everybody says is true in this case.

C. Snyder brought in samples of oats and wheat from the stacks, which show the grain in excellent condition, wholly uninjured by the beating storms of winter.

S. B. Palmer was up from Lockbart last week to assist in setting up the JOURNAL'S gasoline engine. Mr. Palmer is agent for this engine and if it will do all the company claims for it he has a bonanza as everybody will want them in the future. At date of present writing it looks like this engine will be just what is needed in this country.

The Chicago Lady Quartette was greeted by a small house at the Opera House on Friday evening and was deserving of a much larger attendance, as it was one of the finest entertainments of the kind ever in our city. The only bad feature about it was the prohibition price put on and who ever was the cause of that, planned very unwisely. Had a reasonable prize been charged no doubt the Opera House House would have been filled to its utmost capacity.

Don't fail to see Prof. Whittier and have your eyes attended to. It is a fact, now generally known and conceded by all oculists and educated physicians, that certain so-called "Eye Diseases," of years gone by, as well as many cases of chronic head aches, neuralgia and nervous prostration in children as well as adults is due to a defective construction of the eye ball, or to an irregularity of one or more of its focusing powers. The deficiencies many times can only be discovered and remedied by a careful and thorough examination at the hands of a competent specialist. Consultation free. Office hours from 10 A. M. until 5 P. M.

May is the month for sowing seed in these northern regions. The Message makes its monthly appearance on our table. Mr. Battey has intimated to THE JOURNAL that the May Message, which will go to its subscribers this week, has some seed thoughts for every body. One thing is certain, the Message is improving rapidly from month to month. The different churches of Crookston will be interested in the items their pastors will have in the church column this month. The young people will gladly read the Message editor's continued article upon "The Girl's Sphere." Christian Endeavor folks will find the two full columns of comments upon their prayer meeting subjects decidedly interesting. JOURNAL readers will understand that we print the Message and have sort of revealed some of editor Battey's secrets.

Comrade A. Burnam reports that he has 100 acres of wheat sown already. He is building a fine farm house this spring and this, with spring's work, he says, keeps him guessing to keep up.

Sheriff Grundysen has returned from a trip to Superior where he went to identify a man supposed to be one of the murderers of Brown at East Grand Forks. Found it to be a case of mistaken identity, however.

A new press, on its first run is never at its best and ours was run this week under difficulties—a cold room and other little things like that, so if the paper has not as perfect an appearance as it should have we trust our friends will bear with us with patience.

See the new ad of The Fair in this issue. Wilson is not afraid to use printers ink judiciously as he knows his stock and prices will warrant it. Call at The Fair for bargains and if Wilson don't happen to be in, his gentlemanly clerk, Martin Mossefin, will wait on you to the Queen's taste.

Critic Apologizes.

MELVIN, April 24, 1892.

ED. JOURNAL: Allow me through the columns of your paper to thank Mr. Kirsch for the explanation called for some some time ago; also to apologize to Messrs. Rhinehart, Johnson, Stortroen and DeMers for my criticism of their official action in regard to the petition of the hail sufferers; also to inform Mr. Kirsch that lacking the educational and clerical ability which he possesses, we inquired of Mr. Holston whether there was anything in the law to prevent the granting of said petition. All he said was he did not know. When the county attorney was in doubt as to whether there was any reason to prevent the granting of this petition, I thought it quite proper to offer the criticism, and, under the same circumstaces would do so again. While I do not manage my affairs on the same "plan" that the gentleman engineered in recently awarding the county printing, still, it is satisfactory to myself, and that should satisfy even M. E. Kirsch.

Now, as I have not much time to bandy words with the Hon. "Chairman" and believing that the space occupied by me in your valuable paper is of more importance to you and your readers for something else, I will leave the gentleman to the contemplation of the beauties of his official record and the computing of his mileage.

CRITIC.

Gorton's Minstrels.

The oldest minstrel company in existence, Gorton's famous New Orleans minstrels, will arrive here in their own private car Tuesday morning, May 10, and can be heard in their well-known open air concert at 12 o'clock noon, in front of Tom Morris' jewelry store. A uniform parade will follow the concert. At 8 o'clock in the evening the Grand Opera House curtain will be rung up disclosing the most magnificantly set first part ever witnessed here in ministrelsy or any other class of company. It is composed entirely of silk, satin and plush which fill up the entire view. The company will be discovered, 25 in number, all attired in full evening dress. Gorton's reputation is too solid for anyone to doubt. This is the 27th consecutive year of his company and he has never broken a promise or misrepresented in the least. All attending can assure themselves that they will be treated to a gilt-edge, high-class, genuine performance of old-time minstrelsy. The company consists of white men only. Seats will be on sale at Tom Morris jewelry store Monday morning.

More ladies attend Gorton's than any other minstrel company in this country. It is universally considered the minstrel company of them all for ladies to attend safely as Manager Gorton has this season, and always has had, an iron-clad clause in contracts with the various members of his company to the effect that there will not be the slightest word, action or gesture in their performance to offend the most fastidious.

There are, this season, 25 high class artists of established reputation, all white men. The open air concert will take place at 12 o'clock, noon, in front of Tom Morris' jewelry store. A uniformed parade will follow. Seats for the above one performance here, Tuesday, May 10th, will be on sale at Tom Morris' on Monday morning.

Republican Conventions.

The National Convention will meet in Minneapolis, June 7th. At this time it will be interesting to recall its predecessors, and the nominees. The first convention was held in 1856, and Fremont and Dayton were the nominees. Defeated.

1860—May 16, at Chicago. Lincoln and Hamlin. Elected.

1864—June 7, at Baltimore. Lincoln and Johnson. Elected.

1868—May 21, at Chicago. Grant and Colfax. Elected.

1872—June 5, Philadelphia. Grant and Wilson. Elected.

1876—June 16, at Cincinnati. Hayes and Wheeler. Elected.

1880—June 24 at Chicago. Garfield and Arthur. Elected. This was the memorable convention when General Grant was beaten for the nomination.

1884—June 6, at Chicago. Blaine and Logan. Defeated.

1888—June 25, at Chicago. Harrison and Morton. Elected.

1892—June 7, at Minneapolis—the nominees you can bet on to suit yourself, only noting that if you live anywhere south or east of Minneapolis, the Burlington is the line you should travel over. For any information as to tickets, rates, etc., call on any Burlington ticket agent or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

"LITTLE THINGS"

Make up the sum of human life, or as Browning says:

"The little more, and how much it is;
And the little less and what worlds' away."

It's a little thing to tell the truth, but truth is a mighty lever. It is better than a large balance in the bank. It helps to buy goods—and—it helps to sell them.

This brings us to the point we want to make EMPHATIC.

"Our Prices are always lower than any others, on equal quality, perhaps."

"JUST A LITTLE BUT ALWAYS SOMETHING"

HERE ARE SOME "LITTLE MONEY" SAVERS:

25 Doz. style 99, "Royal Worcester Corset, worth $1.25	For 89c.

Notice to Clean Up.

Notice is hereby given that all streets, alleys, back yards and all accumulations of the past winter must be cleaned up and hauled away at once. Unless this notice is obeyed by property owners the owners will be dealt with according to law. This removal includes all ash piles, barn-yard offal, chips, dirt and other debris.

By order City Council,
E. C. CARRUTH,
3-5 City Clerk.

A Bonanza.

Mr. M. P. Losey was in from Euclid on Tuesday with business before the U. S. Land Office. It seems that he had found a quarter section of land within seven miles of this city to which there is no claimant, so he quietly came in to file a contest and rake it in. The original claimant has not shown up for many years, having virtually abandoned the claim and Mr. Losey is the first one to catch onto the fact.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Notice for Bids for Park Site.

Notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received by the city council until Tuesday, June 14th, for a site for a city park.

By order of city council,
E. C. CARRUTH,
[3-8] Clerk.

Millinery Very Cheap.

We do not pretend to sell our goods at cost but we will guarantee to sell as good goods as any at prices that can not be beaten. Try us.

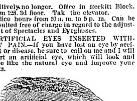
Office hours from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Can be consulted free of charge in regard to the adjustment of Spectacles and Eyeglasses.

ARTIFICIAL EYES INSERTED WITHOUT PAIN.—If you have lost an eye by accident or disease, be sure to call on me and I will insert an artificial eye, which will look and move like the natural eye and improve your ooks.



SIGHT IS PRICELESS.

Do not persist in abusing it by Ill-Fitting Glasses, sold by incompetent dealers or quacks but consult a qualified optician, and have your eyes Scientifically Tested and frames properly fitted to your face. There is more injury done than psople ape aware of by improperly fitted glasses. Too strong, too weak, too narrow, too wide, too big, too little, poor glaes, poorly made, ignorantlp made, are a few of the most glaring faults. Daily does the result of this ignorance upon the part of incompetent dealers in Spectacles come before me in distressing cases of permanently impaired vision.

I am a graduate of leading Opthalmic Schools and having had fifteen years experience in the adjustment of glasses, I can give you better satisfuction than those who make the adjustment of glasses merely an adjunct to the profession Eyes examined free of charge. Call and be convinced of my ability.

Frank Sanborn, the proprietor of a house of ill-fame at Carlton was seriously cut by his mistress, an octoroon. She used a razor and cut him in several places. One cut extends from the top of the head to the chin and may result fatally. She is in jail and will await the action of the grand jury now in session.

Lars Myhre, who lives 2½ miles west of Hickson, was killed at Moorhead by being run over by a drill seeder. One of the sharp shoes of the drill remained in his groin for over an hour before he was released. The accident happened while Myhre was harnessing four horses to the seeder.

Hiram Wendt, who was bound over to the grand jury for the robbery of Carlson & Gunderson's store at Dawnson in January made his escape. It is thought that parties who were his accomplices in the robbery and furnished the bail are instrumental in liberating him. The sheriff is doing all in his power for apprehension. Twenty-five dollars reward is offered.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Judge Templeton announced his decision in the cases of the gamblers, Murray and Dahl, charged with Karl Nelson in robbing the Union National Bank at Grand Forks. Murray was discharged and Dahl held at $3,000 bail.

The state board of the World's Fair managers held a meeting at Grand Forks to arrange for a public meeting to be held before the delegates to the state convention leave the city, for the purpose of getting an expression of public sentiment regarding World's Fair matters.

Fire broke out in the office of Attorney Serumgard, in the room over the basement occupied by the Devils Lake News in the First National Bank Building. It caught from fire working through fire brick and cement in the fireplace to a wooden sill and eating its way along the same to the wall. The fire was discovered and extinguished by the fire company. Damage about $150.

One-half of the townsite of Conductor, on the west line of the Great Northern railway, has been sold to a syndicate of Kansas capitalists for $7,000 cash. The company will expend $40,000 in improving the property and erecting buildings. The syndicate is also buying land for a colony of Kansas farmers who will arrive about the 15th inst.

It is an exploded theory that no sale of school lands could be made this year. The statue provides that a sale should be made in 1890. The constitution provides that sales can be made at any time the board thinks proper. The sales this year are simply an adjournment of the last ones made. The attorney general has not rendered any official opinion.

The Republican state central committee has issued a call for a convention for the nomination of state officers, which will be held at Fargo, August 2. The representation is fixed at one delegate at large and one additional delegate for every seventy-five votes polled in the last election, ascertained by taking the average vote for the first ten candidates on the ticket.

Joseph Kramer, an old employe of the Empire Lumber Company, while greasing machinery in a saw mill at Eau Claire, was caught in a belt. He was terribly crushed and died in 15 minutes.

LINE OF DEFENSE.

Denials and Startling Statements by the Defense in the Russell Trial.

The District Attorney Accused of Offering Money for False Testimony.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special, May 11.—In the Russell trial, the state having rested, Mr. James, attorney for Mrs. Russell, addressed the jury this afternoon. Not a hint had been heard of the true line of defense and it was a tremendous surprise. Mr. James said that if an acquittal were all the defense desired, he would rest right here and ask a verdict under direction of the court. But defendant wished to go upon the stand and show that the testimony of witnesses who remember everything that supports the state and forget all that would inure to benefit of the defendant is false. The only witness of her own nationality would show what there was to the spoon incident.

Mrs. Russell would deny specifically a great deal of the testimony. She would do more. She would place before the jury the identical packages of arsenic from which was taken the drug with which Bertha was poisoned. She would show she did not know of it till after the coroner's inquest. These packages were placed in her hands by other persons. Mr. James would advance no theories why arsenic was administered. The poison would be identified by four persons. It was found in a discarded mattress on the bed on which Bertha slept. He would show that the arsenic before Bertha's death was in her own hands and was wrapped in a handkerchief which and on the package was written: "Bertha, take these pills as I told you before." In a box were found some fifteen or more pills in gelatine capsules. The pills were analyzed by a chemist, who will show they contained arsenic sufficient to cause death. There were found also two one-dram homœepathic vials containing a powder 40 per cent arsenic and 60 per cent sugar. The handwriting was not Mrs. Russell's. He would offer evidence as to the methods of the prosecution, and show that witnesses have been offered money to testify falsely. Mr. Noble, a detective, would testify that shortly after he came here he was solicited by the district attorney to go to Mrs. Russell's house and place a vial of arsenic there that it might be subsequently found upon search; that the district attorney said: "The way to do is to place the arsenic there and then swear Mrs. Russell confessed all about it."

Mr. James said it would also be shown that a woman who, it was alleged, had bought arsenic for Mrs. Russell was told that if she would so swear she would not be prosecuted. Mr. James said in conclusion that, all in all, the charge against Mrs. Russell was one of the most damnable of conspiracies.

District Attorney Frawley states in an interview that the charges in regard to him made in Mr. James' address to the jury will be amply demonstrated to be false in every particular.

The defense has chirographic experts at work on specimens of the handwriting of Adam and Edward, brothers of Peter Erickson, and it is supposed an effort will be made to show connection between them and the handwriting on the package of arsenic alleged to have been found in the mattress.

A SAD ROMANCE.

A Girl's Life Ruined by a Worthless Scamp.

CHICAGO, May 11.—The deplorable infatuation of a young girl for a worthless scamp, the elopement of the couple, the theft of a large sum of money by the girl from her wealthy father to assist in the elopment, and finally her ruin in a second class hotel in this city, form the outlines of a sad romance which has just come to light here to-day. Christie Jackson, the daughter of Hon. D. A. Jackson, of Sharon Springs, N. Y., a leading politician of that state, is the victim. There were four characters in the drama, Miss Jackson, Louis Marcott, George Hoffman and Teresa Smith, the daughter of a leading clergyman of Sharon Springs and Miss Jackson's boon companion. Miss Smith had agreed to be a party to the elopement but backed out at the last moment. The three others left Sharon Springs while Mr. and Mrs. Jackson were away from home, and came West. At Detroit Hoffman left the couple, taking the $1,000 Miss Jackson had stolen from her father. Hoffman was arrested in New York, and through him, the whereabouts of the runaway pair became known. Sheriff Black of Sharon Springs came to Chicago, and with the aid of the police, to-day arrested Marcott and Miss Jackson. The latter is utterly broken down. The sheriff and his prisoners left for New York to-night. It is stated that the girl's brother will not await the slow process of law to secure the punishment of the abductor.

AT HARD LABOR.

A Catholic Priest Goes to Jail for One Year.

WINNIPEG, May 11.—Father Cherouz, the Catholic priest of an Indian village called Lillooet, has just been sentenced to one year at hard labor in the common jail at New Westminster for advising Chief Kilipaulki, of the Indian tribe, to flog a young Indian girl accused of the offense described in John viii., 4. The Indian chief and the two Indians who did the flogging were also sentenced, the chief to six months and the two Indians to two months each. From the evidence it appears that the girl was held on the ground, her back bared and whipped with a rawhide. Bail was refused and the offenders are now locked up.

WOMEN'S WORK.

Biennial Convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

CHICAGO, May 11.—The corridors of the Palmer house were thronged to-day with ladies. The federation of women's clubs is about to hold its biennial convention and nearly four hundred delegates have already arrived. Many more are expected. Tomorrow the convention will hold its first session in Central Music hall and will be called to order by Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown of Orange, N. J., the first president of the federation. Many well known women will attend, including Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Susan G. Cook, Mrs. Mary E. Mumford and Jennie June. The object of this federation is to discuss and compare the methods of conducting women's clubs the world over in order to mutually benefit each other. The association was organized in 1889 at a meeting of the Sorosis in New York, but this is the first general gathering of delegates. To-day the national council of women, a distict body, held an executive session at the Palmer house. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. May Wright Sewall of Indianapolis. Among those present were Miss Willard and Susan B. Anthony. The reports of three important committees which have been at work for a year were made. The work of one has been to secure equal rights for women in the divorce courts and to get for women equal representation upon the divorce committee which is seeking to have uniform divorce laws passed in each state. The question of a suitable business dress for women, one which could be worn in traveling, on the street and about work, was considered by a committee consisting of Mrs. Annie Jenness-Miller, Frances E. Russell, Dr. Emory, Miss Octavia W. Bates and Mrs. Frank Stuart Parker, while Mrs. Leland Stanford, Mrs. Laura M. Blount, Marie Deschay and Harriet Taylor Upham have been working to secure from the United States government the passage of a bill exacting equal pay for equal work performed by men and women in the service of the government.

The meeting of the woman suffragists at the Sherman house, this city, to-day resulted in the formation of a society to work for the bringing about of equal suffrage. The following permanent officers were chosen:

President, ex-Senator M. B. Castle of Sandwich, Ill.; vice president at large, Rev. Olympia Brown of Racine, Wis.; recording secretary, Mrs. E. J. Loomis; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. J. McKinney; treasurer, E. J. De Voe, the last three being of Chicago.

Permanent Fair Commission.

HURON, S. D., Special, May 11.—The new world's fair commission is in session here. It was specially called together by the governor for a permanent organization and to divide the state into districts for canvassing for funds. There is a general belief that but little difficulty will be experienced in raising the $100,000 wanted on the certificate or stock plan. Gov. Millette, S. A. Ramsey and William McIntyre, of the national commission, are here.

Evangelist Mitchell Will Talk.

HURON, S. D., Special, May 11.—The Baptist people of South Dakota will hold a series of meetings during May, June and July, conducted by Rev. S. K. Mitchell, a well known evangelist of Boston. Mr. Mitchell comes to the state under the direction of the American Baptist Home Missionary society, and will spend but ten days in any one place. The towns in which the meetings will be held will be the larger ones and those most conveniently reached by railroads. Wonderful results are anticipated from these evangelistic meetings

Life's Journey Ended.

MILWAUKEE, May 11.—William Steinmeyer, the leading retail grocer in the city, died at his residence to-day, after an illness of several months' duration. He was fifty-one years of age, and leaves a wife and three children.

LAKE CITY, Minn., special, May 11.—Sallie C., wife of Ira Dorrance of this city, died yesterday, aged eighty-one years. She had lived here for twenty-five years. She leaves an aged husband, three sons, three daughters and numerous grandchildren.

President Soule Won't Return.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, May 11.—Mr. Soule, who was wanted as a witness in the Chicago boodle aldermanic cases, is here again today and was interviewed by several Chicagoans who refused to give their names. Mr. Soule said he would not return to Chicago; that the franchise had been passed and that there was nothing to do; several aldermen were under indictment and they were the last men who could wish to see him.

Society Surprised.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Special, May 11.—A great sensation has been created in society circles here by the news from Sioux City to the effect that H. F. Sutliffe, of the wholesale firm of Sutliffe Bros., at this city was married in that city to Miss Kittering of Marion. He recently secured a divorce from his wife in the courts at Watertown, S. D., claiming incompatibility of temper. Miss Kittering was formerly a bookkeeper in the employ of Sutliffe Bros. here.

Mills Expected to Close.

HOKAH, Minn., Special, May 11.—The trouble between the Root river water power owners at this place vs. Cargill Bros. of La Crosse, has reached a point where it is probable that the mills will be compelled to shut down. Two suits, aggregating nearly $60.000 in controversy, have been pending for over a year. Many men will be thrown out of employment if the mills close.

Grand Lodge United Workmen.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Special, May 11.—The grand lodge United Workmen of the Dakotas is in session here. All but two or three of the hundred delegates are in attendance. After the day's proceedings a banquet was tendered the grand lodge by the local organization. Speeches were delivered by prominent men of this city. Then a social time was enjoyed until a late hour.

Beach Strewn With Logs.

WASHBURN, Wis., Special, May 11.—Owing to the breaking of booms three million feet of logs are piled up on the beach at Sioux and Onion rivers. Many vessels are anchored in the bay awaiting settled weather, and several schooners are waiting here for their barges, which are fast in the ice at Duluth.

Will Try Fruit Raising.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., May 11.—A colony o[illegible] under the leadership of J. S. E[illegible] leave this city over the Omaha railway [illegible] Das Palos, Cal., to take up fruit farms [illegible] the ranches. Das Palos is in the great San Joaquin valley, which is owned and operated by the Southern Pacific railway.

BRUSH ON MINNESOTA.

The Gallant Colonel Holds it to be the Greatest State.

St. Paul Daily Globe:—Col. C. H. Brush, of Fergus Falls, the national bank examiner for this district, was one of the well-known Northern Minnesotans at the Merchants yesterday. Col. Brush was a member of the lower house of the legislature in 1889, when he earned the reputation of being one of the ablest, handsomest and most courteous men in that body. Just now he is in St. Paul attending to the duties of his office. Col. Brush is the owner of a large farm near the celebrated Ten-Mile lake on the line of Wilkin and Otter Tail counties, and for a number of years prior to 1890 resided upon it and was a real farmer. Just now he is rejoicing over the increased demand for farm land in the Red River Valley and their rise in value. "In the last year and a half," he said, "the value of farm lands has doubled in our country, and there is a demand for farms now at the increased price, whereas there was no demand two years ago when we asked half as much per acre. The farmers are in much better condition, and feeling not only hopeful but very good over the outlook. When I first settled on my farm the country was comparatively new, and like all new countries it had to go through a period when a great many could not help becoming discouraged. But we are coming out all right. The rich soil of Minnesota, well watered and convenient to markets as it is, cannot help making the state the greatest in the whole Union. We have all the natural advantages and resources that a people can desire. Our timber, iron and building stones afford us opportunities for manufactures on a large scale, and when considered in connection with our constantly increasing agricultural and stock-raising interests, must give us rapid growth and a period of unexampled activity and prosperity in the near future."

Better Country Roads.

No topic has been more widely discussed the past winter than the condition of our country roads. The evils of our present system have been emphasized by photographs and editorials in every journal in the land, and the verdict is unanimous that our present country highways are a disgrace to an enlightened civlization. If this popular discussion is to be attended by any beneficial results it must pass from theory to practice, and right now is when the change should occur. We cannot expect to cover the country in a few months, or even years, with tile Macadam and Telford roads. They are too expensive and in many sections stone cannot be obtained. How then is the dirt road to be made passable at all seasons of the year? Only by dropping antiquated methods of road work and adopting improved machinery for that purpose.

In our advertising columns appears an illustration of an Austin Steel Reversible Road Machine, sold by Larsen, Carpenter & Co., Main Street, Crookston, Minn. One of these machines with 2 men and from 4 to 6 horses will do more work, and in a better manner, than 20 men with 20 teams, scrapers and plows, and yet in many of our towns the roads are still worked out in the same old slipshod extravagant manner. If all our roads were graded up with a good crowning surface and well formed ditches every spring, a mile of which work one of these machines will do in a day, and were then dressed up and the ditches cleaned up at needed intervals during the summer and fall, at the rate of from 2 to 4 miles a day with an Austin machine, we would have a different state of things during the winter and without a dollar's extra cost. The money we have been wastefully spending each year will accomplish all that is needed if used with one of these machines.

Didn't Know it was Loaded.

McIntosh Times:—The accidental shooting of Emma Christianson, the little daughter of Nup Christianson, of this township, by Lars Larson, a neighbor boy of about the same age, is the saddest, as well as the most uncalled for accident which has happened in this community for years. It is the old, old, story. A loaded revolver in the hands of a boy who did not know it was loaded.

The shooting occurred on Mr. Christianson's farm, about two miles from this city, where, it seems, the Larson boy in company with a number of others, where playing with and snapping their revolvers, one of which proved to be loaded and exploded just as little Emma was mounting the ladder to call the boys to dinner. The ball entered her forehead just above the left eye, fractured the skull, took an upward and backward course and inflicted an extremely dangerous and probably fatal wound. Dr. McEachran was called, and, though he was unable to locate the ball and considered recovery almost impossible, did everything in his power to relieve her suffering and, if possible, save her life.

HAPPY WEDDING.

Two Loving Hearts Happily United Yesterday Afternoon.

Grand Forks Herald:—The train from Crookston yesterday morning bore two loving hearts from that city. They were Mr. E. K. Green and Miss Lena Larson, both of Crookston. They took rooms at Hotel Gorden and yesterday afternoon the wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Jorgenson in the parlors of the hotel. Miss Boe acted as bridesmaid and Mr. P. Berg, of this city, was best man. The ceremony was attended by a few of the friends of the couple, and after the ceremony, most hearty congratulations were extended.

They are both prominent and respected young people of Crookston, the groom being head clerk in the store of Locken & Holmboe. They left on the Great Northern train for Crookston last evening.

St. Paul Dispatch:—The appearance of Gov. Merriam in the Republican Convention of Thursday and the hearty enthusiasm with which that gentleman expressed the demand of the people of this state that Senator Davis shall succeed himself, disposes of a good many vagrant fancies which have found circulation in political circles for some time past. That gathering was a notable one, both in point of the number and representative character of those who attended it. It was made memorable by the successive enunciations of Republican opinion which found expression there through the platform adopted, were delivered. While Senator Davis easily carried off the honors as the orator of the occasion, it was made very plain that even in that role the present executive of the state carried himself in a way which was worthy of the occasion.

Thief River Falls Press:—Last week Wednesday, Wiley Tindolph and R. A. Wilkinson who represents the Great Northern railway came here to make final arrangements in regard to continuing the St. Hilaire branch to this place. Mr. Wilkinson thought best to change the line in the village a few blocks farther west, and submitted a proposition, for that purpose, for the right-of-way through the village and $2,500 in cash. A citizens meeting was called and after deliberation and canvassing up to Thursday night the right-of-way and money was provided for or guaranteed upon condition that the road should be constructed and operated to this place this summer. Mr. Wilkinson went away very much pleased with the feeling of the citizens and said he thought the road would be completed soon. A letter received last night requested that everything be closed up immediately as the company wished to complete this line as soon as possible so that their outfit could be taken further south. It is safe now to believe that with good weather the road will be complete and the cars running to this place by July 1st.

Grand Forks Daily Herald:—The one phenomenon, the editors of the Democratic newspapers, and the statesmen of that party cannot explain is the wonderful growth of the United States in the past thirty years notwithstanding during all save four years of that time it has been the helpless nation of "Republican misrule and oppression." About the only thing in all those years which has not been improved and developed is the principles of the Democratic party.

St. Hilaire Spectator:—Seeding has been progressing very slowly and it is beyond doubt a fact that not over fifty per cent. of last year's acreage will be sown to wheat this spring. A very large amount of plowing is yet to be done and it is getting so late that few farmers will seed very much wheat on spring plowing. A large number of fields are still so wet that the farmers cannot get onto them.

Little Falls Daily Transcript:—M. Lally, manager of T. B. Walker's saw mills at Crookston and Grand Forks, is in the city to-day. He had heard of the Pine Trees Company's big mills and stopped off to get pointers. Mr. Lally, who is a saw mill man of large experience is very much taken with Little Falls' availability as a manufacturing city.

Duluth Weekly News:—The Herald talks about the bosses supporting Nelson. The fact is that the bosses are opposing him. The News at least cannot be charged with being the organ of St. Louis county bosses.

FLOW ON, SWIFT STREAM.

Flow on, swift stream, amid the flowers,
  Flow on and dance with joy,
And tell me of the happy hours
  When I was once a boy.
I watched thee with the loved ones then,
Now all alone I come again
  To wander by the river;
And I am old and they are gone,
But it unchanged is gliding on
  As young and bright as ever.

Unchanged it seems, yet who can stay
  The water's ceaseless motion?
The little waves of yesterday
  To-day have reached the ocean;
Unmarked, unmissed, they swiftly fly,
Unmarked, unmissed, we, too, must die,
  And leave the mighty river,
Where youth, and joy, and love, and strife,
And all the various modes of life,
  Flow on unchanged forever.

WITH VENGEFUL INTENT

"I cannot understand it at all," said Dr. South, as he and the junior physician, Ernest Wyville, emerged from one of the wards of the hospital at Eresbridge. "Instead of becoming stronger since his rib was set, he gets weaker every day. If I did not know it was impossible, I should suspect blood poisoning. But there is no inflammation and the abrasion was cleansed too thoroughly to admit of that hypothesis. I really cannot understand it, unless there is some internal injury of which we have no knowledge."

"The wound appears to be healing all right," responded Ernest Wyville, a handsome, ruddy-faced young man, with a short fair beard; "and, as you say, there is nothing but some injury behind it—internal bleeding, in fact, —to account for his continued weakness."

An awkward accident in the hunting field was the primary cause of this conversation. While following the Eresbridge hounds on the previous day, Jack Wilberforce had had an ugly "spill." In leaping a gate his horse struck his hoof against the top bar, and after bringing its rider to grass, ended the day's performance by rolling upon him. The consequence was that, when Jack was carried insensible to the hospital—which, lying on the outskirts of the town, was nearer than his own home—it was found that two of his ribs had been fractured.

Yet his injuries were not such as to raise any great alarm in the mind of Dr. South. Once the bones were set, Jack's strong and healthy constitution would soon overcome any ill effects he might at first experience from the accident. But as the day wore on the patient showed no signs of rallying. A hectic flush overspread his face, his temperature rose, and incipient fever appeared to have taken possession of him.

Two days later, nowever, a perceptible change for the better set in.

"I am sorry I have been called to town," said Dr. South, on the second day. "I should have liked to watch the progress of the case myself. However, I may safely let it rest with you, Mr. Wyville. I would advise you to continue the same treatment."

"I will do my best for Mr. Wilberforce,' said Ernest, as the surgeon rose. "When do you leave for London?"

"The call is imperative; I must go at once. Six or seven days will see me back again, I hope."

When the doctor had left, Ernest went to his own private room, and sitting down by the fire, his body bent forward and his hands resting on his knees, seemed plunged in a profound reverie. He was recalled to himself by the appearance of one of the attendants at the door.

"A young lady wishes to see you, sir—the same as called yesterday."

"Show her in, Briggs. Ah," as a daintily clad girl entered the room—a vision of loveliness in face and figure—"ah, Miss Palmer—to inquire about our patient, I suppose?"

"Oh, Mr. Wyville is he better?" cried the new comer, with an anxious, beseeching look. "Will he soon be well?"

"I trust so," was the reply. "But at present his condition is not as reassuring as it might be. Time will be necessary for complete recovery."

"Poor Jack—poor Jack!" exclaimed Lucy Palmer, sadly. Then suddenly, "Could I not see him?"

"Impossible—absolutely impossible," Ernest rejoined. "He has just fallen into a deep sleep, and sleep is the best medicine for him at present."

"And there is nothing serious the matter?" inquired the girl, fearfully. "Nothing that gives cause for anxiety?"

"No grave symptoms have as yet revealed themselves. But to be frank with you—although I do not wish to alarm you—I may say that I fear it will be some little time before he is convalescent. However, you may rely on our greatest care."

"I am sure of it," said Lucy. "You and he were ever such great friends that you must be as eager as I myself to see him well again."

Seeing that she was engaged to marry John Wilberforce, Lucy Palmer's solicitations were but natural. In Earnest's answer to them there was a certain restraint, which, in her agitation, escaped the girl's attention. After she had left, he returned to his former position before the fire, and there sat motionless. A stern, sullen look came into his eyes, and his brow wrinkled with a dark scowl.

He rose and paced the apartment to and fro swiftly, biting his lips savagely.

"It is hard, very hard," he murmured, wrathfully, "that my life and happiness are to be wrecked through him—that I am to see him lead her to the altar whom once I so nearly won to be my bride. Yet that is what I shall see if he lives. But will he live? Even Dr. South, although he tried not to show it, had fears on that score. Suppose he should die—what then? More unlikely things have happened."

As regards Jack Wilberforce, the unlikely was rapidly becoming the probable—nay, the inevitable. He experienced a sudden relapse, and within five days of Dr. South's departure, he was quite prostrate. His eyes stared vacantly at the ceiling; his fingers twitched nervously upon the coverlet; his mouth was tight drawn with pain.

"Poor fellow!" whispered the nurse when the young doctor visited his patient on this day. "His case seems hopeless."

"I am afraid it is," answered Ernest in low tones. "All that man can do for him has been done."

"I am sure it has, sir. But that will be poor consolation to his relatives and Miss Palmer. The devotion she has shown in visiting him every day and soothing his anguish has been more than human. He never appears better that when she is near."

Till four o'clock should come around the nurse busied herself in attending the wants and alleviating the sufferings of the dying man. As the clock struck the hour, she poured out the medicine and advanced with it in her hand towards the bed. At that moment the door opened and Dr. South appeared.

"Nurse," he exclaimed, "can you tell me where Mr. Wyville is?"

Before the question could be answered he glanced at the patient. "What! No better? Mr. Wyville cannot surely have paid heed to my instructions."

He crossed the room hurredly and bent over the bed. With a hasty exclamation he started back, and then, leaning forward again, gently parted Jack's quivering lips. The gums thus exposed were of an unnatural, bluish tinge.

"Great heavens!" cried the old doctor. "The man has been poisoned!"

"Poisoned!" echoed the nurse. "Impossible. Mr. Wyville himself has attended to him."

"As—and that is some of the medicine?"

He took the medicine glass from the nurse's hand, and first smelling it, put the liquid to his lips. Immediately he spat it out, and dashing the receptacle and its contents to the ground.

"Mr. Wyville must be mad—or worse," he exclaimed. "It is aconite!"

Hastily preparing an antidote, and forcing it between Jack's clenched teeth, Dr. South rushed from the chamber. On the stairs he met an attendant.

"I think there is something wrong with Mr. Wyville," the man said. "His room door is locked, and as I passed I heard him groan awful."

"And no wonder," answered the old surgeon. "I'll see to him. You run and summon a policeman."

"A policeman?"

"Yes. Don't stand gaping there—go at once."

The man was off like a shot, and Dr. South proceeded towards Ernest's room. The door was still bolted, but all was now silent. It was not till the policeman broke the lock with a blow from his foot that the sudden silence was explained.

Prone on the floor, a small phial grasped between his fingers, lay the dead, rigid body of Ernest Wyville!

"It looks like suicide," hazarded the policeman.

"Beyond question," assented Dr. South, picking up the phial, and adding, sotto voce, "the best thing he could do, too."

"Here's a document," said the officer, turning over the papers on the bureau. "It is sealed and addressed to you, sir."

Dr. South took the letter and opened it. It was Ernest Wyville's confession.

"By the time you read this," it ran, "the hand that wrote it will be stilled for ever. Although my love was scorned and rejected, I vowed that no other man should possess Lucy Palmer so long as I lived. That vow I have fulfilled. John Wilberforce was thrown into my power and I had no mercy. At first I hoped that by minute quantities of vegetable poison to undermine his constitution, so that he would appear to succumb solely to the injuries he had received. This plan I was obliged to abandon, for you had already noted the unfavorable symptoms that followed. Your absence, however, gave me a free hand. Yet the man I hated would not die—his extreme vitality withstood the subtle poison—and at last I determined to give him a final and adequate dose, and, as the cause of his death would then be apparent, to end my own life at the same time."

The letter wound up with requests as to the disposal of his personal property and other kindred matters which do not concern our narrative.

"My arrival was most opportune," ejaculated Dr. South when he had finished reading the missive. "If my business in town had detained me as long as I anticipated, the fatal draught would have been given and John Wilberforce would now have been beyond all human help."

As it was, Jack did not die. For weeks he hovered between life and death, but at length Dr. South's skill and assiduous care brought him safely through it all. Yet even now his wife can never bear allusion to that fearful time without a shudder and a silent prayer of thankfulness.—Saturday Evening Post.

LINCOLN'S LAST HOURS.

Shedding Light on the Great President's Religious Character.

A letter on the religious character of President Lincoln by Mr. Miner, an old neighbor and friend of the president, in the Boston Christian Leader, contains some facts not heretofore known. We give its conclusion:

"It has been a matter of regret to many good men that he came to his tragic end in such a place. But if the circumstances of his going there were fully known it might relieve their minds somewhat. It has been said that Mrs. Lincoln urged her husband to go to the theater against his will. This is not so. On the contrary she tried to persuade him not to go, but he insisted. I have this statement from Mrs. Lincoln herself. He said: 'I must have a little rest. A large procession of excited and overjoyed people will visit me to-night. My arms are now lame shaking hands with the multitude, and the people will pull me to pieces.' He went to the theater, not because he was interested in the play, but because he was careworn and needed quiet and repose. Mrs. Lincoln informed me that he seemed to take no notice of what was going on in the theatre from the time he entered till the discharge of the fatal shot. He was overjoyed at the thought that the war was over and there would be no further destruction of life. She said the last day he lived was the happiest day of his life. The very last moments of his conscious life were spent in conversation with his wife about his future plans and what he wanted to do when his term of office expired. He said he wanted to visit the Holy Land and see those places hallowed by the footprints of the Savior. He said there was no city he so much desired to see as Jerusalem, and with this word half spoken on his tongue the bullet from the pistol of the assassin entered his brain, and the soul of the great and good President was carried by the angels to the New Jerusalem above."

WINTER DAY'S JOURNEY.

A bitter February day. Not a pleasant day to travel in, by any means; but, then, Lettice Mainwaring was one of the sort that makes the best of everything.

"It's a long journey over the hills, Miss," said the wife of the landlord of the little one story tavern that was perched on the crest of the highway, "and the snow's powerful deep."

"I think a winter landscape is the prettiest thing in the world," said Lettice, cheerily, as she wound her fur boa round and round her neck.

"And old Stokes' stage is awful uncomfortable," added the landlady.

"I like stage riding," asserted Letty.

"You'll not get there till dark."

"O, that is sooner than I expected."

And Letty climbed up into the stage coach, which stood creaking and groaning at the door, having just rumbled up from the next village, a mile or so down the hill.

One solitary passenger occupied the opposite corner—a tall, dark man, with a Spanish sort of complexion and clear, dark eyes, who wore an odd sort of olive green cloak or mantle, heavily trimmed with sable fur. He nodded briefly in return to Letty's smiling recognition. Our little heroine would have talked with a polar bear, had a polar bear chanced to be her traveling companion.

Lettice arranged her furs and her basket and her bonnet strings, and wondered secretly how far the tall man was going.

"Can I be of any assistance to you?" courteously queried the gentleman, as Letty searched in the straw at her feet for a dropped glove.

"Thanks—no," said Letty, coming up again with very red cheeks and curls a little disheveled. "Are you going all the way through?"

"As far as the stage goes—yes."

"O," said Miss Mainwaring, "so am I."

The gentleman nodded interrogatively, and went back to his paper.

"Cross thing!" thought Letty, involuntarily pouting her cherry lips. "Why can't he talk and make himself agreeable? And he knows very well that we are to be shut up here together for eight long hours."

But the wild, mountainous landscape, as it flitted by, white gleaming with snows and darkly fringed with the waving of hemlock boughs and solemn crested pines, was, after all, nearly as good a study as the "human face divine," and Letty soon forgot her temporary annoyance and chagrin in the white skeleton like walls of a deserted old paper mill long since disused and fallen to ruin.

"I wonder if it is haunted?" said she, aloud.

The stranger smiled and laid down his paper.

"Do you believe in such things?" he asked.

Lettice Mainwaring laughed and colored.

"Of course not, and yet—Are you much acquainted in this region of the country?"

"I have lived hereabouts a good deal."

"O! Then perhaps you know Easterham Hall?"

His face brightened.

"O, yes. You are going there?"

"Yes. I am to be governess to the little children," said Letty, making haste to enlighten him as to her true position, in order that he should fully comprehend that she was no elegant young lady coming to the hall to make a visit, but a humble little working bee, who was obliged to toil steadfastly for the daily bread she ate.

"Indeed!" he said.

And Letty was vexed at herself for noticing the polite indifference into which his tone subsided.

"I suppose it is a very fine old place," she went on.

"Very—for those who fancy 'fine old places.' To my taste they are apt to be overrun with rats, full of draughts and picturesquely inconvenient."

"And haunted, perhaps?" mischievously put in Lettice, the roguish sparkles coming back to her eyes.

"So far as I know, Easterham Hall is free from any supernatural occupants."

"I am sorry for that," said Letty.

He arched his eyebrows.

"You would like to share your room with a ghost or two?"

"No; but I do like a little tinge of romance about the place—something to set it a little above and beyond the level of the commonplace."

He did not answer; and talkative Letty once more set the conversation ball rolling.

"The Easterhams are very rich, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"I never heard of them until last week," said she, musingly; "and now—how strangely things are ordered in this world!—I am going to cast in my lot among them."

"How does that happen?" said the gentleman. He could not very well say less in ordinary politeness, and yet Letty felt triumphantly that she had "drawn him out."

"They wrote to Mme. Moligny, my old teacher to select a governess qualified to teach two little boys; and madame knew that I wished for a situation and so here I am. I wonder how they will like me?"

"I hope you will like them," said the gentleman.

"That isn't the question," Letty corrected imperatively. "Mr. Easterham is a dreadful bear."

"You are acquainted with him?"

"O, no; only what I have heard," answered Letty.

"And what may that be?"

"You are a neighbor?" said Letty, doubtfully. "Perhaps I've said too much already."

He laughed with more animation than she had yet seen in his manner.

"Depend upon it, I shall not betray you to Mr. Easterham. So he is a bear? Well, I have thought so sometimes myself."

"But he won't bite me if I am a good girl, and do my duty to the little ones; and they tell me they are very nice boys," persisted Lettice.

"They are very like their father, I believe."

"O," said Lettice, laughing. "I can tame young bears; it is only the full-grown specimen with sharp teeth and long claws, I am afraid of. Only think," and a demure apprehensive expression came over Letty's round, blooming countenance, he goes all round the house all day long and never says a word to anyone."

"He must be a savage, indeed," observed the gentleman.

"And Miss Electa Easterham, the old maid aunt who keeps house for him, has quarreled successively with every governess they have had," went on Letty, patting her little foot on the stage floor; "but she shall not quarrel with me. I won't let her. I am too good natured and too accustomed to humoring people, especially old ones. Madame Moligny wrote me that she disliked young and pretty governesses particularly. Now I'm not young—not very young, you see."

"No?"

"I was 20 last week," said Letty, solemnly, "and I am not pretty enough to disturb her mind. I am only tolerably decent looking. Now, if madame had selected Olive Dayton, who used to be in the same class with me—she was a regular beauty, with great, shady eyes and a complexion all pears and roses—there would have been danger then."

The stranger began to look interested.

"Tell me more about your school," said he. "I have a sister whom I think of placing in some desirable institution, and I should like to judge whether your Madame Moligny's would be a good home for her."

Letty's eyes brightened, her cheeks reddened, and her little tongue was unloosed at once. Her traveling companion was social and chatty, and the time fleeted swiftly away.

"You are going?" she cried, as at a lonely inn, overshadowed with silver stemmed birches and funereal spruce woods, a light sleigh, drawn by two milk white horses, was waiting.

"I have reached the end of my journey," he said, courteously touching his fur cap. "I had intended to keep on to the end of the route, but I see they have sent to meet me here. I wish you every success and happiness in your bear taming."

And as the sleigh bells jingled away Letty felt herself flushing deeply.

"I'm afraid I have been talking too much," thought Letty; "but what is a body to do, shut up all day long in a stage coach with a conversable gentleman?"

And the rest of Miss Mainwaring's journey was just a little tedious.

It was dusk when they arrived at Easterham Hall—a snowy, chill dusk which made the glow of lights through the scarlet moreen curtains and the coral shine of a great wood fire in a stone paved hall, as seen through the half open door, most delightful and welcome.

Aunt Electa, a tall, prim old lady, in snowy cap ribbons and a brown satin dress, stood ready to welcome her; and just behind her Letty saw a tall gentleman, with two little boys clinging about him.

"This is my nephew, Phillip," the old lady said: and Letty felt as if the blood in her veins were turning to fire as she recognized her traveling companion of the day.

"Do I look very much like a bear, Miss Mainwaring?" he asked, laughing, as she stood trembling and tongue tied before him. "No, don't color. I promise you to allow myself to become very tamable. And you must not cry either," as the tears came into Letty's eyes. "There's nothing for you to cry for."

"Why didn't you tell me who you were?" she asked piteously.

"Because you never asked me."

Lettie resolved within herself that she would leave Easterham the very next day. But she didn't keep the resolution.

At the year's end she had neither quarreled with Aunt Electa nor Mr. Easterham, and the little boys thought "Miss Letty" was perfection. So did their father.

"Letty," said he, "the year for which I engaged you is over."

"Yes," she responded, softly.

"Will you stay another year? Will you stay with me always, Lettie?"

And so, within the yellow shine of wedding ring she found herself a prisoner forever at Easterham Hall.—Kansas City Times.

Notice of Mortgage Forclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of ten and 50-100 dollars ($10.50) which became due on the first day of October A. D. 1890, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaie Normandin and Philomene Normandin, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the first day of October A. D. 1888, which mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the first day of October A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., in book 40 of mortgages on pages 112 and 113.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagors shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable; and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of forty-one and 70-100 dollars ($41.70) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-five (25) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

procured in the United States and foreign countries. Twenty-five years' experience as solicitors before the Patent Office and as attorneys in patent causes before the courts has given us an extensive practice as experts. We give special attention to cases rejected in other hands, also to interferences, appeals, reissues, trade-marks, the preparation of opinion as to infringement, scope and validity of patents, and the prosecution and defense of suits for infringement. Limiting our practice enables us to carefully study each case and get claims in the original patent as broad as the invention. This is now especially important in view of the difficulty of obtaining a reissue of a defective patent and of maintaining it in the courts after it is obtained. The employment of competent attorneys is important.

Upon receipt of model, sketch or photograph we give our opinion as to patentability free of charge. If favorable, the inventor is advised as to cost of proceeding, etc. Our fees are always reasonable. We refer to all ex-commissioners of patents during the past quarter of a century and to clients in all parts of the country, of whom names in your state will be given upon request. Our book of instructions, terms, etc., sent free.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 31st, 1892.]
[Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Eight and 25-000 dollars ($8.25) which became due on the first day of December, A. D. 1889, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edward L. Haven, an unmarried man, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 11th day of July, A. D. 1888, which mortgage, together with the power of sale therein contained was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of July A. D. 1888, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in Book 36 of Mortgages on pages 329 and 330.

It is provided in said mortgage that if said mortgagor shall fail to pay any part of the sum of money thereby secured at the time and in the manner specified in said mortgage, then upon such default, the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage, may at the option of the mortgagee be declared due and payable: and the said John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, who is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured, has elected and does hereby elect and declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage to be due, and there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of thirty-five and 84-100 dollars ($35.84) and no action or proceeding has been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number ten (10) in Township number one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-three (43) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

SATURDAY, THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1892,

at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., this 22d day of March, A. D. 1892.

Last publication May 12th, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of Twelve and 50-100 dollars ($12.50), which became due on the first day of December, 1890, and in the payment of a like and final sum, which became due on the first day of December, 1891, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John H. Lien and Ragnhild Lien, his wife, to John Milton Oliver, bearing date the 8th day of November, 1888, which mortgage, together with a power of sale contained therein was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota on the 16th day of November A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m., in Book 40 of mortgages, on pages 497, 498, and 499; which said sums with interest thereon respectively at ten per cent. per annum from the first day of December, 1890, and the 1st day of December, 1891, are the whole sum secured by said mortgage and remaining unpaid.

John Milton Oliver, mortgagee, is now the legal holder of said mortgage and of the notes thereby secured; and the amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice is twenty-seven dollars ($27.00); and no action or proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof:

Wherefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The north-west quarter (nw¼) of Section number twenty-two (22) in Township one hundred and forty-eight (148) north, of Range number forty-five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one Hundred and sixty (160) acres according to the government survey, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereto belonging; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on

SQUARE-TOED REPUBLICANISM.

There exists in Minneapolis an organization calling itself the "First Republican Heatwole Club of Minnesota." This club recently sent a communication to Joel P. Heatwole, asking him to become a candidate for governor of Minnesota, to which among other things Mr. Heatwole replied:

"I wish to say that I believe in the election of representative and unprejudiced delegates, and that they should, without the interference of personal ambition or selfish motives, patiently hear the people and render an impartial verdict. I should regret very much, indeed, to have the vote of a county when the popular sentiment was known to be for another man. I believe that the wishes of the people should be implicitly obeyed, and when I say the people I mean the men who cast the ballots. Every man's voice should be listened to and his expression as to candidates should be as honestly canvassed and as fairly counted as we demand the votes shall be counted in the Southern states. The people should not hesitate to take an active part in the caucuses that send delegates to the different conventions; and the delegates should reflect as nearly as possible the views of their constituents.

I am unalterably opposed to the trading of official positions; or, in other words, making the offices of the people currency for the payment of personal obligations or using them as a means to secure favor. The wishes of the people are often thwarted by unfair combinations, and frequently men are appointed to position who receive it simply that they may be able to do some good for an ambitious man.

The Republican party does not aim to forward the interest of men. It has a foundation of vital principles which are for the good of the whole people, and the selection of men to represent these principles should be deliberate. Minnesota has a large number of men who are ripe in experience, rich in ability, strong in character and principle, who would fill the position of chief executive acceptably to the state and party.

This is a time for the framing of party principles with logical argument rather than for making personal appeals for political support. Instead of discussing the claims of factions or men let us give united thought to the principles of protection and honest money, as subserving the best interests of the American people.

'Shoulders to the wheels, unmindful of the scramble for a place on the driver's seat,' should be the real thought and action of every Republican. The man who fancies he wields the party whip only amuses himself with the imaginary power. The masses at the wheels move the party wagon and are sponsors for its progress. 'Principles to be preferred before perquisites' is the sentiment that inspires the loyal Republican.

Republican league clubs should predominate over the personal advantage seeking clubs of the professional politician.

There will be no prouder Republican in Minnesota than myself if you gentlemen of the First Heatwole Republican Club of Minnesota perfect and maintain your organization and instead of actively seeking to secure my nomination for governor will work zealously for the best interests of the party irrespective of any possible candidate. Study your party platforms, attend party caucuses, defend party principles, maintain your party organizations and your individual independence.

Greater service no man can do. Permit no one to carry your vote in his vest pocket; commit yourselves to no propositions that involve questionable intrigues or combinations that force the party to bestow honors not sanctioned by conscience or approved by the people.

Independent Republican clubs like yours, actuated by motives born of love of country and party and maintained, can make Republican success in Minnesota already assured, doubly sure."

That is what we call republicanism pure and simple. The Republican party was formed to subserve the interests of the people, and it stands to-day upon the same platform that it did when formed and the candidate who feels as Mr. Heatwole expresses himself is all right whether he be elected or not, and the JOURNAL had rather suffer defeat fighting for such a man than to help elect a man whose sentiments are not with the common people.

TRADE AND MONEY.

In speaking of the condition of trade and money during the past week, the New York Press presents the following roseate views:

"There are new features of great importance in general trade. The improvement in the condition of roads in the Northwest has resulted in more active sales in that region. Omaha and Kansas City report better business. Chicago is selling less than it was a few days ago. The same is true of St. Louis. In Boston the market for boots and shoes is stronger, and sales are larger. There is free movement in general of staple cotton goods.

A special inquiry conducted by Bradstreet's into the existing business situation in the Southern states shows that in localities where cotton is not regarded as king planters and merchants are not unprosperous. The reports sent in indicate that the acreage of Southern cotton this season will be curtailed at least 20 per cent. It is to be hoped that the curtailment will reach fully this figure. What the South needs now, and what she has needed for a long time, is diversification of products. It has been the overproduction of one great staple that has brought about so many seasons of financial stress in the most fertile portion of the United States.

The print cloth market is stronger. Woolen goods are selling somewhat slowly. Old stock in domestic wools is freely offering at low prices. Wheat and flour exports for the past week aggregate 3,259,000 bushels. The total of bank clearings for the week was $1,088,000,000 bushels, an increase of about 4½ per cent. over the previous week. The shipments of gold abroad have helped the bears in the stock market, but they have not affected the existing abundance of funds in the money market, and there is no probability that they will. Unemployed funds continue to accumulate. The New York bank statement shows an increase in the surplus reserve of $503,325. The present surplus reserve is $20,036,300, against $7,443,300 one year ago. Well posted authorities hold that there is no likelihood of material hardening of rates in the near future.

A PARK.

THE subject of procuring a park, now before the council is one of importance to the citizens of Crookston—a question that has been far too long neglected. We can easily look back over the past and say what ought to have been done when the city was young and the land was cheap but it was not done and land is not liable to be cheaper as the years roll on. In our retrospective glance we may see one reason why we have never had a park in the fact that never has the subject been broached that some kickers did not arise and defeat the project. Now whatever site is selected no doubt somebody will raise a howl and try to defeat the project, but we do not believe the council will be justified in longer delaying this important matter. Let the council see that a suitable site is selected at a reasonable figure and go ahead and locate the park and we believe that the citizens will endorse that action. Some people may not be satisfied with the action of the council if they locate but the majority will be dissatisfied if they don't. Let us have a park somewhere.

ANOTHER POINT FOR RECIPROCITY.

By the proclamation of the president Honduras enters into reciprocal relations with the United States, as soon as the treaty is signed, meantime an arrangement will be made by which coal, petroleum, printed matter and printing materials, gas lighting inventions, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements railroad materials, etc., etc., will be admitted free of duty. Statistics show that last year we sent to Honduras $640,000 worth of our products and imported from there $1,160,000. The treaty will doubtless turn the balance of trade in our favor at the same time benefiting Honduras which has heretofore always been a large customer of England.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

The name of James G. Blaine has not lost its magnetism, its power to fire the hearts and quicken the blood of every true American citizen. At the State Convention in St. Paul last week, when Senator Davis, in his speech spoke that name the audience went wild and cheer after cheer broke forth spontaneously. It is only the condition of Mr. Blaine's health that will prevent his nomination at Minneapolis next month, and if nominated, his election is certain.

IN FREE TRADE ENGLAND.

The English cotton trade is suffering great depression, likewise the iron business. England's imports are increasing and her exports are steadily decreasing. The leading minds of England are becoming alarmed at the situation and doubts as to the efficacy of free trade are awakened. Meanwhile, America, under laws that protect her own interests pursues the even tenor of her way undisturbed. Let free-traders ponder these facts.

THE JOURNAL was the recipient of many compliments on its clean, bright appearance last week and yet it was far from being all we hope and confidently expect to make it. For the past two or three weeks we have been obliged to print it in a room without a stove in it and almost wholly exposed to the weather which has been rather too cold for ink to work at its best. As fast as possible we have remedied that difficulty and we hope very soon to have everything in ship-shape, fully equipped for business of all kinds and then we can do as fine press-work as can be done in any printing house in the Northwest.

THE MAY number of the Message, Rev. R. H. Battey's church paper, was an issue of 4,000 copies. The Message continues to improve with each issue and it is a paper deserving of a place in every home in these upper counties. It is devoted to church work on an undenominational basis and therefore calculated to do the most good in this country. Until this issue Mr. Battey has generally sent out many sample copies but in the future will confine himself to his regular list as a rule. At the price, 75 cents per year, no one interested in church work can afford to be without the Message.

THE selection of Hon. S. G. Comstock, as delegate to the National Convention was a graceful and a well merited compliment to a faithful servant of the people.

IF WE can read the signs of the times correctly, the nearer to attending strictly to the interests of the people a party can come the nearer to achieving a great victory will that party be.

WARREN Register says that H. E. Ives is up electioneering for his father, Judge Ives, on the People's ticket. The Judge has been a republican from the early days of that party and this move looks oddly.

THE DARK HORSE and the uninstructed delegate will hob-nob at the National Convention at Minneapolis in June. If the dark horse should be James G. Blaine he will gallop all over the convention and win hands down.

IF BLAINE is out of the race Harrison stands in the lead for the nomination. He certainly has given the United States a splendid administration and his method of handling foreign powers has elicited the admiration of all.

CASTLE'S bill to make Minneapolis the head of navigation instead of St. Paul, was voted down by a large majority and practically settles that question. St. Paul always was and always will be the head of navigation on the Mississippi.

AT THE Republican Convention at Morris on Wednesday, Hon. S. G. Comstock, of Clay County and M. A. Wollen, of Pope County, were elected delegates to the National Convention at Minneapolis in June. The Seventh District will be well represented.

IF THE sentiment throughout the state on the subject of Knute Nelson's candidacy is the same as in Polk County, Knute ain't in it—but then Polk County is not all the state—not quite all. In Polk County Attorney Gen. Moses E. Clapp would run better than any man yet mentioned.

ALDERMAN MORRISEY'S remarks on roads are timely and wise, but we think that he does not figure on gravel enough. It strikes us that it would require very much more than he allows for, but even allowing that to be true we should judge that his method is the cheapest one we could adopt.

THE genial Bob Dunn of the Princeton Union, was elected a delegate, to the National convention at Minneapolis from the Sixth District. Dunn edits one of the best papers that comes to our table and the JOURNAL is glad to see him thus recognized.

THE STRUGGLE in Wyoming between the small farmer and the cattle barons will end in favor of the small farmer, as it should. The day of large ranches and of overgrown farms for that matter has about passed away and the tendency of the times is against centralization.

W. G. DEACON, of the St. Vincent New Er-ache, is industriously prodding Capt. H. W. Donaldson, on account of his (Donaldson's) political sins. Avast there, Bro. Deacon, don't you know that "H. W." stands for "hard wheat," that hard wheat is the best kind of wheat—and that is the kind of a politician Capt. Donaldson is?

NEW press, new dress, new engine and a bright new look the JOURNAL greets you this week an earnest of what it hopes to be in the future—bright, sparkling and newsy. We hope and trust to be better and better with each issue and we should like to be a weekly visitor at every home in Polk County. As far as in us lies we shall strive to be worthy such an honor.

AS A result of the election in St. Paul on Tuesday Col. F. P. Wright was elected mayor, the first republican mayor to be elected since Dr. Stewart was elected mayor in 1872. The wisdom of this choice will be more and more manifest as time goes on. Col. Wright is one of the most talented among St. Paul's young business men and the choice was a wise one.

Duluth Daily Tribune:—It is found from inside sources that while Gov. Merriam was in Washington he made a deal with Hon. C. K. Davis to aid in the senator's re-election and President Harrison's re-election and in the event of Harrison's election, he would be named as secretary of the treasury in the new cabinet. How true this is we would not swear, but from the graceful and charming manner in which our politic governor has cast off his alliance with Knute Nelson and has risen to publicly endorse Davis' re-nomination and act in happy accord with everything that is seemingly adverse to his political interest cause one to think there must be a large colored gentleman in the lumber.

CONGRESS

Proceedings of the House and Senate.

TUESDAY, MAY 3.

SENATE.

The senate today with a scant quorum present by a vote of 30 to 15 passed the amended Chinese exclusion bill notwithstanding the protest of Mr. Sherman, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, that the new section requiring all Chinese in the United States to register within a year or be imprisoned, was a violation of treaty obligations with China.

An amendment to the sundry naval appropriation bill was reported from the senate committee on military affairs authorizing the secretary of war to establish not to exceed two military posts at points on the northern frontier where he may in his judgment deem it for the public good.

HOUSE.

The house bill placing binding twine on the free list, was laid before the senate and referred to the finance committee.

The house today passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The only important change made in the measure was the striking out of the appropriation of $65,000 to continue the preliminary survey for an intercontinental railway.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4.

SENATE.

The senate today passed the following bills:

Senate bill no convey to the state of Kansas a portion of the Ft. Hayes military reservation, about 3,200 acres, for homes for old soldiers and their families and to open the rest of the reservation to homestead settlement by old soldiers.

Senate bill creating two additional land districts in the state of Montana.

Senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red river of the North at Quincy, N. D.

House bill for the disposition and sale of lands of the Klamath River Indian reservation, California.

Senator McPherson reported an amendment from the naval affairs committee to the naval appropriation bill, which proposes to increase the number of harbor defense vessels from one to three; torpedo boats from six to 10, and also provide for torpedoes, submarine and otherwise, for which latter purpose $1,000,000 is appropriated.

HOUSE.

The house today, after considerable debate, agreed to the conference report on the Geary Chinese exclusion bill by a vote of 185 to 28.

THURSDAY, MAY 5.

SENATE.

The senate today passed the following bills:

House bill to establish a military post at Helena, Mont., appropriating $100,000.

House bill to establish sub-ports of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and Ashland, Wis.

House bill appropriating $150,000 to defray the expenses of the Bering sea arbitration at Paris.

The senate adopted the conference report on the Chinese exclusion bill.

HOUSE

Two reports from the judiciary committee on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution to provide uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce were made to the house. The majority report, adverse to the resolution, was made by Representative Oates, and Representative Ray presented the minority report.

FRIDAY, MAY 6,

SENATE.

Mr. Dolph submitted to the senate a proposed amendment to the sundry civil bill appropriating $250,000 for the purchase of a site and the beginning of construction of a public building at Portland, Ore., and increasing the limit of cost $1,250,000.

In the senate today Mr. Gorman offered resolutions, which were agreed to, expressing regret at the death in February, 1881, of the late Senator Wilson of Maryland, and suspending the business of the senate to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard of his high character and distinguished public services. Mr. Gorman delivered the first eulogy of his late colleague. Further remarks in praise of the life and character of the dead senator were made by Messrs. Wilson of Iowa, Berry, Platt, Gray, Mitchell, Pascoe, Dixon and Gibson, and then, as an additional token of respect, the senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.

The house went into committee of the whole on the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. Castle of Minnesota moved to substitute Minneapolis for St. Paul as the terminus of the Mississippi improvements and it was voted down.

Representative Crosby of Massachusetts, reported to the house, from the postoffice committee, a bill providing that all mail matter heretofore in the third and fourth classes shall in future be transported as third class matter, postage on which shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for every two ounces or fraction thereof. The passage of the bill, the committee thinks, will benefit every person who has occasion to use the mails for transporting small packages.

SATURDAY, MAY 7.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The deep waterways matter was under consideration in the house to-day. Speeches were made by Mr. Castle of Minnesota, Mr. Henderson of Illinois and several others.

MONDAY, MAY 9.

SENATE.

After the routine morning business in the senate today, Mr. Frye, from the committee on commerce, reported back the house bill to encourage American ship building. He said that the report was unanimous and that he had been instructed to move its present consideration. He made that motion and it was agreed to.

After some discussion the bill was passed, yeas, 51; nays, 10.

HOUSE.

In the house, Mr. Holman (Indiana) moved to recommit the river and harbor bill, with instructions to the committee to report it back with an amendment striking out the contract provisions. Mr. Outhwaite (Ohio) moved to amend the instructions by requiring the committee to strike out all appropriations which are for new works or for the further extension of works now under construction, so the bills shall include only appropriations for the continuance or completion of works now in progress.

The amendment was lost—yeas, 69; nays, 70. The question then recurred on Mr. Holman's motion The motion was defeated—yeas, 82; nays, 149.

The bill was then passed by a vote of—yeas, 185; nays, 65.

General Longstreet is at work on a book of war tales, in which he figures largely himself, to be called "A Soldier Under Two Flags."

County Funds Missing.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Special, May 11.—The board of supervisors of Dakota county, Neb., is investigating the accounts of ex-Treasurer Wilkinson, who retired from the office eleven years ago with a bad record behind him. An investigation several years ago found him $9,000 short, which was paid by Atlee Hart, his bondsman, editor of the Dakota City Eagle. Yesterday the board found another deficit of $9,000 and Hart and Wilkinson will be sued for the amount. Wilkinson is alleged to have disposed of his property. Hart claims the county cannot collect the money, as his responsibility has outlawed.

Charlie Vine will not allow any man to get away with him either in the quality or price of meats.

The Lowest Rate Yet.

Special $60 round trip tickets sold May 9th to 14th, good for 90 days, by Great Northern Railway from Crookston to Portland, Oregon, on account of the Presbyterian General assembly. This very low rate gives choice of various routes returning. For particulars inquire of W. W. FEGAN, Agent.

A SONG.

I saw a weeping maiden
A searching in the morn
For love that's half a rosebud,
For love that's half a thorn;
She sought him on the hill-top
And o'er the dewy lea,
But he was standing in the shade,
Was waiting there with me!

He sang not in the meadow,
He piped not near the stream,
Nor hid in ferny forests,
The darling of her dream;
He lurked not in the poppies,
He shone not in the sky;
But called to her from out my heart,
And yet she passed him by!

—Athenæum.

THE MOCK TRIAL.

This is not a story of the imagination—it is founded on fact. It took place in a certain town in Ireland, not many miles from Dublin. I was but a child when it happened. Yet the story made such a vived impression on my young mind that I can recall the main incidents of it to-day almost as clearly as when it was related to me half a century ago. Those were the days when the medical students were wont to divert themselves to their hearts' content; when they thought fit to indulge in their wild antics of a night many a door bell or brass knocker would be either disarranged or entirely missing the next morning.

And if they chanced to meet a sleepy-headed watchman on their rounds, they would think no more of carrying him off in his own box than they would of eating their breakfast. Many a struggling, hard-working man had to pay dearly for the pranks of the students, for when the idea of a practical joke took possession of them—they had no scruples—it was a matter of little consequence to them whether the sufferer was a rich man or a poor man, and no matter what damage had happened to be the result of their vagaries, they invariably succeeded in eluding the police. They were often chased from one end of the town to the other, but, as a rule, the baffled functionaries of the crown, were compelled in the long run to abandon the hunt. For the rollicking students, as soon as they reached a certain point on the road, would disappear so suddenly that one would imagine the ground had opened and swallowed them.

Their point of vantage was an old ruin situated on a small hill near the outskirts of the town. It was the crumbling remains of an ancient castle. There was a tower window about ten feet from the ground, and the wall being thickly mantled with ivy, it was of course no difficult task for the frolicsome students, whenever they found themselves hotly pursued, to reach the castle chamber by climbing up the ivy with the agility of monkeys.

As soon as they were safely inside they would fill up the window with stones, large and small, so that not a hole of the size of a pin's point would be left for any prying outsider to peep through. This was what they termed their hiding-place, and they were under the impression that the secret of it was known only to themselves. In this, however, they were mistaken. There was another man in town who knew all about their hiding-place just as well as themselves. His name was Myles Lynch. Myles was a poor, industrious tenant farmer. He was also hired occasionally as a "handy man" to work around the college grounds. Myles knew their secret and kept it to himself for many a long day, although he was the victim of many a practical joke. At last he lost all patience and began to engender a grudge against his tormentors, for in their wild sports one night they happened to overreach themselves. The result of their folly was that they had brutally maimed the only cow of poor Myles Lynch.

After this event the students' secret soon reached the ears of the principal of the college. This was not the only secret Myles possessed. According to the rules of the college, of course, the students were not allowed outside the building unless they obtained the usual permission; but, in spite of the regulations, they contrived to get out whenever the notion seized them, and the way in which they managed it was simple enough. At the rear of the building there was a place in the wall where the bricks were very loose—so that the students, if they felt inclined for a ramble by night, had merely to remove bricks enough to allow one man to pass through. After getting out, one at a time, they would replace the bricks, until at last the wall would appear to be as sound as any other part of the building.

But Myles, out of revenge for the loss of his cow, exposed the secret to the principal. And from that very day the students were deprived of what they deemed their liberty.

At last they made a vow to be even with Myles Lynch for his perfidy. In the course of a few days the hour arrived when they were afforded an excellent opportunity to put their vow into execution. Myles, who, as I have said sometimes worked about the college, was detained one night until a very late hour, doing some repairs. It was a fine moonlight summer night, and he happened to be walking near the gardens when suddenly he felt himself seized from behind; his arms were soon pinioned and his eyes blindfolded. He did not attempt to open his mouth to give the alarm, for he thought it was merely a practical joke on the part of the students. They conducted him by zigzag paths around the grounds, then into the college, and up and down and around different corridors, until they reached the passage leading to the dissecting room, the door of which was at once unlocked. As soon as Myles had crossed the threshold of the dissecting room the door was immediately locked and bolted, and the bandages removed from his eyes.

Poor Myles felt a cold chill creeping into his very marrow as he gazed around the dissecting room, and no wonder, for he discovered that the room had been transformed as if by some magical influence into an open court of law; but the poor fellow's fears were doubly increased on being informed by one of the students that he himself was the culprit about to be tried for his life. There sat the judges, counselors and jurymen, exactly the same as if the trial were to take place in the Dublin four courts, or any other law court in the world, with this exception, every man in the dissecting room, judges, lawyers and jurymen, had his features concealed by a mask. And this fact served to magnify the terrors of Myles Lynch.

By a sign from the judge he was led to the bar, before which he had to stand like a real criminal. As Myles took his place in the prisoners' dock there was a silence like that of death; a feather might have been heard falling in the court.

At length the judge robed himself, and took his place on the bench. When everything was ready, the lawyers, each with his brief before him, seemed to betoken little hope for mercy to the prisoner at the bar.

"Mr. Jailer," said the judge, "has Myles Lynch been put to the bar?"

"He has, your worship!" said the jailer.

The judge then fixed his eye upon Myles, until he stared the poor fellow into a fit of despondency.

The prosecuting counsel, in a long-winded speech, depicted Myles as one of the most contemptible reptiles that was ever permitted to crawl the earth.

The counsel for the prisoner at the bar delivered a brilliant oration in his defense, his eloquence and word painting pictured Lynch in an entirely new light, making him appear like a persecuted hero of romance.

The question why he should be tried for his life was summed up in a nutshell by the prosecution as follows:

"He has deprived us of our liberty in betraying us and our secret to the principal. He has been guilty of a crime which, in our eyes, is tantamount to murder. As long as the secret of the old wall was kept inviolate we were happy and light of heart, free to roam at will when and where we pleased; but the perfidious monster now before the bar has bereft us of the glorious boon of liberty. Yesterday we were free men, so to speak; to-day we are abject slaves. Consequently, in accordance with the logic of events, it must naturally follow that the man who robs a fellow-being of his liberty robs him of his life; for what, we ask, is life without liberty?"

The judge's charge was brief. Every point seemed to tell against Myles.

The jury retired, but their absence occupied but a few moments. When they returned the clerk of the crown said:

"Gentlemen, have you agreed in your verdict?"

There was a solemn silence. The somber court was only relieved from utter darkness by a few waxen tapers.

"We have," said the foreman. "Is the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty?" "Guilty," said the foreman. The upshot was that poor Myles Lynch was to suffer death by the block. He was granted ten minutes to prepare himself for eternity. After praying devoutly for the alloted time his mortal fears were by no means assuaged on beholding a black screen at the lower end of the dissecting-room drawn aside, disclosing to his view the headsman and the block, with all its dread paraphernalia; the headsman held his ax aloft, the sawdust was spread around and the basket arranged in its place, ready to receive the head when it fell from the fatal block. There was also a row of masked spearsmen on either side of poor Myles as he was led to the place of execution; it was a dark dismal sight, for the headsman's glittering ax seemed to light up the scene with greater brightness than the dull flickering waxen candles. Myles Lynch approached his fate undaunted. After his head was fixed under the instrument of death there was a momentary pause. At length the signal is given, the ax of the headsman is uplifted, it descends slowly. But lo! before it reaches its victim a masked student advances to the block, and instead of the ax a wet towel is placed on the neck of the condemned Miles Lynch. The ax is cast aside and the entire court begins to crowd around the block, for they look upon the whole proceedings as a huge joke. One of the students pokes Myles in the ribs and orders him to stand on his feet and beg their pardon, but Myles remains as still as the grave. They call him by name; they elicit no answer. They place their hands over his heart; it has ceased to beat. They feel his hands; they are as cold as marble.

At length they discover to their grief and horror that poor Miles Lynch is no more. His spirit has taken flight from its tenement of clay. It was the shock, and not the headsman's ax, that killed him. The students were terrified, for, of course, they had no notion that their joke would terminate so tragically.

What was to be done? The news of it reaching the outside world would endanger their lives.

They at once drew up a contract, which forebade them to divulge a word of what took place on that fatal night. When the contract was finished each student's name was affixed to it in letters of his own blood.

The secret leaked out many years after. And, I believe, a sad end was the fate of each individual that participated in the trial of poor Miles Lynch.—Barry O'Connor in New York News.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER X.—CONTINUED.

If in springing forward, I fell short of him, it would be all over with me. My force expended in the spring, he would have me at his mercy, and a short death was the only kind of mercy I had to expect. Again, what feeble light there was must fall upon me, as I faced it,—an advantage for him, a terrible peril for me.

I resolved to back toward the wall at the upper end of the room, and, guided still by the ticking of my watch, I drew back with the stealthy caution of a cat.

Suddenly I saw the gray seam of light again. Had he gone to the right or left? I knew not. Quickly I stretched my foot out behind me; I felt something, and for the instant thought I had touched the fellow; but, as turning about I groped my hand forward, I encountered the cold woodwork of the bedstead.' It was one of the carved pillars. I drew myself up, and got my back against it. Now, at least, that dreaded stab in the back was less probable.

I am not a coward; yet I own that the terror of the following minutes thrills me now as I look back upon it. The impenetrable darkness, the silence, rendered only more intense by contrast with the perpetual tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac, tic-tac of the watch behind me, were made terrific by the awful uncertainty of my position.

I stood there waiting for the attack, until, the suspense growing intolerable, I felt that I must end it by shouting aloud to Brace, and precipitating the final struggle.

"I will wait five minutes longer, and no more," I said to myself, resolving to calculate the space fairly, and with due allowance for false impressions. I calculated that two minutes had passed, when I fancied I heard the bed creak behind me. Was this one of the false impressions I had promised myself to guard against? or was the sound caused by the man mounting upon the bed behind me.

The hair bristled upon my head as I thought I heard the creak repeated; yet I stood there, and counted another minute, with every nerve and fibre prepared to spring away.

"Now, surely, four minutes are up," I thought, and drew my head down into my shoulders, for, as surely as if my eyes had been turned that way, and the full light of the sun shining in the room, I knew that the man was behind me upon the bed.

I drew a deep inspiration, resolved to shout my loudest to Brace: but before the sound had passed my lips a towl was drawn tight upon my face and my head jerked back against the post behind me. A fold of the towl gagged me completely; it was with difficulty I breathed. I struggled, but in vain, to wrench myself away; a quick and sure hand had knotted the towel. I threw up my hands to tear the thing off; in an instant they were enveloped in the thick curtains, and though the fellow had not sufficient strength to tie them down to my side, he at least baffled my attempts to free my head. I threw my feet from the ground, hoping that my weight would drag my head from the towel; I only succeeded in drawing the knots tighter, and half strangling myself.

As I could not release my head, I got my arms down, and tried to sieze the rascal's feet; but he kept them beyond my reach; yet I got something by the attempt, for, in groping about, I laid my hand upon the knife, which he had thrust in the bed, to have free use of his hands, the better to overcome the resistance of my arms. I should have had no hesitation in ham-stringing the rascal if I could have got at his legs; but as I could not do that, I determined, if possible, to keep the knife out of his way.

I felt, by the horn handle, that it was the one Van Hoeck had given me; and, knowing the trick of the blade, I shut it up, and slipped it into my pocket.

"Now," thought I, "if only thews and sinews are concerned, we will see who can get the best of it."

And, with redoubled efforts, I struggled to tear down the bed-curtains that hampered my movements; and, maddened by the difficulty of respiration, I threw such force into my efforts that the pole upon which they hung crunched under the rings, and finally came rattling down about us. Would that the lamp had been near, to be smashed by the fall! The noise was too slight to be heard at a distance.

My left hand being free, I felt again for the knot of the towel that bound me to the post. A bony hand grasped my wrist, and dragged it over my shoulder, and the next moment I felt something pressed under my nose, and liquid trickling through my moustache onto my lips. It had a sweet taste, and a strong smell of apples, that mounted at once to my brain. I seemed to be no longer touching the ground, but whirling round and round through space; my arms dropped by my side.

I knew that I was powerless, yet I retained a certain kind of consciousness. I was sensible that the difficulty of breathing no longer troubled me. I knew that the man was binding my arms to the post, and I remember thinking in the bemused manner of a half-intoxicated person, what a fool he must be to bind me when I could no longer make resistance. I was perfectly conscious when he began to tie my feet to the post below, for I had then sufficiently overcome the effect of the opiate to think of resistance. I tried to struggle and to scream, but to no purpose: my will had lost all power over my muscle. And this terrible impotency reminded me of Van Hoeck's half-uttered simile: "Cramped in a coffin, and the clods falling—falling!"

What astonished me was the surprising facility with which the man executed his work in the darkness that then prevailed. He seemed to have no difficulty at all in finding the ends of the sheets with which he bound me, and knotting them securely. And when I was safely pinioned, he unbuckled the strap that bound the Great Hesper to my wrist, without having to seek for the tongue of the strap, as I myself might have to do.

"Well, that's gone I said to myself: "and, now he has the diamond, he will go too."

But he had not yet finished. And, after a brief interval, during which he might have been buckling the Great Hesper upon his own wrist, I heard a sound that I knew only too well.

Click!

It was the spring that locked the long blade of my clasp-knife when it was opened.

CHAPTER XI.

That sound warned me that the end was near. Not content with taking the diamond, the scoundrel intended to have my life,—to remove the possibility, if possibility existed, of being identified as the thief by me.

He set about his work with devilish circumspection. I heard the metal rings clink as he took up the fallen curtain from the floor, and folded it, and the bed creak as he got upon it. As he approached from behind, he steadied himself by setting one hand upon my shoulder. Then he laid the folded curtain over my other shoulder, and his bony knuckles touched my chest as he arranged the stuff over my breast I knew what that meant; it was to prevent the betraying blood from spurting upon his arm.

In the pause that followed, I fancied he must be turning up his sleeve, as a butcher does who has a beast to slaughter.

A thousand thoughts whirled through my mind in that brief space; but a great awe came upon me as I felt his hand firmly grasp my left shoulder, for then I realized that I was on the very brink of eternity.

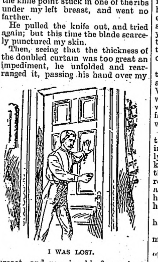
A feeling of regret for the ill use I had made of many days,—for the loss of Edith, and the world which she had filled with joy and hope; a deep and tender wish for her happiness, and the welfare of the companions who had toiled with me to win the Hesper, took the place of terror, and it was with something like resignation that I awaited death.

As he grasped my left shoulder, I felt him lean over my right, and the next moment he stabbed me.

He had not used sufficient force, for the knife point stuck in one of the ribs under my left breast, and went no farther.

He pulled the knife out, and tried again; but this time the blade scarcely punctured my skin.

Then, seeing that the thickness of the doubled curtain was too great an impediment, he unfolded and rearranged it, passing his hand over my breast, and pressing his fingers here and there to ascertain whether he had got it right for his purpose. It was then that, my nature revolting against this barbarous refinement of cruelty, I prayed, like Samson, for strength; and made one more effort to break my bonds.



I WAS LOST.

The twisted sheets and firm knots withstood the strain: but the effort saved my life. The calculating villian knew that I must exhaust my strength in a few minutes, and would not risk breaking his knife or getting smeared with my blood as I writhed.

And presently my force gave out, and, all hope leaving me, I ceased to struggle, and was callous to his touch, when he once more touched my shoulder.

But in that moment of dread silence, when his knife must have been raised to strike the final blow, the door handle turned, and I felt his grasp relax,—nay, his fingers tremble, as they lay on my shoulder.

There was an interval of a minute, and the door handle turned again; then a voice, that I recognized as Lola's spoke in a low tone outside.

"Are you there,—you?" A moment's pause and she added,—"You ain't sick, are you?"

She had come to my door and heard me writhing against the post.

What would the rascal do now? his hand still trembled. It gave me courage, for it showed that he feared discovery, and I knew he would not risk his own neck for the mere pleasure of killing me. I put out my strength again, making the bed-post snap under my strain.

"Shall I sing out?" Lola asked, a little louder, and with an accent of alarm.

The hand slipped from my shoulder and down my arm, as the villain stepped from the bed. His position was getting more perilous. If Lola "sang out," there would be little chance of his making off with the diamond.

I had loosened the towel that bound my head and gagged me. I wriggled about furiously, worked the fold out of my mouth, and got my chin above it, breathing freely for the first time since I had been tied up. At the same moment I heard the key turn in the door, and I knew that the murderer intended to let Lola in and silence her.

"Take care, take care!" I shouted, as loudly as the towel that covered my face would permit.

Another wriggle, and I felt that the upper part of my face was uncovered. Moreover, I distinguished a long gray patch before me. The curtain of the oriel had been drawn back; the light had sensibly increased during the time occupied by the events I have narrated.

I almost fancied I saw the silhoutte of a man's figure against the grayness. It moved, and I was sure that my eyes were not deceived; it disappeared, and almost immediately afterward I heard a fall upon the terrace below. The man had dropped down a distance of fifteen feet from the window,—a drop of not more than six feet for an ordinary man hanging from the ledge.

The feeling of relief, combined with exhaustion caused by my frantic efforts, was too much for me. I was giddy and sick, my eyes closed, the sweat stood cold upon my face, every muscle gave away and quivered, only the bonds upon my body kept me from falling.

"Y'aint hurt, are you, dear?" were the first words I heard. It was Lola's voice, very gentle and tremulous.

"No; you have saved me," said I.

She gave a little moan of delight, and her hands, which had been busily tugging at the knots stopped in their work.

She threw her arms about my neck, and, pressing her face against my breast, sobbed.

CHAPTER XII.

Brace's door was unlocked. He to all appearance was sound asleep with his face to the wall. I shook him, and, as he turned over, I said:

"Get up; the Hesper is lost."

"Lost! as ho..?" he asked, sitting up.

"Stolen,—taken from me."

"Where's Israel?"

I told him of Van Hoeck's terrible presentiment, and the circumstances under which he had left the house.

"We will find him, pardner," said the Judge, in his slow, sententious manner, which was queerly at variance with his speed in hurrying into his clothes. "We will find him, and see if his presentiments will go so far as to explain what's become of the diamond. Let up what has happened, pardner. Reel it off. I am all awake."

I narrated briefly the events of the night, while he completed dressing. Lola, standing by the window, listened in silence. There was just enough light to reveal the mischievous exultation that sparkled in her eyes.

"Here's a Vigilance Committee job, if ever there was one," said the Judge, hastily lacing his boot. "I ain't lighted on anything so much like Californey since the good old days. Now, sir, if you air ready, we'll hunt up Israel, the prophet. He's got to tell us something more about this than we know on."

It was striking five when we quitted the house. The judge left me to look about the garden and its vicinity for Van Hoeck; he himself struck out for the wood, taking Lola with him. The girl would have stayed with me, but her father had her hand in his, and there was no getting away from that grip.

After exploring the garden, I took the path that led to the lodge, as being the one that Van Hoeck frequently walked in when alone. The lodge-keeper was not up, but, passing through the open wicket into the road, I came upon a laborer, trudging along to his work with a pick upon his shoulder, and a tin flask in his hand.

It then was half-past five, or perhaps a little later.

"Have you passed a blind gentleman on the road?" I asked.

"I ain't passed 'im," he answered; "but as I come by the cross roads I see some 'un, as looked gen'leman like, kind 'er fumbling his way along he road down by Harley bottom."

I knew the cross roads; they were nearly two miles distant: It was incomprehensible to me how Van Hoeck had strayed so far from the Abbey; but the laborer's description left little oom for doubt that it was Van Hoek he had seen, and I started at once in the direction indicated.

Each Age Its own Criterion.

The coarseness of one age is not tolerated by the next. About resuscitated Napoleonic troupier discovered this. There is progress in refinement, although it is accompanied by cant and false delicacy. But the suggestion is this, and it is in a sense independent of the question of art and morals, or the non-moral quality of art: Every generation has its rights, and among them a right to protect itself against anything it dislikes or that offends it. It does not concern itself much about abstractions, but it knows what influences best serve its ideas of a better life. On the whole, it is as good a judge of what is good for it as the more enlightened novelists.—Harper's Magazine.

An Intelligent Compositor Did It.

The following advertisement, inserted in a Brooklyn newspaper, led to the reconciliation of the couple mentioned:

"Jagy.—For two days after date I will not be responsible for any debts contracted by my wife. F. Jagy, 790 Monroe street, Brooklyn, N. Y."

Mr. Jagy says that he and his wife had a quarrel over something which is now of no importance, and in anger he went to insert an advertisement in the usual form. He wanted to insert it "for two days," and so marked it, and the intelligent compositor set it up as printed. Mrs. Jagy was so amused when she saw it that she communicated with her husband and the reconciliation followed.

KIND WORDS.

Bismarck Settler:—Wm. A. Hammond, formerly with the Tribune, has connected himself with the POLK COUNTY (Minn.) JOURNAL. Mr. Hammond is a gentleman of ability and is bound to make his mark in the profession.

Detroit (Minn.) Free Press:—H. E. Cooke, of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, has associated with him W. A. Hammond, a well-known newspaper man, late of the Bismarck Tribune. The JOURNAL has been changed in size and otherwise improved.

Grand Forks Herald:—Editor Cooke of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, Crookston, has associated with himself in the management of that excellent paper, just entering upon its sixteenth volume, Mr. Wm. A. Hammond, who for several years has been connected with the Bismarck (N. D.) Tribune.

Warren Register:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has made a change. This time it is all because Bro. Cooke has taken in W. A. Hammond, late of Bismarck, N. D., as a partner. The firm now reads "Cooke & Hammond." The paper is to be changed to a six column quarto, all printed at home. Its politics will be Republican. We wish the new firm success and lots of it.

Crookston Times:—The JOURNAL announces this morning a change in the management. Mr. Wm. Hammond of Bismarck, N. D., has been taken in as a partner and will assist Bro. Cooke to push the JOURNAL to the front. Mr. Hammond has the reputation of being a good newspaper man and the Times extends the hand of welcome and wishes the new firm success.

St. Hilaire Spectator:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL came to us last week with a new dress and entirely changed in appearance and announces that editor H. E. Cooke has taken a partner in the person of Wm. Hammond, of Bismarck, N. D. Mr. Hammond comes highly recommended and we predict that the JOURNAL will prove a sucess under the management of the new firm.

Fisher Bulletin:—H. E. Cooke, the Bill Nye of the fraternity in Polk Co., who has for the past fifteen years trotted in single harness on the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, has associated with him Mr. Wm. A. Hammond, formerly of the Bismarck (N. D.) Tribune. Mr. Hammond is personally known to the editor of the Bulletin as one of the brightest and most progressive newspaper men in the Northwest. Here's success to Cooke & Hammond.

McIntosh Times:—The last issue of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL brings us the tidings of a change in its business and editorial management which will naturally add to its prosperity and usefulness. Mr. Wm. Hammond, formerly of Bismarck, N. D., has formed a partnership with, and will hereafter assist Bro. Cooke in the management of the JOURNAL, which will be greatly improved in its appearance by the addition of a brand new dress and outfit. Its politics will be the same—Republican.

Norman County Herald:—H. E. Cooke, for fifteen years sole proprietor of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has associated with himself Wm. A. Hammond, formerly connected with the Bismarck, N. D. Tribune. The paper will be changed to a six column quarto, all to be printed at home. With a new press, new materials and the assistance of the associate editor we predict that the JOURNAL, which has always been a good paper, will in the future not be second to any weekly in the state. Its politics will continue to be Republican.

Bismarck Tribune:—Wm. Hammond, who was one of the Tribune's most faithful attaches for several years, is now half owner of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, one of the oldest Northern Minnesota Republican newspapers, published at Crookston. The JOURNAL is now putting in a new press, donning a new dress, and being infused with new life will at once take rank with the leading newspapers of the Northwest. Mr. Hammond's old time North Dakota friends will be glad to learn of his success.

Thief River Falls Press:—After having presided over the destiny of the JOURNAL for fifteen years, with the beginning of volume 16 H. E. Cooke will take in as partner Wm. A. Hammond, who has for several years been connected with the Tribune, of Bismarck, N. D. This change has been made for the benefit of the patrons of the JOURNAL as well as its managers. Under this new management the paper will be changed to a six column quarto, all printed at home. They intend to make the paper one of the best in Polk county and cordially invite everybody to call and make the acquaintance of the new firm of Cooke & Hammond.

The Thirteen Towns:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has been undergoing a radical change. H. E. Cooke, the proprietor, has associated with him W. A. Hammond, of Bismarck, N. D., who has for some years occupied an important position on the editorial staff of the Bismarck Tribune, and is an energetic young man of high ability and a thorough newspaper man in all respects. We wish the new firm all possible success and prosperity known to the profession.

The Message, Crookston, Minn.:—The Message has formerly been printed by the Tribune. April issue and afterward The Journal Printing House, of Crookston, does our printing. Mr. H. E. Cooke, editor of The Polk County Journal and proprietor of The Journal Printing House, has the honor of editing a Republican weekly second to none in northwestern Minnesota either in keen editorial ability, the publication of local county news; or in that most important feature of a county paper intended for the family as well as the office, PURE MORAL SENTIMENT VOID OF BEGUILING SENTENCES. Mr. Cooke has edited The Journal continuously since 1877, He has had a steady growth in his subscription list and job work until now he finds enlargement of facilites an imperative necessity, and he has received from a type foundry the following:

New newspaper press, costing	$1,700
Gasline engine to propel presses	350
Paper cutter..........................	200
Perforator..........................	40
Proof press..........................	25
New body type (THE MESSAGE is set in this)....................	200

besides other requisites, making a total of over $2,500 for his new machinery and material alone. The rooms are being remodeled and enlarged to suit the requirements of the enlarged facilities. Thus it will be seen that The Journal office proposes to hold its place among the growing institutions of Crookston. THE MESSAGE bids The Journal success and recommends our readers to read The Journal and place their jobs of printing, great and small, with this printing house.

P. S. Since the above was penned Mr. Cooke has taken into partnership Mr. W. A. Hammond, an experienced newspaper man from Bismarck. We bid Mr. H. cordial welcome and all success in the enterprise.

A Court Held by Storks.

The owner of a house near Berlin found a single egg in the nest of a pair of storks built on the chimney, and substituted for it a goose's egg, which in due time was hatched and produced a gosling instead of the expected storkling. The male bird was thrown into the greatest excitement by this event, and finally flew away. The female, however, remained on the nest and continued to care for the changling as though it were her own offspring. On the morning of the fourth day the male reappeared accompanied by nearly 500 storks, which held a mass meeting in an adjacent field. The assembly, we are informed, was addressed by several speakers, each orator posting himself on the same spot before beginning his harangue. These deliberations and discussions occupied nearly the entire forenoon, when suddenly the meeting broke up and all the storks pounced upon the unfortunate female and her suppostitious young one, killed them both, and, after destroying the polluted nest, took wing and departed and were never seen there again.

Curiosity Rebuked.

A man was on trial in a Southwestern state for a very grave offense. The jury were slow in coming to an agreement and many people were waiting about for a verdict. At this stage of affairs a colored bailiff came out of the jury room and hastened down one of the corridors.

"Hold on! hold on!" called out a man who was waiting. "Have the jury agreed?"

"Yis, dey done agreed," said the bailiff, grinning.

"What's the verdict?"

"Well, boss," said the bailiff, "ye see 'twas dis er way: Dey was some on 'em wanted sandwiches, an' some on 'em wanted pie; an' bum by dey done 'greed dey'd hab some crackers an' cheese, an' dey done sen' me out fer to fotch 'em."—Youth's Companion.

THE END OF THE WORLD.

Men Who Have Predicted It in All Centuries.

W. A. Keltie, a Scotch-Englishman now residing in Berlin, Germany, and who seems to have plenty of leisure time to figure out all kinds of odd problems has come to the conclusion that our world will wind up affairs and cease to do business at the old stand on and after the first day of the Twentieth Century. It is a fact that there are hundreds and thousands of people of this, "the last and greatest of all the centuries," who believe all this and talk with bated breath whenever they refer to the horrible scenes which they firmly believe will be enacted on the morning of January 1, 1901. Lying on my desk as I write, says "Ye Curious Man" of the St. Louis Republic, is a copy of "Miraculous Prophecies," sub-headed "Predictions and Strange Visions of Sundry Eminent Men of All Ages." This quaint little volume was printed for "G. Sael, Newcastle Street, London, 1794." The entire work is made up of extracts from the prophecies of Nostradamus, Christopher Love, John Lacy, Anne Trapnel, John Tillinghast, Lord Chesterfield, Alstedius, Lully the Astrologer, Dr. Gill and many others whose names would only encumber this "Note" without adding to its merits. Each of the above chatter away in an incoherent manner for awhile and then close by setting a date for the "heavens to open like a scroll" and the earth "to melt with fervent heat." Nostradamus says that the "end of the world shall come on that year in which Good Friday shall fall upon St. George's day (April 23), Easter on St. Mark's day (April 25) and Corpus Christi day on the day of St. John the Baptist (June 24)." All of these coincidences took place in 1886, yet "the world as round as any ball wheels on her way without a fall." Alstedius, the seventh mentioned in the list above, closes his "Catastrophe Mundi" (printed in 1683) with these words: The 1,000 years mentioned in the twentieth chapter of Revelations shall begin about the year 1694 and end with the year 2694. During that time Satan will be bound, but afterwards be let loose for a small time. He shall stir up Gog and Magog, that is, the professed enemies of the church against the saints, but shall be suddenly overcome. Then our Lord Christ shall come, and the earth and all that is in it will find an immediate period."

On page 37 Christopher Love tells us: "Prepare ye for the year 1800, for in it shall the stars wander, the moon turn to blood and the earth be no more.

William Miller, the founder of the Seventh-Day Adventist faith, figured on the prophecies of Daniel and John until he finally decided that the world would come to an end in 1843. Some of his followers had even selected the very day upon which the great event would occur, going so far as to make "ascension robes" for the occasion.

Captain Baker, an engineer in the British service, published a book in 1877 which clearly proved, to his mind at least, that the end of the world would come on September 20, 1878.

A HARD LOT.

His Mathematical Faculty Was Decidedly Weak.

An amusing instance of what some people would term "the irony of fate" is told, in the Youth's Companion, by a man recently returned from a Western trip to his home in New England. When he was a boy at the little district school where his education began, there was another boy—about his own age and a neighbor of his—who had a great dislike for what he called "rithmetic." To all appearance the mathematical "faculty" had been left out of his composition.

When the boys discussed their future, as they often did, while the rest glibly expressed their intention of becoming doctors, ministers, lawyers, railroad men or salesmen, this unmathematical boy when appealed to always made the same reply, in a tone of the deepest despondency.

"I don't care much what I am s'long as I can get in a place where I haven't got t'add. I shall look out for a place where there won't be any addin' for me t'do, I can tell you!"

The boys were separated as the years passed, and many of them went to the city to seek their fortunes. The man who tells the story had not seen his old school fellow for more than twenty years, and to all intents and purposes had forgotten him, when he was one day detained, through a slight railroad accident, at a little town in the far West.

Not knowing how long the delay would be, he went into the station to have a little conversation with the ticket agent. The man's pronunciation bespoke his New England birth, and something in his face struck the traveler as familiar; and after asking a few questions he discovered that this was the man who, as a boy, had made up his mind to look out for a place with which no "addin'" could be connected.

They referred to the old times, and the traveler said: "I presume you've quite overcome your former objection to mathematics, as I find you here."

"No, I haven't," replied his old friend, with a wry face. "Figgers come about as hard as ever to me, an' there aint a man or a woman gets on or off here but makes me calc'late how long they'll be gettin' here, there an' ev'ry-where; an' I have terrible work with the fares, givin' folks the right change!

"I tell you," remarked this much-tried official, as he said good-by to his old school-mate, "taint for boys to say what their lot in life 'll be. I jest drifted here an' stuck; and I hate addin' jest the same as I used to. An' I've got a boy growin' up," he shouted, as the train moved off, "that hates it worse'n I do!"

AN ELECTRIFIED FENCE.

It Effectually Kept the Boys From Stealing the Gentleman's Pears.

A gentleman who lives almost under the shadow of old Harvard's walls, at Cambridge, has for several years employed his leisure "dabbling in electricity," as he expressed it. In his home all the doors, drawers and windows open and shut by this mysterious force. Mrs. C., the gentleman's wife, declares that she hesitates to touch anything—even to touch a hair brush—in his private room, for fear it may be somehow connected with a hidden wire. One of his inventions is unique, and has been the means of affording him and his friends no little amusement.

In his back yard are several fine old pear trees, which have sometimes led certain boys in the neighborhood to overlook the distinction between meum and tuum. Running along the rear of the fruit garden is a board fence, 100 feet long, perhaps, over which the roguish lads were wont to climb when they wanted pears, and which, likewise, too frequently formed the stage for concert-giving cats.

On the top of this fence Mr. C. tacked strips of zinc, which were connected with the electric wires leading to the house. By pressing a button a more or less strong charge of electricity could be sent through this zinc, odd sections of which were united to the earth by means of wires.

Unsuspecting cats would run along the fence, and the moment their forefeet touched the non-insulated zinc an astonished feline rose from one to three feet into the air, sometimes to turn a complete somersault, and then to descend with all four feet outstretched as if to fly. If the unlucky cat, in falling chanced to hit the zinc again, the performance was apt to be repeated with variations. The instant puss touched solid earth she would utter one shrill meow of terror and dart away.

One afternon during last fall Mr. C. was sitting in his room when, chancing to look from the window, he spied a boy in the act of climbing the fence, his hands resting on the zinc. Mr. C. immediately recognized him as one of the purloiners of his pears. He put his finger on the electric button, and the next moment a startled boy jumped backward, and tried to let go his hold on the fence.

But electricity had set its grip upon his hands and he was as powerless to get away as he would be to throw down Bunker Hill monument with a puff of his breath.

He kicked, he pulled backwards, he struggled this way and that, and, finally, in despair, he shouted lustily for help.

Mr. C. watched the lad for a time, and then, thinking he had punished him sufficiently, removed his finger from the button and released him from electrical durance. The boy, meantime, had caught a glimpse of Mr. C.'s smiling face at the window, and immediately connected him with his own peculiar sensations. He gave vent to his feelings, therefore, in an angry threat that he and the boys would "tear the old fence down," and ran off.

A few minutes later half a dozen ragged-looking urchins, led by the electrified boy of a few minutes before, were seen approaching the fence, as if with a determination to tear it down.

Mr. C.'s finger sought the electric button. One of the ragmuffins put his hands on the fence, and that instant uttered a shriek of pain and terror. Electricity had caught him.

His comrades stopped just long enough to see that the boy was held fast, and took to their heels and deserted in a body. Mr. C. gave the frightened lad a few words of advice, and then suffered him to depart, says the Youth's Companion. Not a pear was disturbed after that, nor has he since known of a boy's attempting to climb that electrical fence.

A Fine Collection.

The Critic describes at length two volumes of autograph letters, documents, signatures, etc., belonging to J. Pierpont Morgan, the New York banker, which probably have no mates anywhere, and certainly are unmatched in America. One of them contains the autographs of almost every ruler of England from Henry VI. (1450) to George II., as well as those of Warwick the Kingmaker, Mary Stuart, Sir Walter Raleigh, the duke of Marlborough, Henry IV., and Louis XIV., Frederick the Great, William the Silent, Prince Rupert, Bishop Latimer, Milton, Ben Johnson, Addison, Pope, Dr. Johnson, Newton, Watts, etc. The other (a much handsomer book) contains not only the autographs, but engraved portraits also, of the kings and queens of England since George II., including the present heir apparent, Nelson, Wellington, Humboldt, Washington, etc., and many of the most illustrious English and American men and women of letters of the century. Mr. Morgan owns also the letter in which Cornwallis asked Washington to consider terms for the surrender of Yorktown.

Lobsters Dread Thunder.

The lobster dreads thunder and when the peals are very loud numbers of them drop their claws and swim away for deeper water. Any great fright might also induce them to drop their claws. But new claws begin at once to grow and in a short time are as large as the old ones and covered with hard shells. The lobster often drops its shell, when it hides until the new shell is hard enough to protect it.

The World Moves West.

It is entertaining to learn that in 1800 Philadelphia had 10,000 more population than New York. But that was long ago, when Chicago, which is now ahead of the City of Brotherly Love in population, was a howling wilderness.

That Gorton's cornet band is a dandy.

If you want your advertisement known and read by all men put it in the JOURNAL columns.

It is reported that grain sown in Iowa is rotting in the ground. This is worse than anything we have experienced here so far.

I. U. Jennings tells us that he made his first visit to Fosston last week. Found a live, progressive little village with evidences of being a good business point.

Lewis Ellington, A. G. Gallasch and others have decided to put in a bank at Thief River Falls. They will start in with a capital of from $30,000 to $50,000.

A. C. Rhinehart returned to Red Lake Reservation last week where he is engaged in estimating pine. He informs the JOURNAL that it will require some time to complete his work.

New and elegant styles in summer millinery constantly arriving at Mrs. E. E. Bangs fashionable millinery store. Such lovely hats—Oh, my! The ladies are invited to call and see them.

P. Alexander Johnston, the mind reader gave an entertainment in the opera house on Wednesday evening of last week to a small house. An accident to him, caused by his colliding with a post while blindfolded, cut the performance short. His performances seem truly wonderful.

Friends of the JOURNAL can do us a great favor by speaking a good word for the JOURNAL to their neighbors who may not have it already. The JOURNAL is the people's paper and will advocate nothing that is not in the interest of the people. Everybody should have it. Now is the time to subscribe.

J. H. Peterson went up to Fosston last week to talk horse to some of his old comrades and friends. Peterson Bros. & Warninger can show some of the finest trotting stock ever brought to Polk county and they are not ashamed to talk about it either. The boys deserve encouragement for the enterprise they have shown.

We send out a few sample copies of this issue and by this means invite you to become subscribers to the JOURNAL. We would like the name of every man in Polk county on our list, but we do not put them there without orders and no one to whom it is addressed need hesitate to take it out and read it and if you like it order it. We shall do our best to make it a welcome visitor to every home.

E. C. Elwood was over from Grand Forks on Monday with a sample section of the new fence that the Grand Forks Wire Fence Co. builds. It is the most complete wire fence we ever saw, costs but a trifle more than the ordinary fence and is very much safer; in fact it seems impossible for stock to damage themselves in it. Anyone contemplating building a wire fence should see this fence.

Fred Syverson, of Lindsay post office, sends the JOURNAL the following addition to our hail list: O. Sunsdahl, 67 cents; August Johnson, 67 cents; P. A. Rustad, 66 cents; Osmund Swenson, 25 cents, which adds $2.25 to the amount already collected. The amounts that the JOURNAL has received and disbursed, though not adequate to supply the full demands has been the means of doing much good and shows that there still exists a spirit of true charity in the county.

Our reporter dropped into Mrs. E. E. Bangs' fashionable millinery store on Second Street, this week and finding that lady at leisure for a moment inquired of her how it was possible that she was selling off at cost. "Well," said she, "it is a fact I AM selling at cost simply because I do not propose to carry over any stock into next season. I have done an excellent business this season and shall now close out my stock strictly at cost. All that my lady patrons have to do to convince them of this fact is to compare my prices with any other house and they will see that I mean just what I say."

Speaking of Hank Dobell, who was recently drowned in Lake Pokegama, Col. Gorgas said: "Hank was well known here in Crookston especially by all the members of our gun club as he used to shoot with us at our tournaments, and a good shot he was, too. I know all about that lake where he was drowned and I think the very place where he was drowned was the place where myself and a comrade was nearly swamped one time. It is near an island in the lake and an exceeding treacherous place. I never expected the boat would weather the storm but she did and we reached the island more dead than alive. Hank and another man were fitting up a summer resort upon that very island and I think they had a good thing of it had they lived but both men were drowned. Poor Hank! he was a whole-souled fellow and had lots of friends here and at the Forks where he lived."

Eli Steenerson is putting large lighted windows in his machinery hall on Main Street.

Attorney Wm. Watts went to Warren on Monday to attend the adjourned term of court there.

M. R. Brown is building a large barn on Main street near the old M. M. Davis boarding house.

W. C. Andrew, Wright, Barrett & Stilwell's man was in the city selling lots of paper on Friday.

The great event of the year will be the encampment July 4th to 7th inclusive. Everybody invited.

Henry Peterson has bought Pete Misgin's bottling works and will continue the business at the old stand.

T. O. Bergland has but little plowing done yet. Says he shall sow up to June 15th if not done sooner.

An elevator at McIntosh containing 4,000 bushels of wheat, was burned on Saturday. Origin of fire unknown.

L. I. Benoit informs our reporter that he intends to build a large brick store to accommodate his growing trade.

M. R. Brown reports that 41 car loads of young stock for Montana were fed at the stock yards last week; also 3 for Sioux City.

Bishop's genial traveling man, McClellan, interviewed the newspaper boys in the city on Thursday last. Mac is a dandy salesman.

Ed. H. Love, the Kittson County Enterprise man, was in the city last week. Ed continues to get out a very good local sheet and is as independent as ever.

Some excitement was caused on Sabbath evening by a runaway horse attached to a sulky, dashing along Robert street and kicking the splinters out of the gig.

Our little gasoline engine proves a great curicsity being the first one of its kind ever brought to this country and many have dropped in to see it run. All are invited to do so.

Everybody and his wife should make calculations to attend the Encampment here in July. Everything indicates that they are doing so and the biggest crowd Crookston ever saw will be here.

Johnny Hathaway, son of C. P. Hathaway, Esq., met with a serious and painful accident on Friday last by which he sustained a fracture of his left arm, which will lay him off for a time.

Some of the boys are getting great fun fishing these days. Boys of an older growth are also addicted to this habit and the wet weather does not seem to interfere with this industry very much.

These are busy days at the JOURNAL office. It keeps our large force busy to keep up with our orders in the crowded condition incident to the change. Nevertheless we are on deck for all comers.

Superintendent Jenks was on our streets on Monday attending to his routine business and greeting his old friends whose name is legion. Everyone rejoice to see him in that position on this division.

The rain of Thursday last brought many farmers into the city with blue faces—some of them. The farmer who was fortunate enough to get his plowing done last fall is not worrying overmuch—but very few did it.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson spent Friday in the city enroute home from the State convention at St. Paul where he had been honored by being made one of the Republican electors for the State of Minnesota. A worthy selection.

Mayor McKinnon says he has done no seeding on the big farm as yet, and had rather see his grain in the barn than in the ground this weather. He hopes to commence this week, however, and push the work to completion.

Dr. A. Nelson, of Fertile, has purchased Dr. Knickerbocker's drug store in that village and will continue the business. The doctor has built up a good practice in Fertile and vicinity and the JOURNAL is pleased to see this evidence of his success.

M. R. Brown dug some potatoes from his garden last week that had remained in the ground all winter and came out perfect in every way. Brown says that is a good way to keep potatoes through the winter but he is not quite prepared to recommend it in every case.

For the past three weeks we have been hoping to see settled weather so that we could push the work on our building more rapidly. We have been seriously hampered by bad weather, and yet, in spite of it, we are now ready to attend to all orders for job work. Give us your orders.

Geo. W. Peake talks strongly of buying the lot adjoining his property on the east and putting a brick block on the two lots he would then have on the corner of Main and Robert streets That would make him as fine a business location as there is in the city as well as being a very creditable thing to do.

Judge Mills left for Warren on Monday morning, having completed the civil cases here on Saturday.

Mrs. H. W. Donaldson and son arrived on Thursday from Great Falls, Montana, and met the Captain here, on his way home to Northcote, on Friday morning.

Joseph Wiederman, an employe at the marble works, was brought before Justice Spendley last week under the Scheffer law and sentenced to a term on the hill as a boarder at the hotel Grundysen.

Col. Cobham Post held a meeting on Friday evening and adjourned till next Friday evening, when arrangements for Decoration Day will be made. The commander requests every comrade who can possibly do so to attend.

Andrew Steenerson was seen on Saturday by a JOURNAL reporter and asked about his candidacy for Congressman. "Well I don't know anything about that," said he, "all I do know is that just now I am busy delivering my crop of wheat to Lee & Herrick."

Every week our subscription list grows a little. This week we add seven more names. We have facilities for printing ten times more names than we have ever done and should enjoy to have the names to correspond. Send 'em in friends we will take care of them.

Ald. Marlette told the JOURNAL on Monday morning that the rain of the past week was a blessing in disguise, as it had served to solidify the ground "and," said he, "you will find that the farmers generally commenced seeding this morning and the wheat will now go in rapidly."

The cold weather this spring has knocked everybody's calculations galley west on the fuel question and the result is that everybody is out of wood—and no dry wood to be had. The coal dealers stock up on their orders in the spring and the result is a shortage of coal also. Green oak and green elm have been selling at a premium in this market.

Dropping into the New York Store during the rain on Monday evening our reporter found the proprietor, A. Chabot, and an army of clerks busy closing up the business of the day and preparing for the morrow's trade, while on every hand was piled the stacks on stacks of dry goods. Mr. C. will use these columns to inform the JOURNAL readers of his plans for the coming summer.

Meeting A. W. Stewart on the street on Monday evening that gentleman informed our reporter that he had secured grounds near the N. P. depot and would soon open out an extensive lumber yard. Our readers will remember that this was his regular business here before the big saw mill was built, and they will be glad to know that he will again embark in the business among us. The JOURNAL welcomes him and his estimable family back to citizenship among us and wishes him abundant success confident that he will win it.

We have heard some remarks to the effect that "the weather this spring is unprecedented," "such a spring never was known before," and all such-like expressions. Turning to our files "of the years that are past and gone," to confirm or refute these statements, we find that the spring of '82 was extremely wet and very backward and later on we find that one of the largest harvests on record was gathered that year. But very little wheat was reported sowed before the 1st of May and some was put in as late as June 15th. On Thursday, May 23d, occurred a big snow storm with a week of exceedingly cold weather. We remember what a howl went up and how the croakers predicted a total and everlasting smashup, but in the fall that tune was changed in view of a large crop and good prices. We do not see any occasion for any large-sized alarms, as yet, though in some cases a pretty stiff back-bone is needed in this emergency.

Last Monday a deal was completed for the purchase of the Commercial Hotel by Messrs E. L. Clark, of Portage, Wis., and Wm. Boyd, of Grand Rapids, Mich. These gentlemen have purchased the entire hotel property from Proprietor Clements, and as soon as possible they will fit up the house with all the modern improvements, re-build the wooden portion, and thoroughly renovate the entire building inside and outside. Messrs. Clark & Boyd have been running first class hotels in their respective cities previous to coming here, and they will not rest until the Commercial is a model of neatness and comfort. Mrs. Clark, who accompanied her husband, is thoroughly familiar with hotel management, and her advice and suggestions will contribute much to the success of the house. Col. J. A. Bemis, who has been conducting the hotel for a number of years, will go south, where he and Mrs. Bemis will seek much needed rest and recuperation at some of the health resorts, and may possibly determine to return to Crookston. The genial colonel and his amiable wife will be missed by the people of Crookston and the traveling public.

"It will be summer time—by and bye."

W. L. Palmer was down from Fosston on Saturday.

Spider and Fly company next Saturday evening at the Grand.

Andy Locken has moved into the old Sletten residence on Ash street.

Smith's new Broadway meat market is a good place to buy meats. Try it.

Charles Gulickson, near Beltrami has all of his wheat sowed, about 140 acres.

D. McMillan, near Beltrami has sown 190 acres to wheat and is not worrying about the weather.

Teachers should not forget the coming training school and be on deck ready for business.

Harry Falk went down to St. Paul last week to attend the Republican convention as a delegate.

Chas. Vine is doing a rushing business in meats, and the reason is plain—good quality and reasonable prices.

Judge Lewis intends to live in his house on Ash street. This compels Tom Adams and Will Bugg to get a move on 'em.

Helmick Bros. sold a steer to Smith, the Broadway butcher last week. The animal was not quite two years old and dressed 721 pounds.

Have you seen Smith's new meat market on Broadway? He has everything as slick as a whistle and sells at very reasonable prices.

Chas. Vine will not be beaten by the best of them on choice meats, low prices or any other attraction of a meat market. Try him and see.

John Alderman is clearing the debris from his burned building on Robert street preparatory to building or selling or anything that turns up.

W. J. Nickels was up from Neilsville way over Sunday. Says seeding is progressing very slowly. Nickels talks of going into business in this city.

Have you tried Smith's new meat market, No. 14 Broadway? Everything neat and tidy and the very choicest meats on tap. Call and see.

R. S. Knudson informs the JOURNAL that the prospects are that a larger attendance than ever will be had at the Crookston business college next term.

Mrs. J. O. Milne arrived from Duluth on Friday morning summoned by a telegram announcing the illness of her daughter in law, Mrs. Melville Milne.

W. F. Bugg talks of building a handsome residence on his lot in Jerome's additon. In the meantime he has rented Mr. Bivins' residence on Ash street.

C. C. Hoch and Fred Rauch left for Stephen on Saturday morning loaded for bear. Said they were going to bring back every geese in Marshall County.

Dr. A. Nelson was up from Fertile on Friday circulating a petition for his appointment as postmaster of that village. The doctor is a stalwart Republican but everybody, without regard to politics, signed the petition.

L. E. Gossman took a trip below last week and when he returned a lady, whom he introduced to his friends as Mrs. L. E. Gossman, accompanied him. The JOURNAL extends congratulations and bids the fair bride welcome to Crookston society.

Real estate deals seem to be numerous about Edna this spring. Among others we learn that H. B. Budd has sold six or eight farms, several of which he had previously bought. H. B. is said to have made quite a snug sum on these deals.

S. H. Benton, the night operator at the N. P. depot, who a few weeks since decamped with an express package containing $500, has been arrested in British Columbia. It is said that he is a defaulter to the road in a large amount from tickets sold to scalpers.

When our streets are extremely muddy it should afford us some consolation to know that our city is better drained by our excellent sewer system than many of our neighboring villages and cities. At the same time we can't help feeling that we should like to see dry streets for fifteen or twenty minutes once more.

Wm. Davidson was in from the Keystone farm on Saturday looking for a hired girl. In conversation with a JOURNAL reporter he said that he has sowed 600 acres in wheat of the 10,000 to be sown. Mr. D. says he shall keep things moving until the work is completed if it takes till the 15th of June.

Mrs. Melville Milne entered into rest on Friday evening of last week after a brief illness of a few days' duration. The funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church at 11 a. m. on Sunday, by the pastor Rev. McDonald and the edifice was crowded to its utmost capacity. The JOURNAL extends its heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved young husband and child in this hour of their deep affliction.

Prof. Willis M. West of the N. D. University, Grand Forks, delivered an excellent lecture at the Congregational church last Saturday evening. His subject was "Books and Reading," and the way he handled it showed that he was familiar with all the best literature that has ever been written. He spoke of the best books to read and how to read them. He thought the standard works of fiction should be read by everyone, and he deprecated the habit of reading in dull moments simply to kill time. A good book should be read and studied just as a student would read history.

Gorton's Minstrels appeared at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening. The band was unusually fine but for the amount of advertising and puffing the troupe has had we must confess to a feeling of disappointment in them. Our own home-made end men, Will Arnold and Frank Gravel need not fear losing their laurels to Gorton's end men.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Munn intend leaving for Meriden, Mass., next week where Mr. Munn has secured a good position as machinist. They will leave many warm friends in this city who will join with the JOURNAL in best wishes for their future prosperity.

Prof. Strawbridge has purchased the Crookston Business College from R. S. Knudson and will conduct it personally hereafter. Mr. Strawbridge's reputation in this line is sufficient guarantee that the college will be a success under his management.

M. Lefebvre has moved his shop into Peake's building on Main street adjoining Misner's barber shop. M'sieur Lefebvre is one of the best artists in his line of business and to wear a pair of Lefebvre's own make of boots is to be in the height of fashion.

Rev. R. H. Batty will speak at the Congregational Church next Sunday, May 15th, Subjects—11 a. m. "Dissolving Discouragements," 8 p. m. "The Magnetism of Love." All are welcome. Seats free. Strangers very cordially invited.

Louis Hebel informs the JOURNAL that he has bought two lots in Jerome's Addition and if he can sell his house and lot in Sampson's Woodland Addition will build a residence on the new acquisition. Louis has a nice property over there.

The Young People's Society of the Swedish Lutheran Church will give an entertainment this evening at the Business College hall. Refreshments will be served during the evening. Tickets 25 cents. Everybody come.

Capt. E. C. Davis' operations have been interfered with by the high water in the river. He is getting his pile-driver and other implements of warfare on deck to be all ready for business when the waters subside.

J. W. Ralston dropped into our den on Thursday afternoon and handing us a fine Acorn cigar remarked: "Girl. Yesterday. Regulation weight. All's well." Well, John here's ho!

Jolly J. W. Benedict is helping Tom Harris in his moving business.

The train on the Great Northern road was six hours late on Monday evening.

Work is commenced on the excavation for the cellar in the new Fournet block.

W. E. McKenzie, of the Times, went to St. Paul Wednesday on a brief business trip.

Doc Rutledge, of the Fisher Bulletin, was up to see the minstrels on Tuesday evening.

The portly form of the genial Fred Stauff was seen upon our streets on Wednesday.

Alderman Jerome is arranging to make extensive improvements on his hotel, The St. Louis.

Messrs. Warren, Graber and Lord, of the Minnesota Hail Association, were in the city Wednesday.

W. F. Stone, who returned from McIntosh Wednesday, reports 90 per cent. of the seeding completed in that vicinity.

Wm. Boyd, of the Commercial, left for Grand Rapids, Mich., to make arrangements for moving here permanently.

Mrs. Chris Houston came over to the city on Wednesday and is visiting with Mrs. I. Simmons a day or so. She has not fully recovered from her severe illness as yet.

Herb Mason is putting on lugs. He has discarded weeds and is putting elegant wall paper in the place thereof. When all is completed Herb will have a neat and tasty store.

Miss Verroneau and Mrs. Adams wish to inform the JOURNAL readers that they are now receiving their summer styles of millinery and invite the attention of their lady friends thereto.

J. S. Pinney, manager of the St. Paul branch of the American Press association, was in the city Wednesday. It is always a pleasure to see Mr. Pinney's tall form and genial smile.

On Wednesday morning Dahle & Bergstrom took possession of their new quarters in the old Hack & Gallasch block, after having painted and papered the room in elegant shape.

W. S. Edwards, of the Tracy Republican, was a caller at the JOURNAL office on Saturday last. He arrived on the N. P. line en-route for his old home at Warren, and being too late for the train on the St. Vincent line was obliged to stay in Crookston until Monday morning—48 hours! How is that for accommodation.

Ladies now is your time to buy first class millinery at cost. This is not a spring and fall advertisement but a genuine fact. I shall positively close out my entire stock between now and July 15th. Ladies' and children's hats from 20 cents, upwards. I buy no job lots. My goods are new. Am experienced in buying and carry no other line of trade. Can sell you better goods for the money than you may find elsewhere Call and see my work and get prices.
MRS. SEMPF.

Magnificent Service.

On Wednesday last at 6 or 7 p. m., the result of the convention at Morris was wired the JOURNAL and the message was delivered at the office at 9:10 on Thursday morning—long after we had read the news in the St. Paul evening papers. Wonderful handy things these telegraphs! They beat an old fashioned Red River cart a good bit.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Townsman R. P. Herrick Dies Suddenly at Oswego, N. Y., Last Tuesday.

The News Casts a Gloom Over the City, Where Everybody Knew Him.

Mr. R. P. Herrick, the junior member of the milling firm of Lee & Herrick, in company with his brother, J. F. Herrick, started for the home of the latter in Oswego, N. Y. On Wednesday morning the following brief dispatch was received:

OSWEGO, N. Y., May 17.
G. M. Herrick, Crookston, Minn.:
Your uncle Dick died suddenly on arrival home to-day.
J. F. HERRICK.

Mr. Herrick had been a resident of this city ever since the mill was built and had made many warm friends here. For several years he had been a great sufferer from rheumatic attacks, and at the time his partner was taken insane was in Oswego recruiting his greatly impaired health. Although hardly fit to undertake the journey, he came on to take charge of affairs here and had been about his office at the mill a great deal of the time apparently getting along nicely. Beyond the brief news contained in the telegram, nothing is known as to the immediate cause of his death. The mill will be shut down until the arrival of Jas. H. Lee who will take charge of it.

Sture's Cow.

Neighbor Sture bought a cow of a farmer and when the farmer had brought her as far as the Robert street bridge on Jerome's addition, bossy declined to cross the raging Red Lake river, broke the rope and went back to her home on the billowy prairie. And again, at the second attempt a few days latter she wrecked a brand new halter and departed hence, and behold friend Sture was wroth. Now in these days there dwelt in the land of Jerome's addition a man of the tribe of Bradshaw, whose sur-name was Henery, a man mighty in cow lore, and unto him did friend Sture appeal to bring over and deliver unto his hands the aforesaid cow. And there dwelt also in the same land a doctor of high degree, whose sur-name was Mike and unto him did friend Sture appeal to saw the horns off the critter, and lo! it was done even as Sture desired. And it came to pass that friend Sture did say unto the mighty cow man, "Behold all things are ready; go thou forth unto the land of Fairfacts, procure the bovine aforesaid, lead her round about by the land of the Carmanites, past the dwelling of one Sampson—the strong man and thus shalt thou avoid the bridges—thou shalt abridge the distance as it were." But the man liked it not thus and reasoned unto himself: "What, shall I, the mighty cow-boy of the wild and wooly, surrender unto a cow? A Short-hornd cow that verily has no horns at all? Not much, I will show unto the world that I am in very truth he that shall lead the cow over the bridges and deliver her to her new owner or I will know why." So he hied him unto the prairie, hitched unto the aforesaid cow and in triumph arrived at the first bridge on the line of march even the bridge leading unto Jerome's addition which, after a good deal of persuasion and the free use of the alchemy known unto the festive cow-boy the cow was induced to cross and everything went well until the bridge of Sampson's addition was reached and here the cow went into open rebellion, declaring that she would by no means cross over and throwing herself flat upon the ground she would not be persuaded to rise again. But the wise and humane cow-man was not to be balked that way, so hitching a strong rope about the cow's neck and fastening the other end to his wagon axle he drew the poor beast across the bridge, but even then bossy fooled him, for it was a dead cow that reached the addition and Sture got no fresh milk for supper that night as he had confidently expected.

Carlton College.

The annual catalogue of Carlton college, of Northfield, is before us. Although not 25 years old it has an established reputation and an endorsement of over $300,000, a corps of 24 instructors, a collegiate, an academic and a musical department, and has enrolled 341 students. This college maintains a high standard in all departments, and aims to keep up with the best methods and attainments. Its president is Rev. James Strong, D. D.

Beltrami Items.

At the annual meeting of the Beltrami Union Sunday School society, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Superintendent, E. W. Johnson; Assistant Superintendent, I. B. Welter; Secretary, D. N. Dalrymple; Treasurer, D. McMillan; Librarian, John Towers. The services will bs hsld every Sunday in the Beltrami school house at 2:30 p. m. All interested in the study of God's word are cerdially invited.

Mr. Peterson, cashier of the Ada bank, was in town on business today.

Our genial lumber merchant has left for parts unknown.

The swamp between here and Neilsville is impassabls.

Maggie, the 13 year old daughter of Joseph and Mary Gilsoul, who has been very ill for a long time, passed away Friday. Her remains were taken to Kilkenny, the former residence of her parents.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. Jorgenson died of measles on Thursday. The mother is now quite ill of the same disease.

There has been more business of all kinds done here this spring than at any time since the town was started. We have now two general stores, one lumber dealer, two machinery firms and three more will be added as soon as the sale of mowers begins. Farmers will do well to interview our merchants before going away from the home market to trade.

Two base ball clubs have been organized recently. Lewis Seeger is captain of one and Charles Walter of the other.

A sporting club is also in the ring and George Pickering is president. He thinks after a little practice that he will be able to give John L. Sullivan lessons. EDNA.

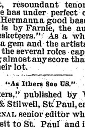
The Sleeping Queen.

Owing to the stormy weather and the non-arrival of the advertising matter for the Sleeping Queen Opera Company, the city will not be billed in the way so good a company deserves to be. This is the same company who appeared in St. Paul and Minneapolis in the opera now such a pronounced success. The entire company will appear at the Grand on Friday, May 20th. Speaking of this performance the Minneapolis Tribune says:

The delightful author of the "Bohemian Girl" did a clever thing when he wrote the charming operetta "The Sleeping Queen" which was produced at the Grand Opera House last evening. The story as told in the opera is a pretty conceit and its musical and dramatic excellences are sufficient to sustain the interest from start to finish. In all fairness it must be recorded that "The Sleeping Queen," as seen last evening is one one of the most thoroughly delightful things that has been seen on the stage for some time. Miss Josephine Jennings, in the title roll, sang artistically and well. She has a pretty and thoughtful face and looked and acted queenly. Miss Leona Hamilton, with her rich, pure contralto-voice added much to the evening's enjoyment in the role of Donna Agnes. As to the gentlemen, Emmet P. Browning as Philippe D'Aguiler an exile and Mr. Julius Hermann as his excellency The Regent, gave splendid renditions of their respective roles. Mr. Browning has a sweet, resoundant tenor voice which he has under perfect control, and Mr. Hermann a good basso. The libretto is by Farnie, the author of "The Musketeers." As a whole the opera is a gem and the artists interpreting the several roles capable of handling almost any score that might fall to their lot.

"As Ithers See US."

"Pointers," published by Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, St. Paul, captured the JOURNAL senior editor while on a recent visit to St. Paul and in its issue for April publishes our "picter" and the following chunk of taffy:



H. E. COOKE CONTEMPLATING HIS NEW OUTFIT.

H. E. Cooke, the genial Yankee of the Crookston (Minn.) JOURNAL, will hardly know his own office when his improvements are completed. A new addition to his building, a new Potter cylinder-press, a new Sanborn cutter, a new dress of self-spacing bourgeois, a new outfit of advertising type, etc., will fairly transmogrify (that's one of his new words to go with the other new stuff—we don't know what it means) the whole concern. Nobody in the state will take more satisfaction in a fine new outfit, we'll bet a Cooke-y.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company Makes a Cheap Excursion to Crookston in June.

Agent Sharkey advises us that the Northern Pacific railroad has made a rate of one fare for the round trip, Minneapolis to Crookston, during the time of the Republican convention in Minneapolis in June. These tickets will be good for use until June 25th. People desiring to visit our magnificent city and the Red River Valley should take advantage of the cheap railroad fare.

Notice to Clean Up.

Notice is hereby given that all streets, alleys, back yards and all accumulation of the past winter must be cleaned up and hauled away at once. Unless this notice is obeyed by property owners the owners will be dealt with according to law. This removal includes all ash piles, barn-yard offal, chips, dirt and other debris.

By order City Council,
E. C. CARRUTH,
3-5 City Clerk.

Just at the present time there is a great inquiry for good houses to rent and the supply is wholly inadequate to the demand. While this is an encouraging sign of growth it also suggests a possibility of driving away some who wish to become residents by a lack that public spirited citizens should be only too glad to supply. If parties who have bought lots for purposes of speculation would build upon them they could realize on their investment right along at the same time making their lots very much more valuable and desirable. At no time in the history of the city has the demand for houses been greater and the supply scarcer. And while this is true dozens of houses are being built.

Crookston Nurseries.

I have a new catalogue and card just issued, giving reduced prices of trees, tree seeds and small fruits for spring planting, which will be sent free by mail to anyone making application. FRANK T. HASELTINE,

Special Excursion Rates.

The official route of the Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W., from St. Paul to Helena, is via the Great Northern. Special train leaves St. Paul, June 12th, at 9 a. m. Round trip rate via this or regular train $40.00, with choice of various routes returning. The same rates also applies to the Mining Congress July 12th, and the National Encampment Sons of Veterans, August 8th, both at Helena. For particulars inquire of W. W. Fegan, agent, who will also furnish information regarding the half fare rates, via the Great Northern, from this place to Minneapolis during the National Republican Convention.

A portrait of the American Duchess of Marlborough makes one of the attractions of Peterson for June. The beautiful picture is accompanied by an interesting illustrated article on Blenheim Castle, the palace which England built for the famous warrior duke. "A Glint of Sunshine," by Patience Stapleton, is among this favorite authors best stories. In "Plants for House and Garden," by Joyce Ray, much practical information will be found. "Curiosities in Embroideries," by Margaret V. Payne, is a delightful account, illustrated by wonderful relics that belonged to Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth and others. "Ornary Wilt," by Ella Higginson, is worthy of the reputation of this gifted writer. "Woman at the World's Fair," by Annie Curd, is an exceedingly comprehensive and timely paper. The The engravings, fashion plates, household talks and the like are even superior to this magazine's ordinary high standard. The July number begins a new volume, and will be a good time to subscribe. Terms, $2 a year; $1 for six months. Address, Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Notice for Bids for Park Site.

Notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received by the City Council until Tuesday, June 14th, for a site for a city park.

By order of City Council,
E. C. CARRUTH,
3-8 Clerk.

THE INMAN TRANSFER.

England Displeased at the Loss of the Ocean Racers.

LONDON, May 17.—No other event in many months has caused such a great amazement and disgust in the British mind as the transfer of the ocean racers of the Inman line to the American flag. The average Englishman regards British supremacy on the seas as so thoroughly established, that it is impossible for him to understand why any vessel could be willing, under any circumstances, to transfer its allegiance and accept the flag of another power. This is the patriotic view. For the business world in Great Britain the Inman incident has an aspect even darker, as it is more practical. Merchants and others see in this transfer the cloud no bigger than a man's hand, that foreshadows the loss of England's commercial supremacy, and the building up of American commerce at the expense of the British. The commercial and industrial growth of the United States was already regarded with deep jealousy, even before this incident. Now there is almost a panic. The government will have to take some step to prevent or to discourage other steamship lines from following the example of the Inman, but the government appears to be in confusion as to what steps to take.

SHOT THE INTRUDER.

A Montana Woman Defends Her Honor with a Rifle.

HELENA, Mont., May 17.—Word has been received here concerning a tragedy on Antelope creek, Fergus county. Frank Coburn, a ranchman who lived near by, made improper proposals to a Mrs. Drake on several occasions during the absence of her husband, whose business frequently called him from home. Tuesday night Coburn went to the house and demanded admittance. He was told to go away, but insisted on coming in. As he entered the door Mrs. Drake leveled a rifle at him and fired. The bullet struck him in the breast and he died shortly after. The frightened woman then ran a distance of two miles to the home of her uncle, Fred Warren, and notified him of the shooting. Coburn, it is claimed, threatened to kill her if she told her husband.

Baron Fava Returns.

NEW YORK, May 17.—Baron Fava, the Italian minister to the United States, has arrived here on the La Gascogne. His arrival was made the occasion of a demonstration on the part of the Italian residents in this city. The steamer Laura M. Starin left quarantine at 8 a. m. with 800 Italians on board. Various civic and military societies were included in the party. Minister Fava was received with the greatest enthusiasm. He left for Washington at 3 o'clock

Diphtheria Epidemic.

ERIE, Pa., May 1 .—Thirty-two houses are placarded for diphtheria, a large proportion of cases proving fatal. During an outbreak in January the school board refused to close the schools at the request of Health Officer Woods. The court will take action on a motion for a mandamus closing the public schools for three weeks. Strict quarantine of the infected houses is ordered.

A Preacher Suddenly Stricken.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Rev. W. M. Speake, pastor of the Fourth Street Methodist Episcopal church, was stricken with heart disease while addressing the Sunday school and died a few minutes afterward in the parsonage, next door. The sudden death was a great shock to the congregation and family. Mr. Speake was 60 years old and a native of Baltimore.

Spice Company Attached.

SIOUX CITY, May 17.—Five attachments have been served on the Northwestern Spice company. The first attachments were on behalf of J. P. and Mary Adams, of New York, on promisory notes for $13,000. Immediately afterward Joseph Winge attached the factory and stock for $8,000, and the First National bank for $12,000. This is only a part of the liabilities. It is believed that the assets will be insufficient.

White Posts Will Disband.

NEW ORLEANS, May 17.—The old fight for years in the G. A. R. of Louisiana and Mississippi on the color line by which several white department commanders have been suspended. will culminate Wednesday night next in the disbanding of eight white posts of the department, leaving the two colored posts as the sole members.

CLARKSON'S OPINION.

The Chairman of the Republican National Committee Interviewed at Chicago.

He Denies All the Stories About His Hostility to Harrison—Not Booming Anyone.

In His Opinion No One Has a Cinch on Nomination—Several Ballots Likely.

CHICAGO, May 19.—J. S. Clarkson, chairman of the Republican national convention, was in town for a short time en route from Hot Springs to New York. He was somewhat sarcastic regarding the stories printed as to his hostility to President Harrison. "I have not looked at a newspaper or touched a particle of correspondence for two months," said he in reply to a question, "and therefore I cannot have fixed up many schemes. The truth is I am going to Minneapolis to vote for some one, but I do not care to state for whom I will vote. The 7,000,000 Republicans who will be represented at Minneapolis have not made up their minds regarding their candidate. The result of the convention held in various states clearly shows this. There will be more uninstructed delegates at Minneapolis than ever before in the history of the Republican party. The Northern states—the states which will elect the candidate of the convention—have almost everyone of them sent uninstructed delegates.

"The majority of the instructed delegates come from the Southern states. Some of the able editors and federal office holders," continued Mr. Clarkson, in a tone that showed some bitterness, "claim the nomination is settled already. They are entitled to their opinions and I am to mine."

Mr. Clarkson said there would be several ballots without doubt. He declined to pick the Democratic nominee, but said that whoever he was he would be beaten. In closing the interview he again declared he was not booming or opposing anyone.

McKinley Talks to Students.

COLUMBUS, O., May 18.—Governor McKinley and a number of distinguished Buckeyes left for Ann Arbor in the private car of Governor Ashley, of the Ann Arbor road. At the close of the national convention of Republican students a banquet will be given, at which Governor McKinley will deliver an address to the students. Before leaving here McKinley said: "President Harrison will be the nominee of the Minneapolis convention and there is no good reason to doubt his re-election."

Wouldn't Run with Vic.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Mrs. Emma Beckwith, to whom has been offered the nomination for vice president of the United States on the equal rights ticket, declares that while she would prefer the position with either Belva Lockwood or Frances E. Willard for first place, she would not run on the same ticket with Victoria Woodhull.

AMERICAN REGISTRY.

A Bill in the Senate to Encourage Shipbuilding in This Country.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Mr. Chandler introduced in the senate another bill to give American registry to prospective United States cruisers. It recited that Austin Corbin, of New York, and his associates propose to incorporate a company under the laws of New York known as the American Steamship company with a capital of at least $10,000,000 for the purpose of constructing and purchasing a fleet of first-class passenger steamers to run between New York and ports in Great Britain, and enacted that all the vessels so owned if not less than 5,000 tons burden and capable of a speed of not less than nineteen knots an hour, which might be acquired by purchase or otherwise by the company, after the passage of this act, should be entitled to American registers on the same terms as those granted to the steamships City of Paris and City of New York, and to all other privileges granted by the act of May 10, 1892, providing that, on making application for such registry for a foreign built ship, said Corbin and his associates shall show that they have contracted to build in an American shipyard a vessel of equal or greater tonnage.

Log Jam Seven Miles Long.

GRANTSBURG, Wis., May 17.—The jam at Eagle island, St. Croix river, is now seven miles long, and logs are still running into it. An attempt was made to get a haul on it during the day and hundreds of spectators were present to witness the dangerous feat, but no haul could be got as the water is too low. This is the worst jam ever known on the St. Croix.

Went Down with the Bridge.

INDEPENDENCE, Ia., May 17.—Eight days' continuous rain and a cloudburst in the eastern part of the county caused four bridges to go out and the lowlands are flooded. A Danish family, consisting of the man, wife and a child, attempted to cross a bridge just before it went down. The bridge gave way while they were on it and all were drowned.

WILL MEET JULY 2.

Programme of the People's Party Convention Arranged.

OMAHA, May 16.—The national executive committee of the People's party met at the Millard and promulgated the following official order and programme for the national convention of that party to be held in this city July 4:

Owing to the desire to make nominations on July 4 all delegates will meet for temporary organization at the Coliseum building, Omaha, Neb., on July 2, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. The various state delegations are requested to meet at 9 o'clock on the same day to elect one member of each of the following committees: Credentials, rules and order of business, permanent organization and resolutions, also to select three members of the national committee from each state and territory.

The following order of exercises has been arranged:

Call to order by Chairman H. E. Taubeneck, of the national committee, prayer, address of welcome by Mayor George P. Bemis of Omaha, response by United States Senator J. H. Kyle, announcement of temporary officers, call of states and territories for the announcement of committee on credentials, short addresses by L. L. Polk, T. V. Powderly, J. B. Weaver, Ignatius Donnelly, Jerry Simpson, Ben Terrell and others, interspersed with music and singing.

THE USUAL THING.

An Illinois Young Man Kills His Sweetheart and Suicides.

SPARTA, Ills., May 16.—Charles Jones, aged 24, Anna Devan, aged 15, and Julia McFarland, aged 17, all of Eden, a village two miles east of Sparta, came here to shop in the afternoon. On the way back to Eden, Jones produced a 38-calibre revolver and said to Miss Devan: "Will you marry me?"

"Yes, right now," she replied, "If you give me the revolver."

"You lie," rejoined Jones." "You promised me this before and afterward went back on me, and now I intend to kill you."

He then fired two shots at her, one taking effect in the head and the other in the back, killing her instantly. Julia McFarland jumped from the cart, and Jones followed. He walked a short distance from where he shot Miss Devan in the cart, shot himself in the head and fell dead. The horse became frightened and ran off with Miss Devan's body in the cart. It was stopped two miles away.

Given a Banquet.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 16.—The delegates to the deep water convention were banquetted at the Gayoso hotel in grand Southern style. The presiding officer of the banquet was Senator Harris. Some of the crack speakers of the country were on the toast list and the visitors were treated to a feast of oratory. Covers were laid for 500 people and among the distinguished guests were Senators Voorhees, Butler, Harris and a dozen members of congress. The speeches were singularly free from sectional references, the orators devoting their remarks to the South as a haven for capitalists.

A Deputy Shot.

GILLETTE, Wy., May 17.—Reports reach here that deputy U. S. Marshal Gibson was shot and severely wounded Saturday on the Powder river, the ball passing through the shoulders. No definite particulars can be obtained. Gibson was one of the men deputized for the serving of the injunctions restraining the small stock growers and ranchmen from holding a round-up of their own.

A GIRL'S SHARP SCHEME.

Disguised as a Calf She Robs Sluice Boxes of Much Gold.

BOISE CITY, Ida., May 17.—Bill Dampman, a miner at Sabe Creek, has for some time been missing a great deal of rich amalgam from his sluice boxes. He has kept a watch for several nights past and noticed that a small calf came about the same time every night to drink from the sluice box. Sunday night he fired at the calf from sheer wantonness. With a human cry the calf staggered upon its hind legs, then fell to the ground. Running up to the supposed animal Dampman discovered he had shot and killed a young man who had been around the camp for some time. A later investigation showed that instead of a male the supposed boy was a girl about 18 years of age.

A Pennsylvania Cyclone.

CLEVELAND, O., May 17.—A special from Corry, Pa., states that a cyclone in that place caused great damage. At Dunham & Ford's lumber yard huge piles of lumber were leveled. The roofs were stripped off the Stennett and Morgaridge blocks. The wind struck the Weeks Opera house in which the Universalists were holding services and it shook and creaked so that a panic was created. A huge wooden building used for factory purposes was blown three feet out of plumb. No one was seriously injured.

Laid Her Neck on the Track.

ROCHESTER, N. H., May 17.—The engineer of a milk train as it was approaching this station saw a woman lying across the track. He gave a warning whistle, but her only response was to raise her head and deliberately place her neck on one of the rails. The engine and tender passed over her, severing the head from the body. The suicide was Mrs. Thomas Downing. Domestic trouble probably drove her to commit suicide.

THE SWINGING GATE.

The twilight is full of sadness,
And the wind in its coat of gray
Skulks like a wolf thro' the shadows,
And will not be scared away.

Down at the foot of the garden
The gate is swinging slow,
As if invisible footsteps
Were passing to an fro.

And it seems to me, in my musing,
They are the feet of my coming fate,
That will find their way to my threshold
And pass it like the gate.

O, say, do ye bring good tidings,
Ye unseen messengers?
Or is it sorrow and boding
Of future griefs and cares?

The gate swings slowly, slowly,
And the shutters creak and start;
I sit in a glowing lamp-light,
But a shadow fills my heart.

LYDDY'S TRIUMPH.

I taught a term of district school in a small country hamlet near Mt. Desert two years ago.

The house in which I went to board was one of the most lonesome places imaginable. A low, rambling farm dwelling, surrounded by woods, fields and meadows. No other house was in sight, and the road in each direction lost itself in a dense growth of trees. A turn of the road a quarter of a mile away brought one to the school house, church, half a dozen dwellings and the one store of the place.

The family with which I boarded consisted of Mr. Enoch Blaire, an itinerant preacher, with a fair education, but an inherited dislike of work; his wife, Mary, one of the best women I ever knew, a thorough housewife, with sound, practical common sense, a pure, earnest love of religion, which she expressed in deeds more often than words, and their son, Jem, 17 years of age.

One evening, after I had been a member of the family several weeks, and the strained relations of schoolma'am and boarding mistress had worn away, Mrs. Blaire asked me to bring my books into the kitchen and sit with her. Jem had gone to bed with a toothache, and Enoch was at a revival meeting in the next district. He would not be home until very late and she was going to sit up for him.

I accepted the invitation gladly, for the bright cheerful kitchen was my delight—it was so spotlessly clean and homelike, the pleasantest room in the house. A warm fire added to the cheerfulness, for the fall nights had grown chilly.

Mrs. Blaire "did up" her dishes, brushed the floor, strained the milk, while I looked over the next day's lessons; then we drew our chairs nearer the fire for one of the talks I had grown to enjoy so much.

"What shall we talk about?" said Mrs. Blaire, as she clicked her knitting needles. "Religion?"

This was her favorite theme, and I loved to hear her express her Baptist views of life and death. So I led her to talk, till at length I looked at the clock. It marked 11:30.

"Where can Enoch be?" said Mrs. Blaire, gathering up her work. "He was never so late before."

She arose, went to the window and peered out into the intense darkness, shivered slightly, came back and threw a few more sticks on the fire. We sat some time in silence, watching the sparks fly out through the hearth of the cooking stove.

The old clock in the corner struck the hour of 12 with slow, deliberate strokes.

A sudden breeze sprang up and swung a shutter to with a loud clatter. Then all was fearfully still, when slowly and distinctly from the far distance came a low, musical sound.

Nearer and nearer it came, louder and louder it grew, until the whole room was filled with the sweet melody. It was singing, but singing such as I had never heard before. The words were unintelligible, but the sentiment was of joy and happy rejoicing.

I sat spellbound until the sweet sounds faded away as they had come. I could not tell whether they were within or without overhead or under our feet. The melody was everywhere. It gave me a strange, unexplainable feeling of awe. I turned to look at Mrs. Blaire. Her face was ashen. The lines about her mouth were tightly drawn, and the nervous hand that grasped the back of her chair shook visibly.

A feeling that I could not account for of wishing to shut out the night prompted me to draw the shades close over the black windows and come closer to the warmth and glow of the fire. All this I observed and did before I asked:

Did you hear anything Mrs. Blaire?"

"Yes, I heard," murmured Mrs. Blaire, in scarcely more than a whisper.

"It couldn't have been Jem," I asserted, but to satisfy myself I went to the stairway and listened. I heard only the hard, regular breathing of a heavy sleeper.

"What was it, Mrs. Blaire?" I asked again.

Mrs. Blaire had resumed her accustomed placid expression and said, with a light, reassuring laugh:

"Oh, it was nothing at all. Come, let us go to bed. We will not sit up longer for Enoch. I will come in and sit with you till you go to sleep, if you want me to." I said I was not in the least afraid. But I lay awake for a long time, wondering over the strange scene. I felt sure Mrs. Blaire had a story, and I wanted to hear it.

Though not a believer in spirits, anything supernatural had a strange fascination for me.

Mrs. Blaire and I were left alone again the next evening. As we again drew our chairs up before the crackling fire, my companion said without any introduction:

"My dear, I'm going to tell you a strange story."

I did not speak.

"Twenty years ago my only sister, then a beautiful girl of eighteen, married. Just fifteen months after she and her baby were buried in one coffin. Before my sister died she discovered that her bosom friend, Lyddy Baker, had cared for her John and had hoped to marry him. We all knew John had never shown Lyddy any attention, but she tried to make Sarah think he had—said her life was wrecked and much of that kind of talk. Sarah was sick and nervous and it made her very unhappy, and I have not a doubt that it hastened her death. John was wrapped up in Sarah; any one could see that. He was kindness itself to her. It nearly broke his heart when she died. Bad as I felt myself I felt sorrier for him. It's awful to see a strong man so unstrung. Every one mourned for Sarah but Lyddy. It never seemed to me she cared much.

"Well, one morning, about a year after Sarah died, John came down to breakfast looking so haggard and white that I was frightened. I asked him what was the matter. He shook his head, but when we were alone he told me that he could not sleep the night before, so he got up and lighted his pipe and sat by the open window smoking. There was no light in the room, but the moon had just risen from behind the hills. He felt a presence near him, and, turning, saw Sarah in her grave clothes with the baby in her arms. She came quite near him and said:

"'John, dear, I want you to marry Lyddy,' and then she vanished.

"'Why,' said John to me, 'I can't marry Lyddy; I never can marry any one.'

"That was the beginning of our trouble. After that there was scarcely a night that we did not have some manifestation of Sarah's spirit hovering about us. We all heard strange sounds, rappings, sad music or a baby crying. Neighbors passing the house late at night would tell of seeing a light either in the garret or in the cellar. It was more often in the cellar.

"Once Sarah herself came to me." Mrs. Blair paused and I drew nearer to her, but I could not speak. She went on:

"It was just after sunset one summer evening. Our well in the back yard was low, and I had taken my basket of fine white clothes down to the spring in the meadow to rinse them. You know where the spring is—at the foot of the slope, near the pine grove? It was a lovely evening. The sky was bright with the colors of sunset, but the pines looked dark and lonesome. I remember thinking so as I spread the things on the grass. I had just finished and was taking up my empty basket when, just as plain as I see you this minute, I beheld Sarah and her baby just in the edge of the grove. She waved her arm toward the house and said 'John—Lyddy!' and disappeared.

"Of course, all these things made a great deal of talk in the village, and many wild, exaggerated stories were told.

"For years this state of things continued. Oh, those terrible years! I was never left alone an evening that I did not hear sad music, weird laughter, or see flickering will-o'-the-wisp lights. Steps would come up the walk, but no one come in. The whole town, of course, was in a state of excitement. Some few believed in the spirit. The minister did. Others believed that Lyddia Baker was at the bottom of the whole thing, for every one knew she was possessed to marry John.

"A party of men from the village came one night to investigate. The minister was with them, so we let them in. They began at the garret and went through the house. The minister led the search, and he was standing on the cellar stairs, half way down, and I a little above him, when in the far corner of the dark cellar flashed that curious light. Only for an instant, and though we waited a long time it did not come again.

"The minister came up into the yard and told the others. While they were talking of it in hushed whispers standing in groups about the yard, Sarah appeared, with her baby still held closely in her arms, and glided among the group almost touching them and disappeared as mysteriously as she came.

"This was the last time she ever appeared, but nearly every one believed after that night. Until last night I had heard nothing for several years."

We sat in silence a long while after she had finished. Then I asked:

"Where is John now, and Liddy?"

After that night John went to sea. We did not hear from him till a year ago he returned. He is now master of a large vessel that carries granite from here to New York. We expect him every day. Lyddy never married. She has lived right here. John went to see her when he came home. Everyone except me seems to have forgotten about Sarah's spirit. Lyddy is away somewhere now on a visit.

I thanked her for telling me the story, bade her good-night, and went to bed to dream of this strange romance in real life.

When I came from school a few days later Mrs. Blaire met me at the door greatly excited:

"John has come!" she exclaimed, "and—and Lyddy. They are married—were married the night we heard the music."—N. Y. Advertiser.

Excused in That Case.

The delightfully shrewd answer of the good wife of Prof. Robson, who disliked the cant expressions of the religious tongue of that day. She had invited a gentleman to dinner and he had accepted with the reservation, "If I am spared."

"Weel, weel," said Mrs. Robson, "if ye're dead I'll na expect ye."

PATENTS

procured in the United States and foreign countries. Twenty-five years' experience as solicitors before the Patent Office and as attorneys in patent causes before the courts has given us an extensive practice as experts. We give special attention to cases rejected in other hands, also to interferences, appeals, reissues, trade-marks, the preparation of opinion as to infringement, scope and validity of patents, and the prosecution and defense of suits for infringement. Limiting our practice enables us to carefully study each case and get claims in the original patent as broad as the invention. This is now especially important in view of the difficulty of obtaining a reissue of a defective patent and of maintaining it in the courts after it is obtained. The employment of competent attorneys is important.

Upon receipt of model, sketch or photograph we give our opinion as to patentability free of charge. If favorable, the inventor is advised as to cost of proceeding, etc. Our fees are always reasonable. O, SING AGAIN!

O, sing again! I hear and dream,
For thro' your magic voice there stream
The happy days that once were mine,
With tender hearts and love divine,
As full and rich and sweet in theme.

And in your soulful eyes agleam
With gentle womanhood supreme,
My fancies with your tones entwine,
O, sing again!

Your song is ended, and I seem
To stand upon the world's extreme,
Grasping the tendrils of a vine,
Waiting for dawn to bring a sign,
And thro' my tears such visions teem.
O, sing again!

"WHISTLING DICK."

Pemberton, with his fighting soldiers, was shut up in Vicksburg. Gen. Grant by his masterly strategy had shut him in, and despite the earnest prayers of the "copperheads," matters looked bad for Pemberton. The union forces were splendidly generalled. The hopes of patriotic unionism hung upon the result of the siege.

The sublimity of the nights at Vicksburg was never excelled in the world's history. Admiral Porter's fleet of gunboats and mortar boats above Vicksburg, and Admiral Farragut's fleet below, kept up incessant showers of shell, that, coursing from mortar and gun, marked their fire-lighted tracks as they descended into the city. This awe-inspiring pyrotechnic display, combined with the reverberations of the guns' loud thunder notes from shore to shore, thrilled the beholder. Those present could scarcely believe the scene was on the smiling earth upon which they lived, but more likely a chapter from Dante's "Inferno," cut out and enacted on the new world's stage, with nations instead of individuals as actors.

Late in the evening of the day preceding the storming of Vicksburg a marine battery of two "Columbiads" and two rifle "Dahlgrens," manned with 72 men under the command of Lieut. James C. Petterson of United States steamer Connestoga, one of Admiral Porter's fleet, was sent on shore above the city, to reinforce the siege, and to prepare for the proposed attack.

It was nearly nightfall when this brave party reached the ground on Walnut Hill. Commander Petterson found no platforms, nor any preparations for handling his guns, save a breastwork of baskets filled with mud. He called upon the lieutenant in charge of the sappers and miners, asking that some arrangements be made so that the quarter tackles and recoil tackles could be worked.

The lieutenant in charge, in a spirit born of egotism, replied, "There is no material to make such platforms, and I do not intend to put up a sawmill to cut out such material."

With the sand and the mud, and the guns deeply imbedded in this soft material, it was a poor show for this "Tarry Jack," who is used to solid decks and all the conveniences on shipboard for handling the heavy guns. Still, indomitable courage, pluck and persistency ruled the hour with the marines.

Just at this juncture three officers, in citizen's dress, with the usual muddy attachments, rode up hastily to review the situation.

One of the officers addressed himself to Lieut. Petterson in the following language:

"Who are you, and where are you from?"

"I am Lieut. Petterson of the United States steamer Connestoga, sir, and am sent by Admiral Porter, with these guns which you see before you, and a squad of men, to report to and assist Gen. Grant in the siege. I have been looking for the general, but as yet have been unable to find him."

"You will not have far to look for him, sir," said the officer addressed, "for I am Grant myself."

Gen. Grant then dismounted, and shook Petterson by the hand, saying, "I am glad to see you and your command, and you are in the nick of time if you can get ready to open fire on the enemy at 4 a. m. to-morrow morning."

"I could do as you wish, general," said Petterson, "if I had a platform for my guns."

Gen. Grant then summoned the officer in charge of the sappers and miners, and tersely said, pointing to a house some 300 yards distant, "Lieutenant, you see that house? Use that for the material needed for the platforms for these guns. You are now under Lieut. Petterson's orders. You will do what he commands."

Gen. Grant next turned to Lieut. Petterson, remarking as follows: "We shall assault Fort Clinch in the morning. You will see, I am pointing to the location of the fort." Gen. Grant then gave the most minute directions as to how the firing should commence and be conducted, in conjunction with other operations against the enemy. He then rode away with the other officers.

In the darkness of the night the work under Lieut. Petterson's command went on with rapidity and efficiency. At 4 a. m. the "Columbiads" were in position. Precisely at the hour designated a shrapnel was sent screaming through the air, apparently out of the hillside, into the rebel camp at Fort Clinch.

Then upward rose the rebel yell, and the "Johnnies" no doubt said to themselves, "The Yankees have hauled one of their gunboats up on Walnut Hill."

Shell after shell the big guns sent, shrieking the doom of the besieged city until late in the morning. The cessation of the main assault against the rebel batteries now gave the confederates time to attend to the new Yankee neighbors on Walnut Hill. The sharpshooters and nearby guns of the rebels made it too hot for the gunners of the "Columbiads" and "Dahlgrens." The greatest damage was inflicted by the sharpshooters, who, when a union gunner was exposed through the embrasure, in the act of loading or working the guns, popped at him right and left, until twenty of the little squad were shot down, to rise no more.

Then came the tact of the union sailor. Lieut. Petterson erected posts at the side of the embrasure, and on them he placed tackles with which to hoist a shield made of heavy manilla rope, which covered the opening, and was hoisted only when the gun was ready for discharge. Under this cover he worked more effectually.

At this time at a slight distance could be seen three union officers approaching on horseback. As they approached the post they proved to be the three who visited Lieutenant Petterson the night before, namely, Gen. Grant, Gen. Sherman, and Gen. Goodrich.

Gen. Grant quietly said: "Petterson, I thank you for the effective service of your squad. There is one more matter I wish you could accomplish, that is, to silence 'Whistling Dick.'" "Whistling Dick" (a big Whitworth gun) was the most formidable gun at Fort Clinch. It was supplied with a redoubt, constructed with a line of stockade on four sides, about 80 feet square, three rows of cotton bales on end inside of that, next a row of piling still further inside, and finally protected by an embankment of earth on the outer and the inner side. In the centre, operating on the same circle as on shipboard, stood "Whistling Dick," whose breech was not more than five or six inches above the level parapet. Thus the big gun presented but a small mark for the gunners' aim.

"Do you think, Petterson, you can silence 'Whistling Dick?'" says Gen. Grant.

"I think, sir, it can be done," answered Petterson, "and I have a gunner who can accomplish it if I cannot myself."

"Where is he?" said Gen. Grant.

"There he is?" said Petterson, pointing to Lee of Rochester, N. Y., who, though of slight build, was agile as a cat, and had an eye like an eagle.

Grant approached Lee. The latter, answering some queries of Gen. Grant, said: "General, that gun has used our boys badly, and I am going to try to kill it, sure as Hades."

Gen. Grant smiled at the impulsive declaration of the sailor.

Lee then turned to Lieut. Petterson, saying, "How far do you estimate the distance from here to 'Whistling Dick'?"

"About 750 yards," said Petterson.

Lee then cut the fuse of a shrapnel, and Petterson arranged for a sight. Gen. Grant handed Petterson his field glass. The latter took a good sight, and, turning to Lee, remarked: "About two degrees will reach 'Whistling Dick.' Let the rebels have the shot."

Away flew the shrapnel. It grazed the top of the redoubt, a little to the left of "Whistling Dick," but burst close to the breach, making sad havoc with men and material.

Petterson now suggested that by waiting a few moments the rebels would arrange matters so that "Whistling Dick would be turned on the Union forces, and thus expose its full muzzle and length to the breach.

"A good suggestion," said Lee.

"Whistling Dick's" gunners soon recovered from their astonishment, and swung the giant around, as suggested by Petterson, to pay back, with interest if possible, the insults he had received from the Union forces.

"Unlucky Dick!" Before he could send his defiance by word of mouth, the Columbiad had sent a shell on its way that tore off "Whistling Dick's" muzzle, split his throat clear to the breach, and stood him on his butt in sight of both armies.

What a thunderstorm of lusty cheers went up from the Union forces at the sight of that glorious achievement. Gen. Grant sprung from his horse and threw both arms around Gunner Lee, saying, "If I had a gold watch and chain about me I would present it to you now."

Lee, who was blushing like a schoolgirl, stammered out, "I believe, Gen. Grant, I would accept it, I am so glad that 'Whistling Dick' is dead." Shaking hands with Lieut. Petterson most heartily, Gen. Grant rode away, happy in the death of "Whistling Dick." Lieut. Petterson served in the navy until the war closed, and now resides in Pensacola, Fla. It is to be hoped that Lee is still living, to enjoy the memories of the day when he helped to kill "Whistling Dick."—American Cultivator.

The Convict's Baby.

Early one morning a knock was heard at the big door of the Fulton county jail. Jailer Miller opened the door and a ragged man came in. There was a haggard look on the fellow's face. It was Jim Wesson, the moonshiner who escaped from the Fulton county jail a week before to go home and see his sick baby. "I'm sorry, Mr. Miller," he said in a broken voice, "I hope you an' Cap'n Morrow don't care, but I heard the baby—." He stopped a moment, until his lip quit quivering so, and then went on: "I heard the baby was sick, and I thought about the wife watchin' of it at home, and I just had to go. I was sorry, an' I wrote you I'd come back. An' I done it. They done buried the baby, an' I come back, an' I hope you ain't mad."

Capt. Miller did not—could not utter a word of reproach. "I'm glad you've come back, Jim," he said.

Cannot Be Drowned.

Fish are drowned when taken from the water into the air, and animals when put even for a short time under water, but the axolotl cannot be drowned anywhere. Yet he is nowhere safe, for the inhabitants of the place where he is found—Mexico, New Mexico and Texas—think that his flesh is very good to eat, and catch great numbers of the axolotl for food, which they cook in various ways.

"TAD" LINCOLN.

The Old Comedian's Reminiscence of That Fatal Night in Washington.

A veteran and well known comedian recently related a strange sort of story to a small circle of friends who had gathered around him in the corridor of an up-Broadway hotel. The New York World will "violate no confidence" in repeating the substance of it, withholding the name of the narrator.

"I knew the Lincolns and well remember that night of the 14th of April when the president was shot. I was the leading comedian of a combination that was playing a burlesque on 'Aladdin and His Lamp' at one of the Washington theaters during the fatal week. Little 'Tad' Lincoln was a privileged character around the stage, and everyone connected with it, from manager to call boy, liked him, and felt lonesome if he missed an evening. The property man and scene painter had made for him a miniature stage in the White house, with a correct small edition of the stock sets of scenery and properties.

"The president did not try to discourage the boy's zeal for the drama, and if our national history had been destined to tell of brighter days than it does for the Lincolns, perhaps 'Tad' would have been to-day upon our stage—doubtless playing comedy, for that was his delight. In him the stage might have had a recruit from the ranks of genuine heart-and-brain royalty.

"There was a scene in our burlesque where a property baloon made an ascension, and the comic servant—my own character—got caught accidentally in this baloon and carried into the flies, suddenly becoming loosened and falling or tumbling headlong upon the stage. So you see 'athletic comedians' were not originated at our Casino.

"Well, 'Tad' thought this act very amusing, and he furnished much diversion between acts, and during waits for the company and stage hands by rehearsing it himself behind the scenes.

"He was on the stage the night his father was shot, and was watching me do this very act, when a messenger rushed upon the scene with pallid face and trembling with terror. The boy did not look at him, but was intent upon the play. The messenger spoke to him in a frightened whisper, asking him to follow him instantly, that a carriage was in waiting to take him to his father, who was waiting for him.

"'But father is at the theater to see Miss Keene,' returned 'Tad.' We were all listening then, for we felt that something serious had happened. The scene stopped.

"'But, my poor boy, Mr. Lincoln has been shot,' gasped the miserable messenger.

"The young fellow glanced around at us all for a mute instant, to see if he had heard aright, then dashed off like lightning, and in a moment more the carriage went thundering away to the president's improvised quarters. More than one honest tear was shed on that dismal stage and the heartaches were genuine and as much for little 'Tad' as for the great loss to the nation.

"Someone had whispered the news to our audience and the performance, of course, was not finished. A panic could not have cleared the house more promptly.

"We did not open again for many weary weeks. Nobody had time or inclination for the theater in those high-tension days. Washington was one great, prolonged tragedy—every phase of its life was dramatic and tense."

The actor was wrought to a tension, too, in relating his story, and after some sighs and cigar puffs concluded:

"Yes, I knew John Booth—knew him for years. Warmest-hearted friend a man ever had, but a fanatic.

"I met him a few days before the shooting on the street and we smoked a cigar together and had a beer. He was the same genial, hearty fellow that I had known for years—wished everybody well, but didn't like those who crossed him in political opinions.

"My friend —— was the leader of the orchestra at Ford's. He had been under the stage and, hearing shouts, started upstairs to see what was wrong. Going upon the stage, he bumped against Booth, who was running away, after his crime. He recognized him and said: 'Hello, John what's the matter?' 'Out of my way ——you,' returned Booth, slashing him with an ugly knife, cutting his coat and vest almost off of him with the stroke and inflicting an ugly flesh cut."

From Bad to Worse.

A lady whose Christian name was Jane, and whose little daughter was named after her, engaged a housekeeper who was also a Jane.

Thinking that three Janes in one household might occasion confusion, the lady said to the new-comer, who was a tall, angular woman with a rigid air and an uncompromising cast of countenance, "I think, Jane, it will be better for me to call you by your last name, if you have no objection."

"No'm. I have no objections," answered the housekeeper, standing stiffly erect, valise in hand. "Call me 'Darling,' ma'am, if you prefer. That's my name!"

His Salary Doubled.

Armellini, the banker, a notorious miser, entered the office and very carefully went through all the work done by his youngest clerk. He was perfectly satisfied and said to the young man: "What salary do you get from my firm?"

"Up to the present, nothing, signor."

"Very good. From the first of next month I will see that it is doubled."—Popolo Romano.

WHAT A CAKE WALK IS.

An Institution of Slavery That Is Very Popular.

The cake walk is one of the institutions of slavery, which has survived the emancipation proclamation.

The evolution of the cake walk is an interesting study, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. It is closely allied to the coonjine, buzzard lope and Mobile buck dances, which are in turn related to the South Sea island hulahula dances, and more remotely, perhaps, to the South American coombiamba. All these are exhibitions in movement and gesture of human emotion, and necessarily are rude and barbarous, but wonderfully fascinating. The cake walk is the highest type of these forms of amusement. It is easy to see how the idea of walking for a cake impressed the imaginative brain of a colored person and caused it to become what it is to-day.

As nearly as can be learned—for cake walking has no literature—the custom originated in the lowly cabins of the colored people in ante-bellum days. It was customary for the slaves to dance a homely sort of square dance somewhat resembling a quadrille, but not so involved nor intricate. There was a time in this dance when every participant walked around in a circle. At first the men and women alone, but in time they began to walk in couples. The reward was a hoecake, baked in the hot coals of the hearth and wrapped in a cabbage leaf. This was given to the successful male, while the victorious female was presented with the first piece of molasses candy pulled from a batch made for that purpose.

Cake walking has been for upward of fifty years a popular amusement. When slavery was abolished it was carried into the northern states, more particularly to New York. The first cake walk that is known to have taken place north of Mason and Dixon's line occurred in Turner's hall, in Brooklyn, in 1866. It was conducted by a man named Dobbins, who still lives in Vanderbilt avenue and is 80 years old.

A cake walk was such a novelty at that time that spectators came from twenty miles around the country to see it, and there was such a crowd that half the people were turned away.

For many years the colored people had cake walks at long intervals, which were witnessed by very few white men. They usually took place, fifteen or twenty years ago, as an adjunct to a fair held in the aid of an African church.

The next step in the progress of cake walking evolution was its introduction at summer and seaside resorts by the colored waiters in the hotels. There are very few of the big summer hotels in the United States but have their annual cake walks at the close of the season.

The purpose of the cattlemen's convention, which has been in session as Ogden, Utah, is to unite all stock grower's associations that exist at present in the different states and territories into one association, with head quarters at Ogden.

Ever since the burning of the negro Coy at Texarkana, Ark., the negroes have been leaving the state, and nearly all threaten to leave and go to Africa. Planters have become greatly alarmed over the condition of their farms resulting from this exodus.

HOME-MADE ELECTRICITY.

Our Heating Stoves as Generators of Light as Well as Heat.

A French chemist who has been giving considerable attention to the problem of heating and lighting from a single source, has devised a novel stove, which in appearance resembles an ordinary heating stove. It is so arranged internally that the waste heat is utilized for the generation of electricity. This is secured by a number of rectangular boxes of sheet-iron, containing the necessary metallic elements for furnishing the current. These elements are insulated by asbestos, and the cooling is effected partly by the shape in which the metallic alloys are cast and partly by a circulation of air.

The current obtained is not great in amount, but the results of this attempt seems to be favorable. Accumulators are used for storing up the electricity, and as the heating is required for a much longer period than for lighting, the electrical energy, which would be lost during the hours of daylight, is saved. A point of considerable moment is that the heat utilized in this way is waste heat, so that any portion that can be recovered in the form of electricity is so much gain.—Philadelphia Record.

TRUE TO ITS RECORD.

New York Press:—It is impossible to overcome the plundering propensities of the Democratic party. They are as characteristic to the party as its hostility to American industry and its hatred of honest elections. The House of Representatives has not in a quarter of a century had a Democratic majority that did not prove itself as rapacious as it was incompetent. The present majority signally illustrates this rule. It has been niggardly where the honor and security of the nation demanded liberal appropriations. It has been recklessly extravagant where the public welfare demanded prudence and discrimination. Its members began the session with loud denunciations of the "billion dollar" Fifty-first Congress. The sum appropriated at the first session of the Republican Fifty-first Congress, including a deficiency appropriation of many millions made necessary by Democratic mismanagement, was $463,398,510.79. The sum which will be appropriated at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, according to Democratic estimates, is $486,804,679.82. It may be considerably in excess of this amount.

The River and Harbor bill passed by the Fifty-first House carried $19,973,945. The River and Harbor bill of the present House of Representatives appropriates $21,346,975 outright, and provides for the expenditure of $26,702,321 more in the future. Ex-Speaker Reed has shown that "Watch Dog" Holman, who opposed the addition of a single cruiser to the United States Navy on the ground of "economy," had procured the insertion of an absolutely unnecessary appropriation of $130,000 for his own district. His example has been followed by nearly every Democratic representative.

In view of these facts it is no wonder that one New York Democratic organ frantically shrieks "halt!" while another yells "danger! danger!" and stigmatizes the dominant Democratic faction in the House as fools and traitors. In order to make the great Democratic bunco game a success this fall it was necessary that the Democrats in congress should make a record of economy. But the old Democratic instincts were too strong. Prudence and patriotism have alike been thrown to the winds. A concerted attempt has been made to cripple the navy by refusing needful appropriations. The Fortifications bill, which in the last congress, carried $4,232,955, has been pared down to $2,412,376. The moderate salaries of the consular representatives of the United States abroad have been disgracefully reduced. In their wild desire to pose as economists, and at the same time to get their hands in the United States treasury, Holman and his fellows even struck out the customary appropriation for supplying the West Point cadets with soap.

Yet expenditures have steadily increased; and everything indicates that the appropriations of the Fifty-second House will exceed those of the Fifty-first House by a large amount. The Republican policy is to make liberal appropriations for public improvements that will benefit the whole nation. The Democratic practice, as shown by the present House, is that of joining in a general conspiracy of plunder for private purposes.

THE DOUBLE DEALING of their government in treating the questions arsing between it and the United States is not unnoticed by the Liberals in Canada. When the conference took place between Mr. Blaine and the commissioners representing Canada it was understood that the arrangement of the latter was submitted simply to make a record, though it was not expected that the government would in its own Parliament be charged with deceit in so doing; but the recent tabling by the conservative majority at Ottawa of a motion to censure the government for sending a report of the conference to London before it was submitted to the Dominion Parliament afforded the Liberals a chance and in the debate that ensued they handled the subject without gloves. Sir John Thompson was told very plainly that the sole object of his commission in Washington was to aid the conservatives in the by-elections. That they knew that the offer to exchange fishing priviliges would amount to nothing, and, that unless the Dominion market was opened to American manufacturers, the United States would have no inducement to remove the tariff restrictions from Canadian products. In spite of this knowlege and without any intention to offer the United States in return for a free market for fish anything that would be at all compensatory, the government hoodwinked the Canadian people into the belief that the Washington authorities would open American markets for nothing and had done so solely to further its own political ends. The arraignment was a telling one, the more so when coupled with the resolution passed by the same conservative majority, offering to Great Britain the reciprocity which it refused to grant the United States, that is to admit British manufacturers free of duty if England would admit Canadian food products free, while impossing duties on competitive products from other countries. For nothing more utterly absurd than the belief which the resolution implies, that England would accept any arrangement that would give Canada a monopoly of the food supply of the United Kingdom in return for the meagre market for manufacturers which Canada affords, can well be conceived. At present the competition of American and Dominion breadstuffs cheapens food for the English people, and the only result of cutting off the American supply by prohibitive duties would be to raise the price of bread and to lose the trade of a country of far more value to England in a day than that of Canada is in a week. The fact is that with the inevitable transfer of political power in England from the aristocracy to the common people, the retention of Canada will become of little moment, and all of her professions of loyalty will not enable her, when left practically to herself, to resist the force of economic gravitation toward the United States. Even the consecrative papers see this fact and they admit that with the steady increase of federal and provincial indebtedness, and the failure of immigration to even replace the Canadians who find homes on this side of the border, a situation is fast being reached from which an annexation affords the only ptacticable way out.

COME TO THINK of it, it strikes us that there is somewhat of hypocricy disguised under the cloak of Christianity. When you see a man continually worrying over the sins of his fellowman, spending his time in the vain endeavor to remove the mote from his neighbor's eye, but never examining himself to see if possibly a beam is not in his own eye, you can safely calculate that there is a good bit of hypocrisy in that man's nature. That is not Christianity. Christianity is broader and deeper. It seeks to correct the evils of humanity not to broaden and deepen—to gloat over them. The real difference between a true Christian and other people is that the former sees his own imperfections and strives to overcome them, strives so to live that the world may be the better for his having lived and he does not rely upon his inherent goodness at all, but after he has done what he could to correct the evils of his natnre he relies upon Christ, the great exemplar, for justification. The mere fact that a man's name appears upon some church roll does not make that man a Christian. Christianity is a living truth—a something outside of man himself and these are not so good as to be capable of being judges of our fellowmen.

THE FISHER BULLETIN entered upon the twelfth year of its existence last week. The Bulletin was founded by Alvah Dewey, a veteran newspaper man, who sold to Dr. Lankester, who in turn sold to C. C. Knappen, who pitched it into the maw of the newspaper octopus at Grand Forks—and that did pretty near finish it, but by luck or by chance Doc. Rutledge was called into the case, and being an excellent nurse in such cases he resurrected the corpus, breathed the breath of life into its defuncted frame and by sheer pluck and muscle has kept 'er going and now the Bulletin—if not the best local paper in Polk County, is one of 'em. Doc. never misses a local event nor a show in Crookston.

H. E. MUSSEY went down to St. Paul Wednesday evening to arrange for a new outfit for the Thief River Falls Press. H. E. has been making an excellent local paper with the facilities he has had, but he finds that in order to keep ahead of his thriving village he has got to have a faster press, so he is going to put in a power press and add to the material in his office. He will also associate with him in the business Paul S. Ware, an all around good newspaper man, and if the Press is not a humming success from this on the people of Thief River Falls themselves will be to blame. The boys know how to do their part.

THE COUNCIL will consider the question of gravelling streets at its meeting this evening, and, in the absence of funds, it will depend upon the lot owners themselves to carry forward the work. It is a work that should be done, for there is nothing like good streets to attract people to our city to say nothing of the comfort and health of our own citizens. If we have public spirit the work can be accomplished.

WITH THIS issue the JOURNAL dons its new dress of self-spacing body type and greets its readers with a bright, clean face. Just as soon as we can arrange our list for our new mailer the addresses will be printed on each paper and the time to which each subscription is paid, so that our readers can see the date to which their subscription is paid. We now have facilities for handling 10,000 names each week and should like to see such a list.

GOVERNOR BURKE of North Dakota has issued a proclamation calling a special session of the legislature of that state to convene June 1st, the object being to correct an omission in the Australian election law, which did not provide for the choosing of presidential electors, and also to increase the World's Fair appropriation from $25,000 to $50,000.

ONE OF THE great needs of this city to-day is an opportunity to obtain money on city property with which to build. The JOURNAL knows of several parties who would build good substantial buildings could they obtain the necessary money at a reasonable rate.

Lac Qui Parle County Press:—"To say to a newspaper, let politics alone, is like telling a duck to keep out of water. They cannot keep out when there is water to get into and a newspaper cannot stay out of politics so long as there is anything like politics to take part in. Newspapers should go into politics, but the editor should always aim to be just, fair and honorable in the discussion of men and measures."

Warren Register:—We hear that there is a strong probability of Wm. Watts, of Crookston, being the Alliance nominee for judge of this judicial district at the ensuing election. Mr. Watts is an able man and a good lawyer, and no one who knows him will question his fitness for the position.

A Wildcat Chase.

A highly exciting wild cat chase took place at Will's Cove about three miles southwest of Livingston, W. Va. The cat, which was of gigantic proportions, was seen about 9 o.clock in the morning by Mrs. Gabriel Johnson and her two daughters, and they immediately set three large greyhounds on it. The animal ran for some distance, but was finally treed by the dogs, and one of the ladies summoned up the courage to get a double-barrelled gun and fire at the monster. Her bravery was repaid by the sight of the animal falling dead from the tree at the first report of the gun. The ladies are proud of their success.

Seven Wonders of America.

he seven wonders of America are classed as follows: Niagara Falls, Yellowstone park, Mammoth Cave, the Canyons and Garden of the Gods, Colorado; the giant trees, California; the natural bridge, Virginia, and the Yosemite Valley.

A Big Ferry on Lake Michigan.

A marine experiment of great importance to Milwaukee is announced. The Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern Michigan railroad is about to build a large ferry steamer to test the feasibility of carrying trains of cars across Lake Michigan from Kewaunee to Frankfort. The new steamer will cost a quarter of a million of dollars, and will be large enough to carry forty freight cars, and she is to be fast enough to make the runs across the lake between the points named in about five hours. The distance is sixty miles.

The ferrying of cars in this manner will result in a great saving, as it costs from six to twelve dollars a car to make the transfer of freight from the cars to the steamers, and besides, the loss through breakage incident to such transfers will be prevented. It is thought the experiment will prove successful, as freight trains have been thus transferred for years between Cape Charles City and Newport News, a distance of forty miles, across the mouth of Chesapeake bay, where the water is sometimes very turbulent.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

An Imperial Chemist.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte has bequeathed to England his precious collection of mineral and chemical products. This collection contains specimens of the very greatest value on account of their rarity, among these being pieces of gold and platinum which are absolutely pure.

But the gems of the collections are two specimens of those exceedingly rare metals—irridium and germanium. The former, which is worth three times the price of platinum, is as large as a horse chestnut. As to the piece of germanium, although smaller in size, its enormous value will be understood when one reflects that it is worth sixty times its weight in gold.

The whole collection was prepared in the prince's laboratory, he making the most difficult experiments with his own hands, for he was one of the most distinguished chemists of the day. It is interesting to note that his chief and almost his only assistant in his chemical researches was his wife, the princess.—New York Herald.

LEVEES BREAKING

A Disastrous Crevasse Opened a Few Miles Above the City of New Orleans.

The Greater Portion of St Charles Parish Will Be Flooded Thereby.

The Lower Portion of New Orleans Will Be Overflowed by the Back Water.

NEW ORLEANS, May 17.—At 2 o'clock a. m. Bonnett Carre levee, thirty-three miles from the city, gave way and indications are that a most disastrous crevasse will be the result. From the best information received so far, the break is is in the Bonnett Carre levee and in the extreme end of St. Charles parish, about thirty miles above the city. The crevasse is 100 feet wide and was washing at a rate that means a width of 400 feet in a few hours. The depth of the levee is seven feet. Major Richardson, chief state engineer, states that the water will flood a great portion of St. Charles parish in its course to Lake Pontchartrain. The city will be affected, as the water will fill Lake Pontchartrain and will back up into the basins, which means an overflow of the rear portion of the city.

THE HIGH WATER.

A Bad Break in the Mississippi Near East St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—Near East St. Louis a break was made in the embankment of the Cologne railroad, a local company. This caused a torrent to pour through, flooding farming lands to the extent of fifteen by three miles. The water did not enter the main part of East St. Louis but flooded some of the outlying suburbs. The East St. Louis Jockey Club track is under ten feet of water, and considerable difficulty was experienced in saving a number of horses, so sudden was the rush of the water.

Venice, a small village north of East St. Louis, is flooded. The inhabitants have threatened to cut the levee which protects Brooklyn, another village, so that the water may run off through that town. An armed guard of fifty men is on the embankment guarding the levee.

Shortly after 2 o'clock a dwelling came down the stream with a rush and struck one of the abutments of the Merchants' bridge. It was cut in two as neatly as if the work had been done with a circular saw. The bridge is being subjected to a tremendous strain from an incessant bombardment of heavy debris, trees, logs and other flotsam and jetsam brought down by the great flood from remote points. At 3 o'clock the body of a white man, hatless and coatless, passed through the arch. It was feet upward and much distended, and had evidently travelled a long distance. Only a few hundred feet below this ghastly object a pretty bureau with dainty lace trimming, soiled and bedraggled, rushed past, with a huge black cat curled up on its top, seemingly heedless of all dangers attendant upon its unaccustomed mode of transportation.

The tracks of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy from the water works northward, that were free of water Saturday, are now submerged, and skiffs can easily cross them. The water brought down by the sewers and culverts is backed up west of the Wabash track to John avenue.

IMMENSE OVERFLOW EXPECTED

Entire Missouri Valley in Danger from the June Rise.

KANSAS CITY, May 17.—All day long the river has risen slowly until late in the afternoon, when it stood at one stage for about an hour and then slowly receded. The water is now within a few feet of the high water of 1844, and it will be impossible for it to run down below the danger line before the arrival of the June rise, which will send the swelling tide over the entire bottom land of the Missouri valley. The June rise, which comes from the melting snows of the mountains, has already started, and will reach this point in less than fifteen days. Under normal conditions, when the waters are low, the June rise goes out of the banks, and with the stage that of necessity must exist in fifteen days from now there will be an overflow which bids fair to surpass all others.

HOUSES SWEPT AWAY.

Great Damage Being Done in Kansas by High Water.

KANSAS CITY, May 16.—A great, dark, rapidly moving mass—such is the Missouri as it pours in relentless force toward the ocean. Immense cottonwood trees, those monarchs of the lowlands, are borne down the stream while thousands upon thousands of smaller logs float on the moving bed. Here and there a house or barn appears torn and dismantled, and amid the debris are numberless bodies of hogs, cattle and horses. Dozens of families in Armourdale and Argentine have lost their homes. Many stories of narrow escapes are told. Miles north and east of this city the fields and farms on the bottom lands are under water and all work on them has been stopped. It rained again during the afternoon and is still cloudy and threatening while reports from Kansas and Nebraska indicate that it is still ready to rain at any moment in both states. From the Kansas river country come reports of high water and in that region it is higher than it has been for twelve years and is going higher. The Union Pacific bridges at Perryville and Rossville, Kan., are said to be in danger and may go down at any minute. At Lawrence, Kan., another foot will do incalculable damage. The water is now running under the Union Pacific track

WRECKED AT SEA.

Another Frightful Disaster Reported to Have Occurred on the Caspian Sea.

The Steamship Alexander Wolkow Said to Have Gone Down with 250 Passengers.

A General Opinion That There Is Carelessness in the Inspection of Vessels on That Sea.

ODESSA, May 18.—Another frightful accident is said to have occurred on the Caspian sea. A report has been received at Astrakan that the steamer Alexander Wolkow, carrying passengers between Caspian ports, has foundered with 250 passengers on board. This, following a recent accident, attended by almost equal loss of life, a few weeks ago, has caused much excitement in Caspian ports, and there is a general opinion that the Russian authorities do not attend with due vigilance to the inspection of steamships in those waters. Most of the steamers on the Caspian are poorly built and not calculated for enduring the sudden and severe storms which occasionally sweep over that inland sea. It is believed that this latest disaster, should the report of the awful fatality be confirmed, will lead to a general overhauling of the steam and sailing craft on the Caspian.

THE MOGUL EXPLODED.

Two Railroad Men Killed and One Fatally Injured.

DEADWOOD, May 18.—A Burlington freight engine of the mogul type, weighing sixty-five tons, exploded, killing Engineer Rhinehard and Fireman Wilson, and fatally injuring Head Brakeman Nelson, who was riding in the cab. The explosion occurred while the train was running at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour. What caused the accident is a mystery, as the engine was equipped with safety appliances of all kinds. Remnants of the boiler were found 300 yards distant from the scene of the explosion.

Found Below the Falls.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., May 18.—The body of a woman was found in an eddy on the Canadian side below the carriage suspension bridge. The body was taken out and found to be that of a woman about 30 years of age, five feet one or two inches, weighing about 130 pounds, long, jet black hair, dark complexion, round face. On the third finger of the left hand was a plain gold ring with the inscription "Tout D'Vous Toujours." The body was nude with the exceptions of the black stockings and fine buttoned shoes.

STRUCK BY A WATERSPOUT.

Pierre, S. D., Visited by a Deluge That Does Much Damage.

PIERRE, S. D., May 18.—A water spout burst here Monday evening, deluging the lower part of the city. Fences were washed away and great gaps in the streets were made. The passenger train arrived here at midnight, led by a hand car.

A Lumberman Missing.

BLACK RIVER FALLS, Wis., May 17.—J. W. Taft, of Millston, a lumberman of considerable means, has disappeared and his whereabouts is a mystery. He left his home two weeks ago with the intention of making a short business trip, and since then he has not been heard from. It is believed that he has either met with foul play, or, crazed by great grief, caused by the recent death of his only child, has wandered away from friends.

Twenty Thousand Short.

CHAMPAIGN, Ills., May 18.—Morton Dunlap is still missing, though every possible effort to find him has been made. It is feared that he has either been the victim of foul play or has put an end to his own life in some mysterious manner. Many of his friends pin their hopes for his safety to the belief that he may have gone to visit his brother, H. J. Dunlap, United States consul at Furth, Bavaria. Dunlap's defalcation is now alleged to amount to upwards of twenty thousand dollars.

One Killed and Two Injured.

NEWCASTLE, Wy., May 18.—The engine on a west bound freight train on the Union Pacific blew up fifteen miles east of here. Fireman Rinehart was instantly killed and Engineer James Wilson was injured internally and bruised about the head and will probably die. Brakeman Arthur Woodbury was badly injured but may recover. The boiler was thrown 350 feet while the trucks remained on the track.

Keeley Must Take Out License.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 18.—The authorities of Leavenworth, Kan., are taking steps to charge Dr. Keeley a license for a dram shop, on the ground that he gives whisky to patients undergoing treatment. For a stipulated sum they got treatment and whatever whisky is needed. It is said that Dr. Keeley will fight the case.

One Rescued Alive.

BUTTE, Mon., May 18.—Frank Agazza, one of the entombed miners of the Anaconda, has been rescued. He has been confined in a space four feet by two feet since Saturday at 3 o'clock, but escaped without injury. There are still five men under the great mass of rock, but no hope is entertained that any of them are alive.

Annexation Inevitable.

VICTORIA, B. C., May 18.—P. D. Higgs, editor of the Charlestown, P.E.I., Guardian, has just returned from Honolulu and expresses the opinion that in less than a year from the present time the stars and stripes will be floating over the Hawaiian kingdom, as political signs on the island all point that way.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Two Cases Involving the Title to Valuable Property Decided.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—A case involving the title to a tract of land in the city of Tacoma, Wash., valued at three-fourths of a million dollars, has just been decided by a decision announced by Justice Brewer in the supreme court of the United States. Maria J. Galliher claimed title under a homestead entry made by Silas Galliher, her husband, Aug. 10, 1872; he died April 18, 1873, and his entry was cancelled Dec. 4, 1879, for want of final proof within the statutory seven years. Under an act passed June 15, 1880, Mrs. Galliher applied for the land in question, but her application was rejected. H. P. Caldwell entered the land Dec. 20, 1881, and in April, 1882, received a patent therefor. The supreme court held that Mrs. Galliher had no equity of title to the land and confirmed Caldwell's title.

Justice Field delivered the opinion of of the court in the case of Mary Borden, appellant, vs. the Northern Pacific Railroad company, involving a large amount of valuable property in Wisconsin, which the railroad property claimed belonged to it under the act granting it lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line. The land involved was claimed by the railroad company on the ground that entries of previous settlers had been cancelled and the land restored to the public domain. The court holds, however, that the cancellation did not have the effect of bringing the land under the operations of the grant to the Northern Pacific company; it simply restored the land to the mass of public lands, to be dealt subsequently in the same manner as any other public lands of the United States. The court decided that Mary Borden is the lawful possessor of the land and reverses the case.

The case of J. H. Meagher vs. the Minnesota Threshing company, in which H. G. Stone was attorney for the plaintiff and Senator Davis for the thresher company, has been decided in favor of the company, the supreme court holding that it had no jurisdiction in the appeal which came up from the supreme court of Minnesota.

A Job for Evans.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—It has leaked out that the position of special assistant United States district attorney for the State of Minnesota, with a salary of $4,000 a year, has been tendered to Robert G. Evans, of Minneapolis, and that the appointment has been made by the president through the department of justice. Mr. Evans has accepted the appointment and has already entered upon his duties.

NUGGETS OF NEWS.

Matters of Minor Importance Given Brief Mention.

The reports in Chicago that Daniel Coughlin is critically ill are stated by the prison officials to be untrue.

The London Graphic calls upon parliament to give Newfoundland a wholesale lesson, and says that any further irresolution on the part of the English government will be regarded as weakness.

Kate Marston, who is organizing a leper colony at Vilioosik, a town of Eastern Siberia, has left for the United States, where she will devote herself to raising funds for the establishment of the colony.

"Hanny" Dobbs, the noted bank burglar and crony of "Red" Leary, George Wilkes and "Big Slim" Thompson, is dead in New York. He had just been released from the penitentiary. Dobbs was one of the most noted and desperate criminals in the United States.

Miss Hannah Cordeck, a young woman of good family, was assaulted by Albert Windle in the compartment of a train on the Manchester, Sheffield and Linshire railway. When Windle was taken to jail at East Retford a crowd of men and boys pressed close to the policemen and threatened to take him away and drag him through the streets.

The boxing contest between George Godfrey and Joe Lannon at the Coney Island Athletic Monday night was awarded to Godfrey at the end of the fourth round. Lannon's seconds claimed the fight by a foul and refused to allow their man to go out for another round. The referee, however, would not allow the claim and gave the fight to Godfrey.

RATHER A RAPID RUN

A PACE THAT MORE THAN PLEASED AN IRATE RAILROAD MAN.

President Ives Didn't Like the Speed, and When the Engineer "Pulled Her Open" Things Flew—When the Train Struck a Bridge That Structure Moved.

Three or four years ago President Ives, of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroad, was coming down the road in his special after an inspection tour to Sioux Falls. Chief Engineer White, General Passenger Agent Hannegan, General Freight Agent Utt and the president's son Charlie, who has now become general freight agent, were among those on the old special car No. 101. The equipment of the road was not in as good condition then as now, but President Ives believed it was a better roadbed than the New York Central had. He would pin his faith to that any time, and nobody connected with the road ever thought of differing with the "old man."

Now, between Livermore and Goldfield there is a good long stretch of straight track which swings off in a sharp bend at Goldfield, just as the bridge over Boone river is reached. The Boone is not a large stream anywhere, and up here near its headwaters it is a pretty small waterway to be called a river. Still, it is big enough to have a bridge over it, and that is something. All the way down the party had been sitting in the cozy little office at the end of the car looking out over the track, spinning yarns and smoking, and every little while President Ives would growl out something about the slow time the train was making.

At last, when Livermore was reached and a stop made to take water, he said to his son, "Charlie, go ahead and tell the engineer to pull her wide open; I'm getting tired of this slow time." Charlie obeyed with cheerful alacrity. No message ever lost any of its redundant accessories when he carried it, so he went up to the engine and yelled: "Dave, the old man says he wants you to pull her wide open, or he'll raise ——. If you're afraid to run the train, he'll come up himself."

"Oh, he will, will he?" replied old Funk.

RAPID TRAVELING.

When the train started there was a jolt that nearly cracked the coupling pins, and Livermore was out of sight in about a minute. Before the train had gone two miles General Passenger Agent Hannegan said, "That's a deuced big herd of cattle grazing over there." The fact was that there were several herds of cattle, but the velocity of the train merged them into one. The farmhouses, which were never nearer than a mile apart, began to look like a row of city flats.

All this time the inmates of the special were being tossed about the car like a dollar in a basket. Engineer White had his watch in his hand and was vainly trying to count the telegraph poles so as to gauge the speed of the train. General Passenger Agent Hannegan was hanging on to a window sill with both hands, and General Freight Agent Utt had backed his chair up in a corner so that he could not be hurled to the floor.

President Ives sat in his chair in the middle of the floor, his feet well spread out, so as to guard against the sudden and terrific jolts, his hands grasping the sides of the chair, his teeth set and his face pale. He was riding about twenty miles an hour faster than he wanted to, but he wouldn't own up, and he was prepared to die rather than acknowledge by sign or word that it wasn't the smoothest roadbed he had ever ridden over.

In the meantime the car rolled from side to side, jumped clear of the track and then settled down again as though it was going right through to China. It was wonderful how it ever kept the rails, but it did.

THE BRIDGE MOVED SEVEN INCHES.

When the train began drawing near Boone river everybody drew a sigh of relief, thinking Funk would surely slow up for the bridge. But he didn't. In fact, he seemed to give the lever an extra notch or two, and all of a sudden the bend and the bridge were struck. There was a fearful jar that seemed to tear the car apart. President Ives keeled over in his chair and landed on Passenger Agent Hannegan. General Freight Agent Utt, who was thrown into a corner, lay still and drew on the resources of a choice and rich vocabulary of profanity. Chief Engineer White and Charlie Ives were inextricably mixed up, but the chief engineer was the first to unravel himself, and, grabbing the bell cord, pulled it like a man who has come home from the club at 2 a. m. and finds the door bell won't respond.

"I'll bet that bridge has been knocked two feet out of line," shouted the excited engineer.

The rest of the party scoffed at the idea. "Well, then, let's run back and see," said the chief engineer. "I tell you that bridge is at least two feet out of plumb, and I'll bet a month's salary on it."

The train was brought to a standstill and then ran back to the bridge. Reaching there the whole party disembarked and the engineer produced a foot rule. The bridge had been moved bodily by the force of the blow—not so much as Mr. White had said, but a good seven inches, as was proved by actual measurement. Nobody pretends to say how fast that train was run, but everybody on board is willing to swear the record has never been broken, and the time made was faster than President Ives ever wants to travel again.—Iowa Cor. Chicago Tribune.

An Agreeable Companion.

Next to the one who will let you talk all the time about yourself, the most pleasing companion in this world is the one who will occupy all his time in telling you of good things that other people have said about you.—London Tit-Bits.

THEN AND NOW.

How Conditions Have Changed Within Sixty Years or So.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges. The contrast is striking between the present and a few decades ago:

How funny the rising generation of young men would feel if they should be dropped back into the early thirties and do what their fellows of that day did. In 1830 there were only two kinds of coal in practical use. That is, charcoal and sea coal, the latter imported; very little of it comparatively was used, wood being the common fuel. Getting in the winter's wood in the fall was no small matter. Logs four feet long, sawed once and piled up, filled the woodshed and were split up into sizable sticks when used. Wood fires were the order, and their back-logs, fore-sticks and brands, blazing up finely, made the sitting very cheerful. All the stores of that day had stoves of various patterns and kinds. I remember a few years before 1830, when a little boy, my uncle took me with him down to State street to see them burn what he called stones. It was a pot of anthracite coal; it was burning briskly not far from where the old pump was situated. I can see it now in my memory, and the crowd of lookers on to witness the experiment. Who supposed then that it would ever come into general use—hundreds of millions of tons produced annually—and completely take the place of wood as a fuel?

In 1830 friction matches were unknown or just coming into notice; at the homes and in the stores the fires were all lighted by sparks in a tinder box, which were common everywhere. It was a small round tin box, three or four inches in diameter; some rags burned to a tinder was kept in that box with a smothering plate on top of it; a flint and a small bar of steel were kept in the box; when a light was wanted the flint was struck against the steel and the spark ignited the tinder and then a match was lighted by it. Not the friction matches of to-day, they are a later institution, the matches of those days were round bundles of small sticks, each bundle about four inches long and one and a half inches in diameter, with each end dipped into brimstone; poor old women used to make and sell these matches; the price was generally two cents a bunch.

Oil lamps of various patterns and sizes were used for lights. Gas and kerosene were unknown; whale oil was generally used winter-strained and summer-strained. The filling and cleaning of those in the stores was the work every morning of the youngest apprentice. The boy in the retail store opened the store early every morning, made his wood fire in the stove, starting it with his tinder-box and matches, as mentioned above, and then swept out, his store and dusted everywhere, and many an old and retired merchant now living at his ease will remember when he began his mercantile life in this way. There were no railroads then; traveling was done by stages. About 1835 old things began to pass away, railroads began to be constructed, gas began to do the lighting, and has come into general use. The postoffice was a small affair. The postage on letters was ten cents to Providence, eighteen and three-fourth cents to New York, and twenty-five cents for a farther distance. On two pieces of paper, however small, the postage was double, letters were folded in a peculiar way, and envelopes, now so common, were unknown. In 1840, Harnden, Adams and Dinsmore started, with their gripsacks carrying packages to New York, charging twenty-five cents a package, which was the beginning of the enormous express business. In 1845 E. P. Bancroft started an opposition to the postoffice carrying letters to New York for five cents, and State street generally patronized him, for it was cheaper than eighteen and three-fourth cents, Uncle Sam's price, but such competition led to the reduction of postage to the two-cent stamp, and made us a country of letter writers. In 1842 Morse's telegraph was brought into use, and now we have the world's news everywhere, every day. In 1830, when we got European news; it was usually thirty days old, shortened some when steamships came into use. Now the stock quotations of New York and London are known in the same place the same day. I need not say anything about the telephone and electric lights, or electricity in its practical shape, for they are the latest comers. I suppose there have been more improvements in the way of doing things in the last fifty or sixty years than in the previous 600, and in a few years I presume our present high estate, compared with the past, will be completely put in the shade, for as Prof. Tyndall says, every discovery casts a light beyond its special bounds. I wonder how the boys of 1890, when they left their schools to enter commercial life, would have felt if their lot was the same as their grandfather's was in 1830.

I suppose we were just as happy in 1830 as we are in 1891 with our privileges. I cannot say with Gray, "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise," but in our ignorance in 1830 we were happy; yet to go back there now, with knowledge of 1891, that would be a misery.

Family Discipline.

"Well, Johnny, I suppose you frequently get your little hide tanned at home?"

"Oh, yes, I get a licking every once in a while."

"Who gives it to you?"

"Sometimes pa and sometimes ma. It all depends on which of them hasn't anything else to do at the time."—Texas Siftings.

A Mysterious Disappearance.

CHICAGO, May 18.—There has been much suppressed excitement and anxiety among the members of the new Vessel Owners' association in Chicago and at Cleveland for several days past over the mysterious disappearance of Captain P. W. Eagan. Captain Eagan and Captain Biemen came to Chicago specially selected to manage the vessel owners' shipping office here in opposition to the Seamen's union. Two or three days after their arrival, just when arrangements had been completed for the office, Captain Eagan turned up missing and has not been heard from for six days. His clothes and effects are in the room just as he left them on the morning he was last seen.

To Settle Differences.

BOSTON, May 18.—At the request of the Clothing Contractors' union the Pressmen's union has appointed a committee who will confer with a committee from the Contractors' union, with a view to settling the differences between the two bodies.

Broke His Neck.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Israel Rosenblat 65 years of age, of Rochester, N. Y., while visiting at the home of his son-in-law in this city, fell down stairs and broke his neck. He died in a few minutes.

Two Strange Fish.

Two strange fish were taken in a trawl off the coast of Maine recently. One, the lamphis, is the only specimen of the kind ever taken in eastern waters.

In shape it was like a very large sunfish, and its weight was about 800 pounds. Its back was of a beautiful sky blue, the sides were snowy white, and the fins scarlet.

The other fish, the ecolar of the Canary islands, is common in warm latitudes, but has never before been taken so far north as in this case.

Both were taken at a depth of 1,000 feet.—Belfast Age.

Forty-eight tons of supplies were hauled from Berlin Falls, N. H., to Danforth's camp, a sportman's resort at Lake Parmachenee, Me., this season, at an expense of $1,000. The hunters who visit Parmachenee live high, and some of them have a sweet tooth, for 600 pounds of candy disappeared there last year.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XII.—CONTINUED.

I could not see Van Hoeck from the cross-roads, but, on turning the angle of the lane at the foot of the hill, I perceived him feeling the way with painful slowness, and on the side of the hedgerow, a hundred yards in advance. Hearing my step he turned, and, recognizing it, came to meet me. He seemed to forget the danger of making a false step, and advanced with eager quickness,—his whole body partaking the expression of anxiety imprinted on his features.

"Is it you, Thorne?" he called.

"Yes," I replied.

"What has happened?"

I waited until I got up to him, then putting my hand on his shoulder, I said,—

"I have bad news for you, Van Hoeck."

He trembled violently under my hand, and opened his lips to speak, but no sound came; his condition was pitiable, and to keep him no longer in suspense, I said,—

"I have lost it. It has been taken from me."

"Who has taken it?" he asked, in a thick, husky voice.

"I can not say. I could not see the man who robbed me."

He was silent for a time, and then his feelings found expression at first in execration, then in incoherent sentences, broken up with words of Dutch where the English tongue failed to give sufficient force to his anger and mortification. He assailed me with every kind of invective, accused me of cowardice, of complicity in robbing him, of I know not what baseness and heartlessness,—indeed, it seemed as though the blow had deprived him of reason for the moment. At length, when his passion was somewhat exhausted, he said,—

"And what is your defense?"

I took his arm, and, as I led him up the hill toward the cross-roads, I went over the story once more. When I was telling him how Lola had come to my rescue, he stopped me.

"That is a lie!" he said; for she has been with me.

"Impossible!" I exclaimed.

"Impossible according to your story, but it is the truth for all that. I got off the path, and could not find my way back. She led me to a road—God knows where!—and left me."

"When?"

"How can I tell? The night has been an age."

"Granting she led you for an hour—and you would scarcely suffer her to lead you longer,—that would allow her to return to the Abbey, and come to my rescue at the time I speak of."

"Have it as you will; it makes no difference now She got me out of the way, and that was her object in being there. Go on."

I came to the end of my narrative, and then suggested that the theft might be traced to one of the servants.

"Anything to shield Brace," he said bitterly; and then, stamping his foot, he added, "You know he took it!"

It was useless reasoning with him in his present condition.

"You stand convicted by your own statement," he continued: "what ordinary thief would be fool enough, having obtained the diamond, to wait there, risking discovery, and jeopardize his own life—for the sake of butchering you? If Brace was the theif, such a thing is possible; for he must kill both you and me to profit by the possession of the diamond. Where is he now!"

"With Lola, in the woods looking for you!"

"What already!" he exclaimed, in alarm, "He is losing no time. Where are the woods?"

"We are in them now," I replied, for we had passed the cross-roads.

He stopped short. Shaking off my hand, he muttered, in a tone of dread,—

"Are you three hunting together.

"Be reasonable, Van Hoeck," I said.

"I am," he replied; "leave me here"

I made no reply; and we stood there in the middle of the road, he quaking with fear, and turning his head from side to side to catch the sound that might confirm his fears. He looked like a hunted beast, that knows not which way to escape the hounds.

"What's that?" he asked under his breath quickly. "There's some one on the road. It's his step. If you have any mercy, save me from him."

While I was turning to look up the road, to see if his fears were justified, he groped about until he caught hold of my arm.

I had heard no sound, but his finer sense was not at fault. On the brow of the hill—which we were now descending—stood the guant figure of Brace. The light of the rising sun shone upon him; but we stood in the shadow of the wood. where the mist still hung over the trodden earth.

"I do not hear him; where is he now?" Van Hoeck whispered.

"He is standing on the hill, a couple of hundred yards behind us. He does not see us."

"If we could but get to the Abbey! Forget what I said, Thorne. Have pity on me," he murmured.

"What do you want me to do?"

"Lead me back to the Abbey. If I escape from that man now, I may protect myself after."

I saw no possible reason for refusing compliance with this request, and, taking his arm, I led him along that side of the road where the shade was deeper. But before we had gone a dozen yards, a shrill whoop rang through the echoing woods to our right, and Van Hoeck again stopped. I looked in vain over the brake for Lola, whose cry I recognized; but, glancing up the road, I perceived that the Judge had heard the signal, and was coming after us. At the same moment Van Hoeck, starting forward cried:

"Quick, quick!—he sees us—he is coming down upon us!" and then, after another dozen yards, "Do you want him to overtake us that you stick to this cursed road?"

"I am looking for a path; we can not push through the brake." I replied.

Glancing over my shoulder, I saw the Judge, his shoulders bent forward, his arms swinging from side to side, bearing down upon us with long strides, and rapidly diminishing the distance between us.

"He is gaining upon us. How far are we from the Abbey?" asked Van Hoeck.

"Nearly two miles; we will run for it, if you like."

We ran for some distance. Again looking back, I saw the Judge still plodding on, with the same rhythmic swing of his long arms. Running had given us no sensible advantage: Van Hoeck's ear told him this. Drops of moisture stood on his livid face, the result of terror rather than exertion.

"There is no one in sight,—no one we can call to for help?" he asked.

"No one. I see a footpath through the wood, if you think that will be safer."

"Yes, yes—anything is better than this open road."

We took the path I had caught sight of. It was a good sound bridle way, covered with short turf; we ran along noiselessly. The angle we made shut off the view from the road. Brace could not cut off the corner without getting entangled in the undergrowth of briars, interwoven with rthe tall brake.

He must follow in our steps to overtake us. The danger lay in the straightness of the path, which kept the view open from the road. Our escape depended upon our finding a by-path that might deceive him as to the course we had taken. I explained this to Van Hoeck as we ran on.

"It is time we found one now, if we are to escape ." he answered.

The next stop brought us to a footpath that cut the bridle way at right angles.

Looking down the green ally toward the road, as we turned off from it, I could see nothing of the Judge. I thought we had beaten him.

But we advanced now with great difficulty. There was room only for one in the path, yet I had to keep hold of Van Hoeck's hand and guide him, for the brake met before us; the trailing brambles that crossed the path caught his feet; at every step he stumbled. It was hopeless to continue. Already I fancied I caught a glimpse, through the trees, of the Judge, swinging along the bridle way.

"Your only chance is to get amongst the brake, and throw yourself down while I go on," I said. I can go quicker alone, and, coming behind, he may imagine that you are still before me."

"Show me where to go."

I opened a way through the brake, led him behind a thicket, and bade him lie down. As he carried out this instruction, I got back into the footpath, and was then enabled to trot along at a brisk pace.

It was only just in time, for, looking back a couple of minutes later, I perceived the Judge plowing his way through brake and bramble, which came well up to the level of his breast, with as little difficulty as though it had been meadow grass, and with the steady swing of his bent shoulders. He had caught sight of me from the bridle way, and struck out at once into the thick of the undergrowth.

I did not, in the slightest degree, participate in Van Hoeck's suspicions and fears, and having, as I hoped, succeeded in diverting from him the object of his dread, I was indifferent as to whether the Judge overtook me or not. Had I been in the humor to enjoy a joke, I think I should have enjoyed giving him a long chase for nothing; but circumstances were too grave for that. I pursued the path until it dipped down into a hollow, and there, finding a fallen tree across the path, I sat down and waited for the Judge to come up. In a few minutes he stood before me with his arms folded on his chest, his feet planted apart, and a particularly stern look on his gaunt, weather-beaten face.

"He has given me the slip; has he given it to you likewise?" he asked.

"No," I replied: "I gave it to him. I helped him to escape."

"Stand up, Gentleman Thorne, and let us look each other in the face," he said.

I stood up. He held out his hand, and I gave him mine.

"Now, standin' here hand in hand and face to face, say, air we the noblest works of natur'? or air we not?"

I could not go so far as to admit that his appearance realized my highest ideal of nobility, but I understood his allusion, and replied:

"I believe you are an honest man, if that is what you mean, Brace."

"It is; and that is my opinion of you likewise. Let us sit down and hold a committee. Now, pardner, will you tell me why you let Israel get?"

"Because the poor wretch is half distracted with the loss of the diamond and his fear of you."

"Why do he fear me?"

"He believes that you took the diamond, and intend to have his life, in order to get the reversionary share, or something of that kind. And now, tell me why you pursued him when you saw he wished to avoid you?"

"Because he did so wish for one thing," and, he added, with emphasis, "because he's got to speak," he repeated, with still greater decision. "A man what has presentiments as a thing is going to be took so accurate as hisn, must nat'rally have presentiments what's gone of it when it's took."

"And suppose he can not tell you?"

"Well, then, he's got to try till he do. As a Judge, I've had to try a pretty considerable number of bad lots, but a more durned onprepossessing lot than Israel I never yet sentenced to a well-airned gallus. End mark this, pardner; ef Israel was charged with this crime, and it was my duty to direc' the jury as to the verdic' they should well and truly find, I should direc' them to bring him in guilty, or I'd lock 'em up till they did."

"You are as unreasonable in your suspicions as Van Hoeck is in his; but you have not his excuse,—you are not under the influence of fear."

"Because I hev nothing to be afeer'd on, Gentleman Thorne."

"Tell me how on earth it is possible for a man in Van Hoeck's condition—a man absolutely helpless, as we know him to be—to accomplish a feat of this kind?"

"I don't say he did it, pardner,—I don't say he took the Great Hesper; on the other hand, I don't say he didn't. But I am free to maintain that he knows all about it. If you ask me how he knows it, I'd tell you as I don't know, but that's no reason why we should try fur to find out. We ain't so everlasting clever that there's nothing more to be larnt out of this almighty universe, take my word for it. And though we hev drawed a pretty good lot of truth out of the well, we ain't yet come to the last bucketfull,—not by a long way. One of the things we hev got to larn, concerns Israel's presentiments, and," he added emphatically, "I'm goin to larn it."

"We must get back to the house. The police must be sent for.

"I don't see what harm they can do, and it's the reg'lar thing, so they ought to be called in," he said, rising from the trunk on which he had been holding this discussion; "I am going for Israel. So long!"

I hesitated to separate from the Judge.

"You must promise me, Brace, not to commit violence on Van Hoeck."

"If you mean by violence taking his life away, I will give you my word not to be violent with him. Ther's my hand on it."

On this understanding, we shook hands and parted. He plunged again into the wood; I returned to the Abbey. That was between seven and eight o'clock.

At two o'clock, I went once more into the wood. Lola was wanted.

The police officer from Southampton, on hearing my story, declared at once that the theft had been committed by a servant, and that Lola must be found at once, to know if she had seen the thief as he escaped by the window, and could identify him.

To find Lola, however was not my sole object.

The protracted absence of Brace and Van Hoeck excited my misgivings, and, despite the Judge's promise, I already reproached myself with having abandoned my blind partner. The Judge's notions of justice were peculiar, and based upon the rough usage of Californian miners in the days when they made and executed their own laws. I believed him capable of applying torture, only stopping short of actual murder, to wring from Van Hoeck the secret which he believed him to hold with respect to the lost diamond.

I retraced my steps to the spot where I had helped to conceal Van Hoeck. The broken brake marked a distinct trail, and in a pit less than a hundred yards from that point, the undergrowth was beaten down, as if a struggle had taken place.

Was it not possible that Brace had gone father than he intended, and killed Van Hoeck? Had he concealed the body, and fled with his daughter to escape the consequence of his act?

Asking myself these questions, I followed a track from the pit that brought me into the bridle way. Looking for further traces of a passage through the brake, I made my way down toward the road.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Popular Tunes.

Every now and then we suffer from a severe attack of some music-hall song that has a good catchy refrain, and that goes through the country like a regular epidemic.

Now, just as we were recovering from a severe attack of "The Bogie Man," we are all seriously ill with "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay."

How long the attack will last it is impossible to say, but at present everyone seems down with it; in the streets, in 'buses, in trains, this tune is for the present all-pervading.

The present attack makes us almost forget some of our previous ones; but a moment's thought "brings back to memory tunes of long ago"—for instance, how we used to hear "Annie Rooney" and her love affairs; how often we used to be told to "Ask a Pleeceman"; how it was dinned into our ears that it was a surprising thing to get "Two Lovely Black Eyes"; how we were asked "What Price That?" and how often some years back did we hear the command, "Tommy, Make room for Your Uncle."

A Brave Princess.

A Dresden correspondent writes in the Galignani Messenger: A few days ago Princess Eleonore and Princess Mathilde of Solms, who are staying here, were walking along a country road outside the town. Suddenly they heard the sound of horse's hoofs close beside them, and turning saw that the horse, upon which a lady was seated, was running away.

The rider appeared to have lost all control over the animal, and screamed loudly for help. Without a moment's hesitation both the young Princesses sprang at the horse's head as he approached them, and tried to catch hold of the bridle.

This Princess Eleonore succeeded in doing, but, unfortunately, the animal gave a sudden toss of his head, jerked the rein out of her hand, and kicked. The Princess was knocked down, and it was found that she had sustained severe injuries to her head and her right foot. Her younger sister jumped aside in time to save herself.

THE BIG LAGOON.

One of the Most Interesting Natural Formations in the Country.

On the northern coast of California, some thirty miles below the mouth of the Klammath river, is one of the most interesting natural formations to be found in this country, known as the Big Lagoon. Here the coast, which runs north and south up to this point, takes a sharp turn inland, bordered by very high hills, running to a distance of about three miles, then turning out again makes a sharp bay almost V-shaped, and for ages past a sand-bar has been washing itself up across this bay until the bar has raised up out of the water some ten or twelve feet, having a width of about 100 feet and a length of four miles, reaching across the entire bay.

This bar is in the shape of a roof. When there is a storm the breakers will roll up one side of it, break over and run down into the bay inside, and it is a novel sight to stand there and watch the waters, mountains high on one side and perfectly calm on the other, the line between the two at intervals hidden altogether. This bar is a sort of short cut and can be traversed on horseback. In a storm the horseman will one minute be high and dry on land, the next minute a large wave will roll up and running under the horse's feet to the depth of a foot or more, the rider will be, for an instant, four miles or so at sea on horseback, with no land nearer than the high bluffs of the mainland in sight.

Moss agates may be found in abundance on the pebbly beach, and when the sun shines they glitter with dazzling brightness.

The wild duck that frequent this part of the coast literally fill this inland bay, and the passing hunter, should he take a shot at them, will raise such a cloud and such a quacking that he will think all the ducks of the earth have gathered there. Occasionally some wild beast, like a bear or a panther, will be found crossing this bar, and the Indians have much sport when such a thing happens, the animal rarely escaping capture or death.

Here the Digger Indians abound, living on the shell fish which they catch along the beach, seldom going over the ridge of hills to capture a deer, which are plentiful. It would astonish a Yale or a Harvard football man to come upon this scene some bright morning at low tide and see the squaws and children playing lacrosse on the beach. They get so excited with their sport that they keep it up until the tides drive them from the beach, often staying there until they have to chase the ball down into the surf.

HE CAUGHT HIM.

How to Lure a Big Trout Into Trouble and Death.

Fred, who had often been here before, wanted big trout and knew how to get them. He cast very near where I did, but gave the little fellows no chance. So rapidly was his single fly trolled across the water that in a few minutes he had collected the whole school away from the spot where he expected to find a big trout. His fly was so large that I laughed when he mounted it, telling him he would find salmon a few hundred miles farther north, in Canada, but rather scarce in York state.

But my banter was unheeded. Fred knew these waters better than I did those Pennsylvania streams where many years ago I learned to cast a fly, and where such a fly as he used would be considered a bad want of judgment. A dozen times he swiftly trailed his fly across the water, getting a rise at every cast, but not letting them have it. Twenty feet away to the right he seemed to have drawn all the small trout in that hole, says a writer in the American Angler. Then lengthening his line he cast it again and slowly drew his fly with a quivering, snake-like motion. There was a rise of a magnificent fish, but Fred struck too quickly and missed him, though I thought the fish felt the steel.

"Wait a moment, Fred," said I. "Change your fly and you will get that big fellow."

"Not a bit of it," yelled John. Let him have it now, quick."

Fred's fly struck the water before John had done speaking, and had not trailed three feet when the trout took it, showing his head and shoulders out of the water and making the surface boil with the sweep of his broad tail. As his capacious mouth closed on the fly Fred struck so sharply that the leader sounded like the twang of a violin string struck pizzicato.

"You've got him, Fred," yelled John. "Keep him away from the bushes. I'll paddle you out and give you plenty of room to play him."

A CANINE MUSICAL CRITIC.

He is so Fond of Music That He Will Even Listen to "Annie Rooney."

A young lady residing up town, near Fifth avenue, has a Scotch terrier which she claims is musical. The dog is not musical in the sense that he can produce a concord of sweet sounds, but he has the ear of a discriminating critic, and by certain actions expresses approval or dislike of certain airs played either by a hand organ, the melodeon, piano or a brass band. Bernardo, that is the prodigy's name, is just 9 months old, and when a puppy 3 months old he began to show a decided fondness for music.

The young lady said to a New York Mail and Express man that Bernardo happened to be in the front hall one day when he heard the "Boulanger March" ground out of a hand organ on the street. From a sleepy attitude the dog aroused himself and began to caper around in a frisky manner, giving playful, short yelps. Just as soon as the organ-grinder changed to the "Heart Bowed Down," Bernardo stopped his lively actions, and lying flat upon the floor, began to moan as if in pain. From that time nothing was neglected to discover what musical acumen the dog possessed.

The young lady played the "Swan Song" from Lohengrin, on the piano, which had the effect of making Bernardo walk slowly around, plaintively barking all the while. She played half a dozen selections as follows: "Swan Song," the "Soldier's Song," from Faust; the "Star-Spangled Banner," the Marseillaise Hymn," "Johnny Get your Gun" and "Yankee Doodle." The selection which seemed to give the dog the most satisfaction was "Yankee Doodle." The lively music caused the canine to race around the room in a most frolicsome way, giving vent to a succession of short, quick barks. When the "Star-Spangled Banner" greeted his ears he sat on all fours and gave, now and then, a long bark, which the young lady interpreted as patriotic ejaculations. The "Marseillais Hymn" seemed to create fear in the heart of the dog, for he cowered in the corner and tried to escape.

These tests were made when Bernardo was a few days over 3 months old. As he grew older he was given every opportunity to hear and familiarize himself with all kinds of tunes. Although "Annie Rooney" is worn threadbare with many, Bernardo enjoys it highly and almost turns a somersault in his appreciating antics. A boy whistling on the street attracts his attention. The young lady said that her idea about Bernardo was that he had the gift of enjoying music without exactly being able to discriminate like a human being. Whenever he sees his mistress go into the room where the piano is he scampers in as fast as possible. By playing "Yankee Doodle" or "The Boulanger March" he can be made to quit the door and frolic up and down the hallway. But sad tunes only make him paw the door more vigorously and bark the louder.

One day a small bell was attached to his neck and came near driving him crazy. He ran around, yelping, as if a tin can had been tied to his tail, and he kept it up so long the offending bell had to be taken off.

A PERSIAN HORSE.

Beautiful, Gentle, and Docile and Insisted on Being Petted.

"Persian horses," says Mrs. Bishop in "Journeys in Persia and Kurdistan," "are to be admired and liked. Their beauty is a scource of constant enjoyment, and they are almost invariably gentle and docile. It is in vain to form any resolution against making a pet of one of them. My new acquisition, 'Boy,' insists on being petted, and his enticing ways are irresistible. He is always tethered in front of my tent, with a rope long enough to give him considerable liberty, and he took advantage of it the very first day to come into the tent, and make it apparent that he wanted me to divide a lemon with him. Grapes were his preference, then came cucumber, bread, and biscuits. Finally, he drank milk out of a soup plate. He comes up to me and puts down his head to have his ears rubbed, and if I do not attend to him at once, or if I cease attending to him, he gives me a gentle but admonitory thump. I dine outside the tent and he is tied to my chair and waits with wonderful patience for the odds and ends, only occasionally rubbing his soft nose against my face to remind me he is there. A friendly snuffle is the only sound he makes. He does not know how to fight or that teeth and heels are for any other uses than eating and drinking. He is really the gentlest and most docile of his race. The point at which he draws the line is being led; then he draws back and a mulish look comes into his sweet eyes. But he follows like a dog, and when I walk he is always with me. He comes when I call him, stops when I do, accompanies when I leave the road in search of flowers, and usually puts his head either on my shoulder or under my arm. To him I am an embodiment of melons, cucumbers, grapes, peaches, biscuits, and sugar, with a good deal of petting and ear-rubbing thrown in."

Proposing Under Difficulties.

What oddities we have seen at balls! Once, at the supper table, I saw a heavy dragoon deeply engaged with his lady. He was actually proposing, but at the moment was busy with an obstinate shoulder of lamb. In his agitation he lost control of his carving, the joint slipped and bounded from the table and fell on the floor between me and him. This was an awkward, unromantic contretemps, but notwithstanding, the business came to a happy issue.—Gentleman's Magazine.

ALIEN LAND OWNERS.

One Hundred and Fifty Million Acres of American Soil Held By Aliens.

We find the following in the Pennsylvania Farmer, Meadville, Pa.:

Over 20,000,000 acres of land in our United States are owned by men holding high official positions in foreign governments. Sixty millions of acres are owned by railroads controlled by foreign capital, while private citizens of European countries own 70,000,000 acres more.

One hundred and fifty million acres! An area almost four times as large as the great state of Pennsylvania—an empire in itself within our own borders, and yet all directly under the control of citizens of foreign countries and foreign capital. Much of this land was secured, either directly or indirectly, at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre. Large portions of it are in cultivation in the Mississippi valley states, and no inconsiderable amount in the gulf states and Texas.

The men who cultivate this land are tenant farmers, some of them of foreign birth, but many of them are home-born American citizens. American citizens paying tributes from their toil to foreign landlords—in some instances to lords and dukes of the British empire.

Fathers of the East! Some of you have sons in the West. They went there with nothing but your best wishes.

Some of them have prospered; their broad acres, flocks and herds and overflowing graneries testify to the fact and when you return home from a visit to them you call upon your neighbor and in glowing terms tell him of the opportunities of the west. Others have been less fortunate. They went there with just as bright hopes, but those hopes have not been realized. There were seasons of severe drouth in which the crops failed to mature; the chinch bug destroyed the wheat; hot winds withered the corn and grasshoppers devoured the green foliage from every living plant. Now is this the whole story? Drouths and hot winds, destructive insects and sickness brought expenses without revenue to meet them. The homestead, perhaps not yet proved up, had to be mortgaged to meet these expenses; the extortionate interest demanded rapidly increased the mortgage even though a failure of crops shut off all income. There could be but one outcome. Your son or your daughter who left you a few years ago full of the vigor of youth and lively with bright anticipation had to sink beneath the ever increasing burden of usury that was bearing them down. The homestead which Uncle Sam had given them had to go. True, during these years of affliction the improvements had neither been many nor costly, but it had been a home, nevertheless. Yet they must leave it—it and the little mound in the garden,—and whither should they go? Uncle Sam has no more homesteads for them, for he gives but once to any person. There is but one alternative. They must become tenant farmers.

English capital has bought large tracts near by. These tracts have been divided into many lots and tenants are wanted. In the places where there should be homes are houses built from the cheapest lumber—mere hovels. There are no barns. A few crotchee posts, a few poles placed in the crotches and a little straw over them, are good enough barns for the tenant of an English landlord, even though the tenant be an American citizen. There are no cribs for the corn or bins for the small grain. Our lord or duke across the water wants the gold for his portion as soon as it is ripe for the market. The American citizen who pays him this tribute must find storage for his portion at his own expense or take the first meagre offer for his year's labor. There are no orchards nor fruit gardens. What cares our landlord across the water whether his American tenant has juicy dishes of fruit upon his table or not? Corn pone and greasy bacon are good enough for him. And yet our children, who have been driven to the wall by adverse circumstances, without money or credit, and weary and faint hearted, must accept the only opportunity offered to commence again the battle of life. For years the profits of their labor must go—for what? Not to build up and add to the wealth of your country and theirs. Not even to enrich their own countrymen, but to increase the wealth of those who would destroy them if they could.

It is time every farmer, and not only every farmer, but every true American citizen, should take an interest in this matter. It is time for Americans to understand the situation; time for them to realize that the sending of these tributes of American labor to English landlords will just as completely and more surely enslave America than would the taxes of colonial days. As "free citizens" you have a right to speak and demand a hearing. Of what consequence is your boasted wealth of natural resources if you allow their profits, developed through your labor, to slip from your hands into other countries? It is time that you should speak. Every Grange, every Alliance, every American citizen who believes in developing the resources of America for the benefit of her own people, should cry out against this alien landlordism.

Martha Only Human.

Crusty old parent: "It seems to me the height of folly, Martha, for a girl to leave her home, with all its cheerful surroundings, to take a sleigh ride on a bitter night like this."

Marth (putting on her wrap): "Yes, papa, but there are cheerful—er—surroundings in taking a sleigh ride.—Chicago Tribune.

TEN BIG WILD CATS.

In Three Days by a Man Who Claims the Title of Champion.

Jack Dodge of Melrose, Penn., has had some exceedingly exciting experiences with wild cats, and as there is a bounty of $2 on every wild cat killed in Pennsylvania, his recent experiences have been profitable as well as exciting. Dodge has, according to the New York Sun, long enjoyed the reputation of being the champion wild-cat hunter of this country, but he says he is not content with that honor now. He challenges all the wild-cat hunters of the state to show a three days' record better than his.

The first of these three days he went out in the morning to look at some traps he had lying in wait for a couple of big catamounts he had seen prowling about his premises, although the number previously captured by him in those parts last winter—no less than fifteen—was enough, he supposed, to clean them all out. He found none of his traps sprung, much to his surprise, nor was there any sign of any of the animals having been fooling about them. He left the traps just as they were, and was just turning away from the last one he had examined when he heard a noise in the scrub off to his right.

He looked around and saw a big wild cat that had sprung from some hiding place and landed squarely on a ruffed grouse which had evidently been huddled up under a bush, but in sight. With the suspicion of its kind, the wild cat had looked around as soon as it struck the bird, and, seeing Dodge, seized the grouse in its teeth and bounded away toward a chestnut tree. Before it reached the tree Dodge gave it a charge of buckshot, and the cat sprawled about in the snow, yelling with pain, and dropping the grouse, which kicked and fluttered feebly in the snow.

While the cat was yelling and rolling and tumbling about, and before Dodge had made up his mind what it was best to do next, another wild cat, which had been crouching unseen on a branch of the chestnut, leaped down, captured the bird and started away with it. Dodge had another barrel of his gun still charged, and he stopped the flight of the second wild cat as he had the first, and had two catamounts yelling and doing ground and lofty tumbling in the snow.

Reloading his gun, he killed both animals, and he had scarcely done so when a sharp "click" behind him caused him to turn. Another wild cat had sprung the trap Dodge had left but a few minutes before, and from the way it was held by both forefeet the trapper believed that the animal had jumped into the trap while bounding along in response to the wild cries of the two cats that were wounded. Dodge shot the trapped cat, and, throwing the three on his back, started for home.

He had gone but a short distance when he met a man hurrying along in an old road leading to the main road. The man said that some kind of an animal had been chasing him. While he was yet telling Dodge how the animal had started for him out of the bushes, a wild cat appeared around the bend of the road, a hundred feet away, and the man declared that it was the animal that had started after him half a mile down the road. The wild cat stopped when it saw the two men, and Dodge shot it, killing it with a single charge.

Dodge went on home and encountered no more wild cats that day, but the next day he found that three of his traps had each a wild cat in it. He killed them, and, resetting his last trap, went back over the round again and found that a fourth one had been caught in the hour or so since he had been there.

The third day he could scare up but two in his traps, and, as he has not captured any at all since, he is of the opinion that all of the catamounts in the vicinity had gathered within the limit where his traps are on these three days; and that he has got them all.

OLDEST WATCH IN THE WORLD.

It Bears the Date 1221—A Child's Plaything When Found.

Seth Dongabaugh, a prospector and mine-owner, of Butte, has in his possession probably one of the most valuable relics in the country. It is a timepiece in the shape of a watch, and bearing the name and date "Joseph Davis, London, 1221." The genuineness of the article is unquestioned, and its great value lies in the fact that the earliest record of a pocket timepiece is of 1494, and of Swiss make. The Davis watch has been an heirloom of the Swan family for nearly 200 years. It finally came into the possession of Frank Swan, one of the family, who lives in Nevada. He did not appreciate the value of the watch and gave it to his children to play with, and when Mr. Longabaugh first saw it about fourteen years ago the hands had been broken off and one of the three cases within which the works were inclosed was lost. He recognized its value and secured it from Swan. The watch was examined by Mr. Tucker, the San Francisco jeweler, and after making researches he pronounced it genuine. More recently Hight & Fairfield, of Butte, made a search into the misty past, but the earliest date they could find in the existence of watches was in 1300.

The watch in question doubtless represents the labor of many years, as it was made entirely by hand and the tool marks throughout all its parts are plainly visible, and the watch was probably the only one made by Mr. Davis, of London. The machinery consists of a large steel balance wheel, which works with a pendulum like a lever, and in place of the modern hairspring is a long steel chain which winds and unwinds upon a pulley. Another large wheel, the purpose of

GOOD KICKERS.

A Bird That Can Give the Mule Pointers on Kicking.

Dr. E. Usher, of London, Fellow of the Royal Geographical society, and a sportsman of note, who had been in Arabia and other remote parts of the globe hunting for big game, at last arrived in North Queensland and the desert region known as the North Territory in Australia. This is an enormous stretch of country thousands of miles in area, infested by cannibals, in which are giant emus, wombat and wallaby. It was to hunt the emu that Dr. Usher made his trip there.

"A party of us went up in that far north region," he said to a San Francisco Chronicle reporter. "We were among the cannibals, who are great in size, being six and a half feet high and physically perfect. It is a dry, sandy region for the most part. Emus in large numbers are to be found over this territory. We hunted them on horseback, and it was rare sport, for the reason that they can run as fast as a horse, and a very good one at that. We found the catching of emus almost as interesting as coursing, besides having a certain spice of danger about it.

"An emu can kick as hard as a horse. I have seen men kicked so hard by this vicious bird that their legs were broken. If I had my choice of being kicked by a horse or an emu, I think I would take the horse. The emu stands on one leg, and with the other strikes a quick and most paralyzing blow. I never would have believed that a bird had such power had I not had ocular evidence of it during this trip. After two or three of our men had suffered from the terrible kicks of these birds we did not venture near them, but after running our horses till we got close enough, would bring them down with our rifles. We did not approach them till we knew they were dead.

"We killed them for their feathers, although they are not so valuable as those of the ostrich. We also hunted for their eggs, which are to be found in the sand, but in doing this we took care not to collide with the emu. The eggs are more in demand than the feathers. They are very beautiful, and are so tough that it is difficult to break them. Professional curio-makers drill a hole in each end, take the inside out and then the shell is carved and mounted in silver. There are three layers of the shell and the carving is done so as to show three colors. The silver is set in the first layer, so thick is it, and when it is all carved and ornamented by the silver it is handsome."

THIS BEAR

Undertook a Joke Altogether Too Much For Him.

A one-horse power tread mill for sawing stove wood was standing in a wood lot on Farmer Waterman's place. At daybreak one morning Mr. Waterman strolled up to the wood lot to get an ax. When he got within a few yards of the spot he saw a bear fooling around the tread-mill, and he squatted behind a log and watched it. The bear marched around the machine three or four times, and then walked up the tread-mill as though he meant to find out what sort of an arrangement it was. The floor began to move as soon as the bear's weight settled on it, and, instead of letting it carry him to the ground, the bear stuck his claws in, struck a double-quick pace and tried to waddle to the upper end.

The floor moved so fast that he did not make much headway, but he kept trudging along, looking down at the floor, and seemed to be pleased to find that the machine had something in it. The bear gained enough on the tread mill after awhile to get his chin over the upper part of the frame, where he tramped away until his tongue hung out. Then he took a notion not to walk up there any more. He suddenly turned around and the machine went so fast that the bear was landed on the ground with his feet in the air. The tread mill stopped revolving at once, and the bear regained his feet and started to walk around the machine again. He appeared not to be satisfied with the investigation, and again climbed onto it and went treading away as before.

While he was making the machine rattle it occurred to Mr. Waterman that he ought to kill the bear. The inquisitive brute's back was toward him, and, stealing closer, Mr. Waterman hunted around until he found a broken crosscut saw. The bear was still treading away, and taking advantage of the noise Mr. Waterman ran to the side of the tread mill and gave the bear a terrific slash on the neck with the broken saw. The bear roared and tried to spring over the upper end of the frame. In doing so he fell on his side and the next instant he was sprawling at the foot of the machine. In a twinkling Mr. Waterman cut the bear's head open with the saw, and the animal bled to death within ten paces of the tread mill.

John S. King was in from McIntosh last week and dropped in to chat awhile and ordered the Journal to continue coming. He reports that farmers in his neighborhood had nearly all completed sowing their wheat and are hoping for an abundant harvest.

H. B. Budd, the farmer speculator of Edna, stopped us on the street on Saturday morning last long enough to congratulate us on the nice appearance of the Journal since the new press was put in and to order it on year for a friend east. We like to obey such orders.

Ever since George Young bought that fine dray team; Tom has been beefing around, muttering unintelligible things to himself, until all of a sudden he flared up and bought a span of iron greys—he is kicking himself now because they are not as heavy as George's.

"We have had a daisy business both to-day and Saturday," was the remark that greeted our reporter as he entered the fashionable millinery store of Veronneau & Adams on Monday evening. "We were kept busy until 11 o'clock on Saturday evening selling goods, but we don't complain. That is what we are here for."

Gonyea & Saake put an elegant new rig on the road last Saturday and M'sieur Lanctot looked like he had just come out of a band-box, perched up on the driver's seat. That rig ought to sell pianos and organs even though they had no merits of their own to commend them. The boys assure us that they are having an elegant trade.

Poundmaster Cunningham wishes the Journal to notify the owners of various and sundry cows that are running about the streets that it is better you take care of them or first you know they will come home missing some night—and then it will require the pound fees in such cases made and provided to restore them to their normal condition and peace in the family

The habit of playing ball on the public street is reprehensible and should be stopped before some costly plate glass window comes to grief as did the window of Alderman & Sylvester on Monday afternoon, while several urchins were amusing themselves tossing a ball for fun. The ball went through the window and in about a second you couldn't see a boy on Main street for a mile, at least.

Mr. George Hunter, of Merriam Park, St. Paul, who is making a trip to Helena, stopped off in the city Saturday to visit his daughter, Mrs. P. R. Roberts. Although Mr. Hunter has lived in St. Paul for many years this is his first western trip, and it is needless to say that he is well pleased with northern Minnesota, and thinks, like every one who has traveled over this country and noted the natural advantages which Crookston, possesses, that this city has just struck the beginning of a rapid growth, and where the end will be no man can tell.

The Journal will be found on sale hereafter at Herb's.

Arthur Dufresne left on Tuesday for a brief visit in Canada.

Rhea will delight a Crookston audience again in the near future.

Four large draft stallions may be seen at Lancaster & Arries' stables.

L. J. Columbus will take a company on the road the coming season.

Call at the Journal job rooms for anything you need in the line of printed matter.

Mine host LeDuc, of the Montreal house, is fixing up that excellent hostelry in fine shape.

The trotting association is making arrangements for a big time during encampment week.

Fish are being taken from the river below the dam by wagon loads. They are taken in nets.

Eli Steenerson will move his office from the Reckitt block to his new building on Main street.

The train on the Great Northern road was one and one-half hours late on Wednesday morning.

A new saloon is being put in on the corner of Main and Robert street where the lunch room has been.

S. M. Vance is building a large addition to the building on the corner of Broadway and Fletcher streets.

The Journal is now prepared to quote you prices on all kinds of printing at reasonable figures and in the latest styles. Call and see us.

That cannon we have all heard so much about has at last arrived, and will be one of the chief speakers during the coming annual encampment.

O. Ducharme commenced work for Larsen, Carpenter & Co. on Tuesday morning and wishes his friends to call and see him at their place of business on Main street.

The Spider and the Fly company that showed at the Grand Opera house on Saturday drew a big house. It was as good a variety show as ever appeared in the city.

Alderman Anderson is taking advantage of the opportunity for obtaining some good soil from the excavation for the new Fournet block to grade up his door yard and is doing a fine job.

Soren Johnson came up from Superior on Monday morning on business returning in the evening. Mr. J. says they have had cold, raw weather down there all the spring but business has been pretty fair.

Ed. Roberts informs the Journal that he was over in the west side of the county last week and found that the farmers over there had got their wheat nearly all sown and were busy sowing oats and barley.

The store room in the new addition to the Fournet block adjoining O'Brien & Co.'s on the north will be 36 feet wide. This magnificent long room will be occupied by J. E. O'Brien & Co. for their hardware business.

Felix Fournet surprised the natives on Monday morning by a grand circus on Broadway—a host of men and teams at work on the excavation for his new block. When completed he will have the largest store building in the city.

Jacob Stambaugh, after having proved up on his timber claim, left for his home in Ohio on Thursday last. Mr. S. predicts another big crop of wheat in the valley for all who have been fortunate enough to get it sown.

Applications for hail insurance are already coming in to the Minnesota Hail association from Todd and Becker counties. The grain down there is growing nicely and the farmers want protection. As soon as a farmer's crop begins to grow he gets anxious for its safety.

When the new Fournet block is completed the New York store will occupy the room now occupied by J. E. O'Brien & Co. giving double the space now occupied. This is made necessary by the immense trade Mr. Chabot is doing which crowds his present quarters too much.

G. G. Henault, the Second street dentist who has rooms over the Times office, is enlarging his quarters by the addition of an adjoining room. When he gets them fixed up he will have as handsome a suite of rooms as any in the city. "Doc" is bound to win if push and energy will do it.

A. G. Anderson informs the Journal that he is having trouble in making arrangements to build alongside of the Reckitt lot on Robert street, and he is of the opinion that the only object the owner has is to hinder the building up of Robert srreet. Such a dog-in-the-manger policy cannot be too severely sat down upon. If Mr. A. should conclude to build up to the line on his own property and then when the other did get ready to build charge an exhorbitant price for his wall it would be but right, but it cannot be possible that a sagacious business man could be so small as to block the progress of a street in such a contemptible manner, and yet the question arises? "Why don't they sell or build?"

A washout on the N. P. delayed Wednesday's train five hours.

Tom Young had his arm hurt quite severely Monday by a kick from a horse.

A bit of rain on Tuesday delayed what seeding remains to be done, somewhat.

People's party caucuses will be held in the various wards in the city on Saturday evening.

The Crookston gun club elected J. E. Morrisey president in place of Col. A. B. Gorgas, resigned.

Chris. Hoch went up St. Hilaire way to buy fat cattle for Barnes & Slocum's market, last week.

Conductor Copeland has gone to Omaha as a delegate to the conductor's association convention.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

The little sprinkle on Tuesday delayed seeding somewhat. Howbeit much grain was sown this week.

The regular term of court convenes on Monday next. Bids fair to last well along toward the 4th of July.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

F. J. Greene, representing Bradstreet's Commercial Agency, is in the city this week sizing up our business men.

L. J. Columbus went to St. Paul this week and secured the opera "The Sleeping Queen" for to-morrow night.

Will Arnold has secured desk room in the office of G. H. Palmer, in the Reckitt block, during the assessment period.

Grand Forks Sunday Herald: Misses Edith and Eunice Copeland, of Crookston, are in the city visiting Miss Mamie Kops.

A brakesman on the Fosston line was pinched between the bumpers on Monday, but luckily escaped a more serious injury.

Christianson Bros. were the only ones to celebrate the 17th in the city. They displayed the Norwegian national colors.

The trees are donning their livery of living green—the grass is growing and everything indicates the approach of summer.

Homer Walworth has bought the Laurence house just across the Seventh streeth bridge. Consideration said to be $1,100.

Archie McKinnon went out to the big farm on Monday morning to help start the seeders. They are running in full blast this week.

The Journal job rooms have just turned out some elegant circulars for the Crookston Business College. That institution is now in a flourishing condition.

Register Hugh Thompson informs the Journal that he is re-papering his residence on Houston avenue and expects to take possession with his family next week.

Wm. Boyd, of the Commercial, returned Saturday morning accompanied by his wife. Mr. Boyd did not go as far as Michigan, having been taken sick on the way.

Great preparations are being made on the St. Louis hotel addition. Mine host Jerome intends to have as fine and complete a hotel as there is in the city when it is finished.

In order to be fully in line with the spirit of the age, attorney De Forest Bucklin will proceed at once to erect a fine residence on his lot in Jerome's Addition, near M. C. Malone's.

Edward Columbus returned from South Dakota with two draft stallions, one trotting stallion of the Geo. Wilkes family, a pair of Shetland ponies and a Shetland colt.

Chas. Smith, the Broadway meat market man, invites Journal readers to call at his market and size him up, No neater place in the city, and no better meats to be found anywhere.

The Journal learns with regret that L. D. Marshall intends to remove to Minneapolis. Mr. Marshall is one of our leading citizens and the city can ill afford to lose one of that kind just now.

Delegates to the Minneapolis convention can visit our city for one fare for the round trip via the Great Northern from June 7th to 12th, and can stay with us until the 25th, so says Agent Fegan.

Dan. Patterson was down from St. Hilaire on Monday. Says but little seeding has been done up that way as yet, but almost everybody at it this week. He thinks about 75 per cent will be seeded this year.

The state encampment of the North Dakota G. A. R. will be held at Fargo on June 14th. The editors of the ozone state also meet at the same time and place. With the simultaneous gathering of two such organizations there will naturally be an outpouring of patriotism, enthusiasm and oratory with a flow of fellowship and good feeling.

M. R. Brown's new stables on Main street are being painted in fine style.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs, notwithstanding some cavillers still continue to sell AT COST—the exact meaning of which is what the goods actually cost her. The ladies have only to call and examine to be convinced.

Judge Benson was out to the town of Knute on Friday to attend the funeral of his brother's wife. Some six or eight weeks ago the lady was committed to the insane asylum at St. Peter and died there last week.

Uncle Bemis walks around like a boy just out of school since he sold the hotel. He has earned a rest and is enjoying it to the fullest extent. He and Mrs. Bemis expect to leave to-night for Mount Clements, Mich.

H. E. Mussey, of the Thief River Falls Press, gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday. Mr. M. said: "You have everything now that heart could wish to get out a good paper, and that is just what you are doing."

Mrs. Cora Underhill has been quite ill with inflamatory rhematism for some time. Her mother, Mrs. I. U. Jennings, now learns that her case has been considered critical but that she is now considered out of danger.

Earnest Rolsch went out early on Tuesday morning to fish. About noon he was seen going up Second street toward his shop with one fish that was pretty long and one that was not so long. Says he caught them himself.

J. W. Wheeler and wife are visiting out at S. M. McKee's, and J. W. has a habit of riding in to attend to business and riding out in the evening. He did not go out on Tuesday evening—said he had too much office work that day.

The Commercial hotel is doing a rushing business as usual. Twenty-five people arrived on Tuesday evening after 6 o'clock. The managers have contracted to feed 150 people the day the Ringling Bros. circus visit Crookston.

In the advertisement of the Red River Valley Trotting Horse Breeding company in last week's Journal, the number of horse Ham Nutt should have been 16797 instead of 17997, but he is just the same horse and a mighty good one.

To-night, at the Reckitt block, you have a chance to get supper and to help a worthy old man and his wife. The ladies of the different church societies will give a supper for the benefit of Mr. A. J. Durkee and wife. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

The sudden death of one of our prominent business men, Mr. R. P. Herrick, cast a gloom over our city such as is seldom witnessed. Mr. Herrick was a man to make many and warm friends and few if any enemies. And when we reflect that he will mingle no more with us upon this earth it causes a feeling of sadness to rest upon this community. He was a man of broad and liberal views, a public-spirited man, and the monument he helped to build (the large flowering mill) stands as a reminder of the kind of a man that has gone from us never to return.

Chris Kjendsrud was arrested on Tuesday on a charge of assault in the third degree and the trial was held before Judge Christianson on Wednesday and is in progress up to the time we go to press. As near as the Journal can gather the facts, a boy, the son of Mike Klema, aged 17 and the prisoner aged 18, were fishing on the river bank and got into an altercation and in the scuffle that ensued the Klema boy fell into the river. It is not the province of newspapers to try cases in advance of judicial trials so the Journal refrains from comment until the evidence is all in.

Everybody is enchanted with the new engine in our press room—that is, everybody that has seen it run, and many have.

A delay in the arrival of express matter from St. Paul holds us back a few hours on this edition, which prevents our getting into the post office on our usual time. We hope to have things running on time shortly.

Next Sunday morning Rev. R. H. Battey will speak at the Congregational church. In the evening the pastor and congregation will unite with the workers of other city churches in holding a union service in the interests of the American bible society.

The militia company held a meeting on Monday evening and 20 recruits joined making now a large sized company. It was voted to purchase uniforms and be ready to take part in the grand encampment exercises, July 4th to 7th. Capt. Russell has been trying for some time to procure guns for his company and finally got his Irish up and wrote an emphatic letter to the Adjutant General who now informs him that guns will be forthcoming at once.

Mr. Reyerson, the leader of the Lakeside cornet band of Detroit, Minn., was in the city on Monday to arrange for the appearance of that band during the encampment. The band consists of sixteen pieces and took the premium at the Fireman's Tournament at Fargo two years ago. Mr. R. says that the people of Detroit are making calculations to attend the encampment en-masse. The securing of their band is a great acquisition.

W. D. Coxey, advance press agent for Ringling Bros. circus was in the city this week arranging for advertising his circus, that will visit Crookston some time in June. Mr. Coxey is somewhat of a newspaper man himself and after he had looked our outfit over, he said: "You have one of the most complete outfits I ever saw in a country office and you are getting out a bright, sparkling paper. If success ever comes as a reward of merit you certainly deserve abundant success."

Mr. A. Chabot was united for life to Miss Marie L. LeDue, at St. Ann's church on Tuesday, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. The happy couple left for a wedding tour in the evening. Mr. Chabot has been a resident of Crookston for many years clerking for several years before he began business for himself. Since engaging in business for himself his business has grown to such an extent that he finds himself obliged to double his present quarters, which he will do as soon as the new block is completed. Upon the return of the happy couple they will occupy their elegant new residence on Broadway. The Journal unites with their many friends in wishing them a long and happy life.

CITY COUNCIL.

Proceedings of the City Fathers at a Meeting Held Thursday May 19.

The Question of Letting the City Printing for the Ensuing Year was Considered.

Several Resolutions Regarding the Construction of Sidewalks, Sewers, Etc., Acted Upon.

The Proceedings in Full.

Proceedings of an adjourned meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston held in the City Hall on Thursday evening, May 19th, 1892.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call:

Aldermen present: Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb.

Aldermen absent: Marshall, Walker.

The finance committee reported favorably upon the following bills:

Louis Fontaine, clerk of election	$9.00
C. E. Dampier, medical attendance	8.00
J. E. O'Brien & Co., hardware	27.65
Louis Bouivert, assisting engineer	7.00

Moved by Alderman McGlogan seconded by Alderman Jennings that the report be accepted and adopted and the bills be ordered paid. Carried.

A hearing was given on the liquor applications of Henrey Burkhardt and Hans E. Erickson, and license granted in both cases.

Petition relating to grading of Cromb street in Fourth ward referred to aldermen of that ward; they to report at their leisure.

A petition relating to building sidewalks in the Fifth ward was presented and on motion was referred to the aldermen of said ward.

The aldermen of the Fifth ward reported favorably upon the petition and reccommended that it be allowed.

At an adjourned regular meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston, held the 19th day of May, 1892, Alderman Marlette offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Childs:

Resolved: That a sidewalk is ordered to be constructed in the Fifth ward of the City of Crookston as follows:

Commencing at the northwest corner of block eleven (11), in said ward, thence easterly along the southeasterly side of Euclid avenue to the easterly side of school street where the same intersects Eucldi avenue, thence northerly along the easterly side of school street to the southwest corner of lot one (1) of block thirty-three, in said addition, thence along the northerly side of third street to the centre of said lot one (1) of block thirty-three (33). Also that a sidewalk be constructed from a point on the southerly side of First avenue north, at the northwest corner of lot nine (9), of block fourteen, in said addition, thence easterly along the southerly side of said First avenue to the easterly side of school street where the same intersects said First avenue.

Said sidewalks to be constructed of pine plank two inches in thickness and twelve inches wide and laid on 4x4 pine stringers 4 feet long, laid 5 feet apart. Said plank to be laid lengthwise on said stringers and said sidewalks when completed to be three feet in width, and that cross walks be established and laid at the intersecting street crossings. Said cross walks to be of three inch plank and built in the regulation manner of other cross walks in the city.

Upon the call of ayes and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative, Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: None.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of council.

Passed this 19th day of May, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved this 20th day of May, 1892.

WM. ANGLIM,
Mayor.

Attest:
E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

The finance committee reported as follows on the bids for city printing:

Crookston, Minn., May 19, 1892.

To the President of common Council of the City of Crookston:

Your committee to whom was referred the proposals or bids for city printing report that we find the offer of the "Tribune" vague and unsatisfactory and recommend its rejection.

We find the bids of the "Times" and "JOURNAL" very nearly alike in their total amounts for printing proceedings, ordinances, resolutions, etc., and refer them back to you without recommendation.

For job printing we find the offer of the "Times" much the lowest and advice accepting same.

L. D. MARSHALL,
JAS. E. MORRISEY
R. G. MARLETTE.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Jerome that the report be accepted. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Jennings that the bids of the "JOURNAL" be accepted and that it be declared the official paper of the city.

Alderman Morrisey moved to amend, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the word "Times" be substituted for that of the "JOURNAL" where it appears in the motion.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: McGlogan, Morrisey.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marlette, Cromb, Austin. Amendment declared lost.

The vote on the original motion was then taken and resulted as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Childs, Jennings.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Anderson, Austin, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb. Motion declared lost.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Jerome, that the job printing be given to the "Times" for the ensuing year.

Moved by Alderman Jennings, seconded by Alderman Anderson, that the motion be laid on the table.

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Austin, Jennings, Marlette, Childs.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Cromb. Motion to lay on the table declared carried.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the "Times'" bid be accepted for publishing the proceedings and that it be declared the official paper of the city.

Alderman Childs raised a point of order.

President declared the point not well taken.

Alderman Childs appealed.

Aldermen voting in sustaining the chair: Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Cromb.

Aldermen voting against sustaining the chair: Childs, Jennings, Anderson, Austin.

Alderman Marlette not voting.

Chair declared sustained.

Alderman Childs moved to amend the motion of Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that the word "JOURNAL" be substituted for that of the "Times."

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Childs, Jennings, Marlette, Anderson, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: Austin, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey.

Amendment declared carried.

The vote on the motion as amended resulted as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: None. Motion declared carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that all bids for job printing be rejected and that the clerk be instructed to advertise for new bids for the job printing for the city during the ensuing year. Carried.

SEWERS.

REPORT OF CITY ENGINEER.

To the Honorable City Council, City of Crookston.

Gentlemen:—I beg to report that I have made an estimate of the cost of sewer which, by resolution of the City Council passed on the 10th day of May, 1892, was directed to be constructed from the centre of Sixth street, southerly along Front street, and across Front street to Red Lake river, in the Second ward, City of Crookston. The following is a description of each lot or parcel of land along which said sewer will be built, with my estimate of the cost of building of such sewer assessable to their respective owners, also my estimate of the cost to the city.

I have assumed that the city pays for the construction of the sewer through that portion of land owned by Mr. August Walters. Mr. Walters has been consulted on this point and he agrees to grant the council an easement through this lot on the condition that he be not assessed for the same crossing the lot:

Name of owner	Description.	Rate.	Block.	Lot.	Front.	Amount.

Total cost of work						$3,324.00

GEO. A. RALPH,
Per Asst. City Engineer.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Marlette, that the engineer be instructed to give proper grades and levels for the sidewalk on the Fifth ward. Carried.

The committee to whom was referred the petition of C. H. Saake reported that they could not agree, therefore they reported the petition back without reccommendation.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the petition of C. H. Saake be granted for the term of two years, provided he file a sufficient bond with the clerk that at the end of the two years he would remove the obstruction. Carried.

N. K. Olson asked the privilege of using one third of the street opposite his lots on Robert street while he was erecting a building?

On motion permission was granted.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Childs, that the vote be reconsidered. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Childs, that the request of Mr. Olson be granted provided he take proper precaution and that he furnish security to reimburse the city for any damage that might occur through lack of care on his part, and also that he be allowed to use one third of the street opposite his property. Carried.

A. P. Anderson presented an application for liquor license.

The city treasurer's bond was referred back for proper justication.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman McGlogan: Resolved that the profiles of Woodland avenue, Stuart avenue and that portion of Hubbard, St. Paul, Minnesota, Johnston, Wilckin, Nelson streets and also that portion of St. Paul street lying between Woodland avenue and the bridge over the Red Lake river all in Sampson's Woodland addition to the City of Crookston, be established and filed in the engineer's office. Carried unanimously.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Cromb and seconded by Alderman Jerome: Resolved that the profiles of Bridge, Robert, State, Carlton streets and Washington avenue be established as shown on profiles on file in engineer's office. Carried unanimously.

At a meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the nineteenth day of May, 1892, Alderman J. E. Morrisey offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman J. H. McGlogan:

Resolved, That the grades on Woodland and Stuart avenues and on such portions of Nelson, Minnesota, Hubbard, Wilcken, Johnston and St. Paul streets as lie between Woodland and Stuart avenues, and also that portion of St. Paul street leading from the bridge over the Red Lake river to Woodland avenue, all in Sampson's Woodland addition to the city of Crookston be, and are hereby established in accordance with the grades as shown in red lines and figures on the profiles of said streets as made by city engineer and now on file in his office.

Upon the call of ayes and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 19th day of May, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved this 20th day of May, 1892.

Attest: WM. ANGLIM, Mayor.
E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

At a meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the nineteenth day of May, 1892, Alderman Jerome offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Cromb:

Resolved, That the grades on Bridge street, Robert street, Carlton street, State street and Washington avenue in Jerome's addition to the city of Crookston, be and are hereby established in accordance with the grades as shown in red lines and figures on the profiles of said streets as made by city engineer and now on file in his office.

Upon the call of ayes and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Anderson, Austin, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, McGlogan, Morrisey, Marlette, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 19th day of May, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved this 20th day of May, 1892.

Attest: WM. ANGLIM, Mayor.

The aldermen of the Fourth ward reported favorably upon the grading of Cromb street.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the chair appoint a committee to look into the matter of opening Main and Broadway streets at their north terminus. Carried.

Chair appointed as that committee the aldermen of the Second and Third wards.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman McGlogan, that the street commissioner be and is hereby instructed to have the drain near N. P. Stone's implement house repaired and put in shape and that the expense of the same be charged to the general fund. Carried.

A communication was received from J. P. Foote offering to lease the property known as the Dobson grove to the city. On motion the communication was placed on file.

Moved by Alderman Jerome, seconded by Alderman Marlette, that when we adjourn it be to meet on Friday evening, May 27th. Carried.

The purchasing agent was instructed to procure for the council a copy of the manual of water-works for the years of 1890 and 1891.

Alderman Morrisey offered the following resolution which was seconded by Alderman McGlogan. Resolved: That the street commissioner be and is hereby instructed to place a sidewalk (which was ordered laid sometime ago) along the Woodland avenue in Sampson's addition in front of lots 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 in block two together with the necessary crossings. Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Austin, Childs, Morrisey, Marlette, McGlogan, Jerome, Jennings, Cromb. Aldermen voting in the negative: None. Resolution declared carried.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Morrisey, that the matter of making improvements on the streets and building sewers, etc., be referred to a committee to be appointed by the chair, who in connection with the city attorney be requested to look into the matter and report at the next meeting. Carried.

Chair appointed as that comittee, Aldermen Morrisey, Jerome.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH,
City Clerk.

How Beautiful the Sight of Brethren who Agree.

On Thursday evening of last week County Attorney Holston dropped into the Dalen office to have a fraternal chat with Brer Bydal—and got it—in the neck. It seems that a lot of paper, with something on it, was the causus belli—Holston wanted to take it with him and Bydal entered a protest. Holston got the paper in his mouth but Bydal issued a search warrant and with his office force went in after it, found it, retained it; and to all appearances was master of the situation. Holston claims the loss of a diamond pin as one of the results of the misunderstanding, and it looks to us as though his title to the nomination for the District Judgeship was also lost in the deal, and now it remains for Judge Ives and Wm. Watts to match pennies for that nomination. Mebbe not.

Bids for Building Bridges.

Bids will be received by the board of supervisors for the town of Fairfax at their meeting on Friday, June 10th, at the office of the town clerk of said town for building two bridges, viz: One bridge over the runway near the residence of Henry Steege, and one bridge across the ravine near Kittson, between sections 29 and 30, according to plans and specifications which may be seen at the office of S. L. Collins, in the city of Crookston. The supervisors reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

WM. HIMMELSBACK,
[6-8] Town Clerk.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to take this method of returning our thanks to those of our kind friends whose acts of kindness and sympathy were so cheering during our affliction in the death of our son, and especially to those who procured those beautiful flowers would express our heartfelt gratitude. PETER NOESON and family.

As It Should Be.

A. G. Anderson has succeeded in purchasing the Reckitt lot on Robert street and will erect a fine building thereon as soon as arrangements can be completed, and now the improvements on that street can go ahead all right and the street be built up as it should be.

Our summer opening of millinery will begin on the 3rd day of June and last three days, 3rd, 4th and 5th inclusive. We will have all the latest styles. We invite all the ladies of Crookston and vicinity to call and see us on these days.

MRS. I. U. JENNINGS,

RINGLING BRO'S. CIRCUS.

Grandest Arenic, Zoologic and Hippodromic Exhibition in the World.

Arrangments have been completed for the visit of the Ringling Brothers' world's greatest shows to Crookston. This memorable event will occur Thursday, June 16th. The Ringling Brothers are so far in advance of all competitors that a comparison with any other tented exhibition would be superfluous. Nothing like this vast exposition of all that is marvelous in the circus and zoological world has ever before been gathered together under a single management. Among its many features are the Vernon brothers, the highest salaried gymnasts brought to America; the Reed sisters, the quintessence of all that is graceful and attractive in high-class riding; a troupe of royal Japanese acrobats and equilibrists from the golden court of the Mikado; a menagerie embracing more costly, rare wild beasts than any other two exhibitions in the world; a horse fair comprising 350 of the finest blooded horses that money could procure; a gorgeous spectacle, illustrating in royal magnificence the triumphal entry of the victorious Cæsar into the capital of the Roman empire, with a reproduction of all the semi-barbaric splendor of those heroic times, with their thrilling four-horse chariot races, their gladiatorial contests and their exciting gala day sports; together with a vast concourse of acrobats, gymnasts, ærialists and riders, all exhibiting in three rings and upon a third-mile hippodrome track, and under the largest tents ever spread in this or any other country.

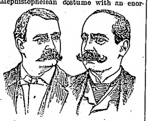
TOWARD FLOUR CITY.

IN THAT DIRECTION MANY EYES WILL SOON BE TURNED.

Gossip About Four Men Conspicuous in Connection with the Republican National Convention—Clarkson, Fassett, Washburn and Davis.

All Republican eyes, and a good many Democratic eyes, too, for that matter, are turning in the direction of Minneapolis, where the convention which will nominate the candidates of the Republican party for president and vice president convenes on June 7. While there has not been as much speculation concerning nominees this year as there was in 1888, there are so many elements tending to complicate matters, and withal so many uncertainties in politics, that there will be no lack of interest in the proceedings.

Two conspicuous figures at the great gathering will naturally be Hon. James S Clarkson, chairman, and Hon. J. Sloat Fassett, secretary of the Republican national committee. All the preliminary arrangements incidental to calling the convention to order will devolve upon these gentlemen and their associates. The former has been prominent in politics for many years. Upon President Harrison's accession to office it was generally believed that Mr. Clarkson would be tendered a cabinet portfolio, but he received instead, and it is generally understood at his own request, the place of first assistant postmaster general. The number of changes he made caused him to be dubbed by political opponents the "Headsman," and the comic papers of the opposite party pictured him always clothed from head to foot in a red Mephistophelean costume with an enormous executioner's ax in his hand. After a comparatively brief service he resigned. When Matthew S. Quay retired from the chairmanship of the Republican national committee Mr. Clarkson was elected his successor.



J. S. CLARKSON. J. S. FASSETT.

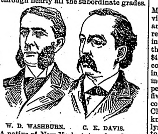
Mr. Clarkson has for many years been the editor and part proprietor of the Des Moines (Ia.) State Register. He first became nationally prominent in the convention of 1880, when he succeeded as one of the Blaine leaders in preventing Grant's nomination by bringing about that of James A. Garfield.

J. Sloat Fassett, secretary of the national committee, was born in Elmira, N. Y., in 1853. He was educated in the public schools, and in 1870 was graduated from the Elmira Free academy. In 1877 he took his degree at the Rochester university and went to the German university of Heidelberg, whence he returned to Elmira, and was admitted to the bar on motion of Lawyer David Bennett Hill, who was destined in after years to be his political opponent. Not long after this Mr. Fassett became district attorney of Chemung county. In 1883 he went to the state senate, and was re-elected in 1885, 1887 and 1889. In 1891 he was appointed collector of the port of New York, but resigned soon after when he was nominated for governor.

When the national committee of one of the great parties meets to select the place in which the nominating convention shall be held, it is always besieged by the advocates of half a dozen cities, all of whom appreciate the value of the advertisement afforded by such a gathering. Two of those most prominent in presenting the claims of Minneapolis were the United States senators from the state of Minnesota—W. D. Washburn and C. K. Davis.

William Drew Washburn was born in Maine in 1831 and was reared on a farm. He was graduated from Bowdoin college in 1854, and in 1857 located in Minneapolis. His first office was that of surveyor general of Minnesota, to which he was appointed in 1861 by President Lincoln. He has been closely identified with nearly all of the industrial and commercial enterprises of his adopted home. He was a member of the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth congresses, and in 1889 was elected to the United States senate to succeed Dwight M. Sabin. He belongs to the celebrated family which included among its noted members the late Elihu Washburne, of Illinois, and C. C. Washburn, of Wisconsin.

Cushman Kellogg Davis has reached his present exalted position by climbing through nearly all the subordinate grades. A native of New York state, where he was born in 1838, he was graduated from the University of Michigan at the age of nineteen, and was soon after admitted to the bar. He entered the army as a lieutenant in a Wisconsin regiment. His political career began in 1867, when he was elected to the Minnesota legislature. From 1868 to 1873 he was United States district attorney for Minnesota, and in 1874 he became governor of the state. He was elected to the United States senate and took his seat March 4, 1887.



W. D. WASHBURN. C. K. DAVIS.

A Strange Fresh Water Pond.

Ever since the settlement of the country, Hicks pond, at Palmyra, Me., has been a mystery to those living near its banks. It is only twelve acres in area, but is more than 100 feet in depth. It has no visible inlet, although a fair sized stream flows from it into Lake Sebasticook. The volume of its waters is not materially affected by either drought or freshet, and the water is always cold.

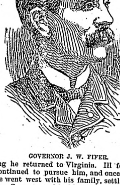
A Cane Made of Stamps.

A novel walking cane is that owned by a citizen of Detroit. It is made of 5,000 old postage stamps of various denominations and six nationalities—United States, Canadian, English, French, German and Italian. The face value of the stamps was $100. The surface of the cane when the stamps were all on was filed smooth and finished until it glazed.

HE WAS "PRIVATE JOE."

Now He Has Just Been Renominated for Governor of Illinois.

The career of "Private Joe" Fifer, recently renominated by the Republicans of Illinois for governor, would furnish the material for an entertaining novel. He was born in Staunton, Va., of German parentage. His father was a bricklayer, and being very poor moved to Missouri in the hope of bettering his condition. In this he was disappointed, and his wife dying he returned to Virginia. Ill fortune continued to pursue him, and once more he went west with his family, settling in Dry Grove township, McLean county, Ills., where he opened a brickyard. His son Joseph visited Bloomington, heard a lawyer make a speech, and returned to his humble home and calling firmly resolved that he would one day become an attorney.



GOVERNOR J. W. FIFER.

The war began about this time, and Joseph and his brother George walked barefooted to Bloomington and there enlisted as privates. This explains why Candidate Fifer in 1888 was referred to as "the Barefoot Boy of Bloomington." The brothers saw much active service, and one day before Jackson, Miss., when the list of those mortally wounded was made up the name of Joseph Fifer appeared on it. His fine constitution enabled him to pull through, and long before he had entirely recovered he was again at the front doing such duty as his condition permitted. He served several months beyond the term of his enlistment, and when the war closed he returned to Illinois with $155, no education and the still strong desire to become a great lawyer. He and his brother lived in a room and attended the Wesleyan university. Every Friday afternoon "Private Joe" was wont to set out for a tract of land the timber on which he had bought, and managed to eke out a living by woodchopping.

He was graduated in 1868, and the following year his ambition was gratified to the extent that he became a practicing lawyer at Bloomington. In 1872 he was elected corporation counsel, and a year later he became state attorney. In 1884 he went to the state senate. In 1888, when the Republicans were casting about for a candidate for governor, the title "Private Joe" was accidentally applied to him, and as he had but a short time before made himself exceedingly popular with the G. A. R. men by a pension controversy with General Black, his name aroused great enthusiasm in the state convention, and he was nominated and elected. In appearance Fifer is more like a minister than a statesman. Mrs. Fifer was a Miss Gertrude Lewis, the daughter of a Bloomington lumber dealer. The governor has two children—Herman, aged seventeen, and Florence, aged fourteen.

The Three Hypnotic Conditions.

In speaking of the three phases of hypnotism, a New York scientist said the other day:

"The cataleptic is an absolute automaton without any true consciousness, purpose, or volition. The lethargic is simply a person under spiritual chloroform. The somnambulist has a personality different from his own real self. He obeys it or else the will of the operator. When he recovers consciousness he never remembers what has happened. These states are not as distinct in practice as in theory. They pass one into another imperceptibly. It is also found that by the use of various expedients one stage can be changed immediately to another. Oddest of all, it is possible to change the stage as to one-half of the body without affecting that of the other. Thus Professor Charcot caused a somnambulist to begin taking a bath and as the ablution started produced a lethargic condition of the right half of the body. The left half kept on working as if nothing had happened."

Important, if True.

According to the Indianapolis Journal Mrs. Stephen Clark, living near Heltonsville, Ind., has been seeing strange lights among the maple trees near her house, and recently a boy who was doing work for her in digging away some rocks at the foot of these trees is reported to have dug up about $4,000 in greenbacks, together with some counterfeiting tools and a revolver belonging to her husband, who was hanged by a mob fifteen years ago for murder. The people had found in a cave the corpses of five men and a woman, together with counterfeiting tools, and feeling sure that Clark was the murderer, and as he was known to be a desperate character he was lynched. The greenbacks found are said to be genuine.

St. Paul's New Mayor.

Colonel Frederick P. Wright, recently elected mayor of St. Paul, is thirty-eight years of age. His victory is the more notable because this is but the second time in its history that the city has been carried by the Republicans, and also because Colonel Wright's opponent was Mr. Robert A. Smith, a most popular politician, who has been mayor for several terms. The new mayor was born in Pittsburg, and when about eighteen years old became a resident of the city which he has now been called upon to govern. He secured a position with a business firm of which he is now the senior member. Colonel Wright had not, up to the time of his nomination as mayor, been actively identified with politics, although he has always been a warm Republican. He has long taken a great interest in the welfare of the national guard, of Minnesota, and has done much toward building up and improving that organization.

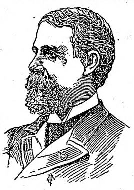
FORTUNE'S FAVORITE

THE REMARKABLE CAREER OF A MICHIGAN MILLIONAIRE.

Seven Stages in the Life of Russell A. Alger—A Penniless Orphan, a Plowboy, a Pedagogue, a Lumberman, a Soldier, a Governor and a Millionaire.

[Special Correspondence.]

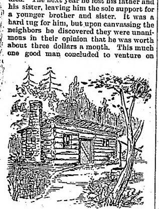
DETROIT, May 17.—A penniless orphan at thirteen, a plowboy at twenty, a country pedagogue, a lumberman, a soldier, a governor, and now five times a millionaire, are the seven stages in the life of Russell A. Alger. The story of Mr. Alger's life, although reading like the tale of Aladdin's lamp, shows vividly the possibilities of this country's citizenship.



GENERAL ALGER.

The general's parents—lowly New Englanders—had no private car when they yoked up the old oxen and started for the woods of Ohio to cut out a new home. The region about Medina county was then in the far, far west and almost as primitive as the remote corner of some unexplored country. Here the family settled and proceeded to raise a mixed line of uncertain crops. Gradually the new soil submitted to tilling, and just when it was producing enough grain for family use young Alger was born, Feb. 27, 1836. He was not regarded as a very useful addition to the family until he became old enough to "tote" the corn to the near by mill and bring back the meal. The farm proved a failure and yielded not enough to pay its mortgage.

Then it was that the boy first felt the harshness of the world, as he hired himself for a few cups of meal a day to do a man's work for a neighbor. The meal went into the family pot. This arrangement lasted for some time, until the boy mustered courage to ask sixpence a day. It was during this prosperous engagement, when twelve years old, that his mother died. The next year he lost his father and his sister, leaving him the sole support for a younger brother and sister. It was a hard tug for him, but upon canvassing the neighbors he discovered they were unanimous in their opinion that he was worth about three dollars a month. This much one good man concluded to venture on young Alger's services, clinching his bargain with an offer of four dollars for the second month, and five dollars for each of the four others in the contract. In six months he had saved $27.53.

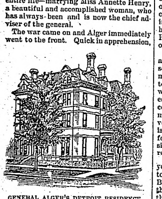


GENERAL ALGER'S BIRTHPLACE.

This was abundant capital, and acting upon his own impulse to learn something and be somebody he went to Richfield academy, working for his washing and board as apprentice to the village blacksmith. His schooling was apparently telling, for next year his wages went up to six dollars a month and kept advancing until he was twenty years old, when he drew fifteen dollars for working fourteen hours every day in every month.

Alger's early ambition was to be a lawyer. He studied with Wolcott & Upson, in Akron, O., and in two years the supreme court decided he knew enough to be admitted. He began practice in Cleveland, but the confining work was in no way agreeable to him. His health demanded a change, and in consequence, on the last day in 1860, Alger came to Michigan. Grand Rapids was selected as his home. He began business as a lumber dealer, taking another young man as a partner. They made a single shipment to a Chicago house, which failed after the consignment was received and landed the two young men high and dry, without a dollar. About this time, however, he did one of the most sensible and graceful acts in his entire life—marrying Miss Annette Henry, a beautiful and accomplished woman, who has always been and is now the chief adviser of the general.

The war came on and Alger immediately went to the front. Quick in apprehension, bold in emergencies, trained to overcome obstacles and fearless in everything, he rapidly advanced in rank, retiring with the title of brevet brigadier general, after participating in sixty-six battles and skirmishes.



GENERAL ALGER'S DETROIT RESIDENCE.

The general made his millions in the face of opposition most hearty and predictions most numerous that he would a second time be a bankrupt. But he went on buying every inch of pine land that he could induce reluctant money lenders to of politics in this country by bringing about the nomination of Mr. Blaine instead of that of Mr. Harrison. They do not know and I do not know positively that Blaine has determined to beat Harrison, but there are indications that Mr. Blaine is permitting his friends to understand that he will accept if nominated at Minneapolis.

The friends of the president say he could not have appointed Colonel Coppinger brigadier general, because Coppinger stood second from the bottom of the list of eligibles, and his promotion under these circumstances would have been destructive of discipline in the army, besides being an injustice to the men who stood near the top. Mr. Blaine's friends contend that the secretary had voluntarily declined to be a candidate for the presidential nomination when it was within his power to get the nomination by simply asking for it; that his withdrawal cleared the field for the president, and that such a great obligation should have been met by the president in any way in his power. To refuse to promote a man whose promotion Mr. Blaine asked for was, in the opinion of the secretary's friends, rank ingratitude.

Mr. Blaine is not a candidate for the nomination to be made at Minneapolis. No one pretends that he is. But his most intimate friends give it as their conviction that he will accept if nominated, and I have inside information to the effect that it is upon this assumption that they intend to proceed. They do not even intend to ask him if he will accept, knowing that this is not a fair question. They will simply go ahead and nominate him, and with the question thus raised they feel confident of what Mr. Blaine's answer will be. At the present time Mr. Blaine is in such a position that he cannot even indicate a willingness to accept. Having announced that he will not be a candidate there is nothing left for him to do but to do nothing. He is trying to discourage his friends from supporting him, and insists that he does not want the nomination. But since they believe that he will accept, and as they are determined on the strength of that to go ahead, the reader may understand that, in the absence of another declaration from Mr. Blaine, more emphatic than the one which he has already made, an effort will be made to stampede the convention for him at Minneapolis.

During the last month Mr. Blaine has grown steadily in strength and activity. For the first time in a year he has appeared like his old self. He shows himself as much as possible in public. He takes long walks, attends the theater often, visited the circus the other day and was as joyous as a boy in his appreciation of the wonders and humors of the performance, and not long since surprised every one at the Capitol by making his appearance there to argue before a committee in favor of a bill in which the department of state is interested. All this activity, this apparent revival of health and strength, gives hope to those friends who want to make him president.

The men who intend to nominate Blaine have prepared for him a very comfortable programme. After the nomination they say he is to write a short letter of acceptance and spend the remainder of the summer at Bar Harbor. They do not want any campaign speeches from him, they would not have him bother himself receiving delegations. If Blaine should be elected they contract to keep the office hunters and politicians away from him and protect him from annoyance and unnecessary labor. They want him to spend the coming winter at Augusta in semiretirement, and to come to Washington March 3 next with his cabinet already chosen.

Then they would have President Blaine bring about a much needed reform in the presidential office by refusing to take charge in person of the distribution of offices. They contend, and rightly, that under the existing practice a president of the United States simply wears out his life listening to the appeals of rival aspirants for appointment, whereas all but the most important of these cases should be heard and finally decided by the cabinet officers under whose jurisdiction they would naturally fall. Mr. Blaine's friends would have him shut himself up in the White House, see only his ministers and persons of prime importance and abolish the senseless American custom of handshaking and public levees, whose only purpose is to tire out the president and satisfy the curiosity of the crowd. Serving as this sort of a president, Blaine's friends argue that he is strong enough to endure the cares of office, and that there is no reason why he should not accept the nomination.

This is a very pretty plan, and it may be carried out. But the reader should not lose sight of the fact that Mr. Blaine is a peculiar man. He is well and apparently ambitious today, smarting somewhat under the president's unwillingness to do some things which have been asked of him, but next week he may be feeling despondent and without a word of warning to his friends write a letter which will make it impossible for them to nominate him at Minneapolis. Mr. Blaine has always been a fatalist as to the presidency. He has not for eight or ten years at least believed that he could ever attain the summit of his ambition. Intimate friends of his have detailed to me conversations which they have had with him on this score, conversations in which he showed himself to be a pronounced, almost a pitiful fatalist. Yet this strange man may have shaken off even his fatalism, and with apparently returning health renewed the ambition of his younger years.

You see much talk in the newspapers of other aspirants for the presidency and of other possible nominees of the Minneapolis convention. Let me tell my readers that in the judgment of the men here who have both information and wisdom the Republican nominee must be either Blaine or Harrison.

Not to weary you with details, I can assure you that with Blaine out Harrison will be renominated so easily that in my judgment the opposition will not care to make a stand or ask for a roll call. But with Blaine in the field the 600 uninstructed delegates will with practical unanimity combine upon him and give him much more than a majority of the whole convention. The only man who can stop them is Blaine himself, and I have good reasons for believing that Mr. Blaine will stand silent—not seeking the nomination, but ready to accept it if it seeks him.

At the same time I am able to assure you that the president's friends will fight to the last. There was a time when Mr. Blaine could have had the nomination for the asking without opposition and with the support of the president and his friends. For this I have authority almost as satisfactory as the word of the president himself. At one time—namely, nine months ago—the president came near retiring from the field so that Mr. Blaine might be nominated. But that time has passed, and the administration will fight with all its power at Minneapolis. The meaning of this is that then and there will be determined which is stronger in the Republican party—Blaine or Harrison. Without Blaine there will be no struggle at all.

WILL BLAINE ACCEPT?

Despite the fact that Blaine has refused to allow his name to go before the Minneapolis convention as a presidential candidate, many prominent papers and knowing people who claim to be "on the inside," insist that if tendered the nomination, Blaine will accept it, and it is even asserted positively that he has recently informed some prominent republicans that he would accept. It is further said that there is a mutual understanding between Harrison and Blaine to the effect that neither shall make any effort to secure the nomination, but the one securing the honor shall make the run. The democratic papers, knowing that Blaine would be the strongest candidate, have been trying to kill the Blaine sentiment by industriously circulating the report that he is physically unable to undertake a campaign..

The JOURNAL is inclined to the opinion that Blaine will be the nominee of the republican party, that he will accept the nomination, and that the republican standard will be carried to victory with overwhelming majorities. Blaine's name can enthuse the American people and unite the discontented elements within the republican party as no other can. There is a magnetism about him which cannot be overcome or counteracted.

As the second choice of the people, Harrison would make a strong candidate. His record as chief executive is clean, and his administration has been manly and straightforward. The firm stand which he took in the Chilian affair, and in the controversy with England over the seal fisheries of Alaska, in which John Bull showed a domineering spirit, proved the president to be a true American and strengthened him in the hearts of the American people. Such prominent democrats as Henry Watterson are willing to concede President Harrison's strength. In speaking of his (Harrison's) probable nomination, he says: "The democratic nominee for president has to meet a victorious adversary, who has given proof of sterling abilities and commended himself to the respect of the country." There would be no difficulty about electing either Blaine or Harrison, but it must be admitted that Blaine could draw to the republican ranks many who have wandered away after false gods and new parties.

THE PEOPLES PARTY'.

One great objection to becoming a member of the Peoples' Party is in the fact that in order to join it a man is obliged to sink his own identity, accept the program already laid down and blindly follow the self-constituted leaders of that party, or, if he dares to assert the independence of a free American citizen by presuming to take a hand in the framing of the party policy, he is subject to abuse of so vile a nature as would cause any sensitive man to shrink from presuming to provoke an ebullition. That's one difference between the Peoples' party and the old Alliance party. The Alliance party encouraged its members to think for themselves, to act for themselves and to vote for their interests. The Peoples' party obliges its votaries to accept a cut-and-dried program, already prepared, and to blindly support its leaders, in fact to become an unthinking slave to party. Unfortunately the platform adopted does not contain the essential elements upon which this free government was founded, and principally for the reason that the people themselves had no voice in its making. That platform was made by disgruntled politicians—old party hacks who failed to obtain the recognition or the emoluments they sought in old party lines and who think they see in the distress prevailing in agriculture an opportunity to accomplish their ends. That's all there is of it so far as they are concerned, and their actions show that they don't care a continental for the farmer or for any other man only for his votes. A cause, to be successful, must be based upon a more solid structure, and a platform to commend itself to the people must be made by the people, in the interest of the people and all of the people. In the present arrangement one interest is predominant and all the rest must be subservient. One interest has the advantage of at least nine-tenths of the representation in party councils and every other interest combined gets the remaining one-tenth. This is everything but a representative party of a free and enlightened people.

DRAINAGE!

The condition of the soil this spring suggests a subject that a few years ago received considerable attention, but for several years it seems to have been lost sight of, and that is the importance of drainage. It is proven by the fact that every farm that has natural drainage is now sown while in the localities that need a good drainage system, but very little has been seeded, and these acres comprise some of the very choicest lands in the county. It has been demonstrated that a system of drainage can be obtained that will be effective, and, no matter what the cost of it would be, it should be done. This is a matter of vast importance to every citizen in Polk county whether he is directly benefited or not, as the question whether these fertile lands shall remain uncultivated from year to year and hence unavailable for purposes of taxation affects the interests of all—directly or indirectly. This is a question of so vital importance that we wonder somewhat that a convention has not been called to devise ways and means to secure adequate drainage before this. Thousands of acres that are now unseeded need not have been, had this matter been attended to as it should have been years ago. Will it be done now? We should like to hear from our readers who are interested on this topic.

DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY.

Ever since the Fifty-first congress adjourned, the Democrats have been howling about the amount of the appropriations made at that session, calling it a "billion-dollar congress," and have been telling about the economy which would be practiced when the Democrats got hold of the reins of power.

Time rolled on and the Fifty-second congress (Democratic) met. A great show of economy was made at first in the way of cutting down appropriations, and the Democrats pointed with pride to the course which objector Holman was pursuing in trying to scale every appropriation bill that was brought up. Every effort was put forth to keep down the appropriations, so that the Democratic party could go into the coming campaign and refer to the economical Democratic congress as compared with the Republican billion-dollar congress. But, alas! Their hopes are being blasted every day as the appropriations creep up higher and higher until they already exceed in proportion the amounts appropriated by the Fifty-first congress.

The fact is, they are just finding out that this is a billion-dollar country, and as the population and wealth of the nation increases, it takes just so much more money to run the government of the country. The increase in the amount appropriated by the Fifty-first congress exceeded the previous congress only in proportion to the increase and demands of the people, and the Democratic party nor any other party cannot run this government for the same amount of money each year. The expenses have been increasing ever since the first congress assembeled, and will continue to increase.

The Democratic press of the country is now crying out to congress to call a halt in the expenditures before they exceed the "monstrous extravagance" of the Republicans. Under the caption, "Is it Another Billion Dollar Congress?" the Minneapolis Times (Dem.) of a recent issue says:

A "consistent Democrat" wants to know "what the Democratic Congress has done to justify the Times in charging it with extravagance and doing practically nothing to help the party and much to burden it in the coming struggle?"

The plain answer to this is that the appropriations now being made by the present Congress bring the line of expenditures perilously near the monstrous extravagance which made the billion-dollar Congress of execrable memory. According to a statement prepared for Representative Beltzhoover, of Pennsylvania, in the appropriations committee, the total appropriations by the present Congress at its first session will be $486,804,679, as against a total of $463,898,510 appropriated by the last congress at its first session.

* * * *

The appropriations in which the present congress exceeds its predecessors are these: Agricultural, $3,360,995, against $1,799,100; Indian, $8,209,441, against $7,262,016; legislative, $22,754,038, against $21,030,752; pensions, $134,825,066, against $98,457,461; post office, $78,216,068, against $72,226,698. In the sundry civil, river and harbor, fortification and consular bills, the appropriations of this year fall below those of the first session of the Reed Congress. Adding miscellaneous and deficiency bills, the total of regular appropriations at the first session of the Reed Congress was $361,780,057, while the like appropriations at the first session of the present Congress—on account of increased pensions—will be $364,940,799. The permanent annual appropriations are to be added in each case to get the grand total. The Reed Congress increased them from $101,000,000 to $121,000,000 so that, as stated, the grand total for the past session of the Fifty-first Congress was $463,398,510, as against $486,804,679 for the first session of the Fifty-second Congress.

* * * *

The Democratic party has promised the people a far different programme. It is pledged to make the expenditures of the government as small as possible. The smaller the national expenses become the smaller the national revenue needed to meet them, and the lighter the burden of taxation to be finally borne by the people. Moderate expenditures, moderate revenue and moderate taxation—which is but another term for moderate tariff rates—all go hand in hand. The Democratic party has promised that these shall be the first fruits of its supremacy. This congress belongs to the people; it has a two-thirds Democratic majority. How is it redeeming solemn pledges of the Democracy to the people?

NO STATE ENCAMPMENT.

There being no funds in the state treasury to pay encampment expenses, it has been decided to omit the annual encampment of the state militia this year. It is "a penny wise and pound foolish" policy which causes a legislature to not appropriate sufficient funds to maintain the organization and efficiency of the state troops. The state militia is the safeguard of the commonwealth. It is true, of course, that at the present time there is little necessity for the maintenance of state troops, but when they are required they are wanted urgently. No one can fortell the time when the state militia may be needed to quell riots or protect the lives and property of the citizens from mob violence. This state has had several examples of this which has practically demonstrated the value of the state troops in this direction. "In times of peace prepare for war" is an axiom as proper as it is old, and the best way for a nation to preserve peace is to be prepared for war. A legislature will consume several days discussing and defeating a militia appropriation, while the time thus spent costs the state more than the appropriation asked for. When the militiamen contribute their time it is sufficient, and the state should see that they are properly uniformed and equipped. The annual encampment is about all the boys have to look forward to as a sort of compensation for their hours of weary practice and drill, and when deprived of this little outing, there is not much encouragement for them to join the home guards.

THE recent cloud-burst at Sioux City, Iowa, which caused the loss of probably 50 or 60 lives and the destruction of millions of dollars worth of property is one of those awful calamities which cannot be forseen and which Providence sees fit to inflict upon the human race. In the history of this country it is outrivaled only by the Johnstown flood. Such disasters as these appal and discourage the bravest and best of people, but it can truthfully be said that there is not a race on the face of the earth that recover their losses and rebuild their ruined cities as quickly as the American people. People who can go to work on the ruins of their homes and over the graves of their loved ones, must have as much courage as any hero who ever carried a sword or stormed a fortification. From the ruins of Sioux City will spring up a handsome substantial metropolis, which will exceed in every respect the city before the destruction came upon it. This has been the history of every prosperous American city which has been overtaken by calamity.

THE TEXT book contractor offers to take all the old grammars and histories from the hands of the pupils and exchange them for the new text books if they pay 40 cents additional for the histories and 25 cents for the grammars. The Minneapolis Journal remarks that, this is paying the piper a little too much. The sooner the state adopts the free text book system as advocated by the Republican party the better.

THE NORTHFIELD News calls for an expression of opinion on the subject of a large or small convention. The majority opinion seems to be in favor of a large convention. In a large convention the little jobs that sometimes creep in are harder to put through, and aside from that the fact that the people desire it should be sufficient reason for holding as large a convention as possible.

EDITOR SMITH (Diamond Hiram the boys call him) has sold his interest in the Marshall County Leader and will retire to his farm. Smith has shown considerable ability in the journalistic field and it will take a pretty good man to keep the Leader up to its standard.

REAL ESTATE dealers in Kansas City and other towns along the Big Muddy are now selling real estate by the gallon. Cities may be inundated and even swept away, but nothing can discourage a real live man who handles dirt.

THE CLEVELAND boom is gaining in the south, and it is stated on Democratic authority that on cutting open a watermelon in Georgia the other day it was found to contain one of Grover's little boomlets.

THE Cincinnati Enquirer says that Blaine will certainly be nominated.

A SAD DEATH.

Miss Anna J. Wright of Ada Dies Suddenly in Minneapolis.

Miss Anna J. Wright of Ada who died recently in Minneapolis, was well known and respected throughout Polk County. The following from the Ada Index will be of interest:

DIED:—Miss Anna J. Wright, aged 18 years, at Minneapolis, Minn., on Sunday, May 15, 1892, of pneumonia.

The above sad news flashed over the wire last Sunday morning, bringing sorrow to many a heart in Ada, for about all had the impression that Miss Wright was out of danger and were unprepared for so heartrending a shock. Just three weeks ago she was in this city on a visit to her parents and many friends, enjoying a short vacation from the duties of the position she held in Donaldson Bros. Minneapolis store, having at that time a severe cold. Upon her return to Minneapolis, she was taken down with that dreaded decease pneumonia, and in nine days, the ninth day being the one set for a change for the better, the doors of the temple swung on their hinges and were closed forever.

Anna was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wright, and was the second child born in this township. About two years ago she left for Minneapolis, where she held a position in the drug department of Donaldson's Glass Block up to the time of her sickness. Among the hundreds of clerks employed in that large establishment, Miss Wright was a general favorite, and the floral tributes given by her young lady friends in the store, went a good ways in showing their regard and esteem for their former companion.

The funeral took place from the M. E. church on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Revs. Preston and Morrison officiating. Despite the drenching rain the church was crowded, a good many not being able to gain an entrance. The funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Masonic Lodge of this city. The church was appropriately draped and decorated by her friends, her old schoolmates contributing flowers which were arranged in letters, to form the word "Anna," being their last act of loving kindness to their departed friend.

It is needless to state that Mr. and Mrs. Wright and family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad affliction.

Resolutions of respect were passed by the Ada public school, of which deceased had been a member.

Prof. Whittier Married.

The Norman County Index gives an account of a seemingly mysterious marriage at Ada. The groom will be remembered as having rooms in the Reckitt block, this city, for three weeks recently. The professor had probably tired of single blessedness, and his native modesty accounts for his desire to keep the marriage secret. The Index says:

Judge Hunting was called upon last Saturday to perform a marriage ceremony that had something of a mysterious air about it. The names on the marriage license were F. W. Whittier and Miss Mary Hellen Connel, the bride claiming Norman county as her residence. The groom's desire to keep the matter quite set the gossips to wondering and their tongues to wagging, as to whether it was or wasn't a run-a-way match. Upon inquiring it was found that Mr. Whittier and lady came to Ada on the noon train from the north and it was at once surmised that they came from Crookston. Upon looking over the columns of the Crookston papers, the portrait of Prof. F. W. Whittier, the optician, and the gentleman married were found to be the same person. The professor's desire for secrecy is, of course, unexplained. The couple took the evening train for Minneapolis, apparently in a very happy frame of mind.

Thinks Holston Miscalculates.

Glyndon News:—The judicial district convention of the People's party is announced for June 1st at Ada. County Attorney Holston, of Polk, is an active aspirant for the nomination; also Frank Ives, of Crookston. We hazard a Clay county opinion, as judicial as we can make it for an old neighbor, to the effect that if Farmer Holston is turning his back on an easy re-election to the attorneyship for the chances he will take on the judgeship, his November crop will show that he miscalculated on the branch of agriculture commonly spoken of as the geese that lay the golden eggs.

A Stick of Timber.

There passed over the Burlington road on the 14th inst. to Chicago a stick of timber 104 feet long, 18x18 inches square. It was cut in the forest of Washington, that state's contribution to the World's fair. Four flat cars were required for its transportation. It was necessary to transport this piece of timber over the Burlington on its straight line, as other roads would swing it off the cars turning sharp curves.—La Crosse (Wis.) Chronicle.

Farmers not Interested.

A special to the St. Paul Dispatch from Redwood Falls, dated May 20th, says: "Doc Fish opened the farmers' institute this morning with a slim attendance; very few farmers are interested; Republicans have challenged them to a joint debate, with C. L. Smith, of Minneapolis, as their champion.

BLAINE'S GREAT POPULARITY.

Ex-Governor Dillingham Says the Country Admires a Statesman With Brains.

A Topeka telegram to the New York Press, under date of May 15th, says: Ex-Governor Dillingham arrived here to-day. In an interview he said: "Harrison is without doubt the choice of Vermont for the Presidential nomination. If Blaine's health was such that he could accept the nomination I believe it would be given to him by acclamation. It is wonderful what a great and growing popularity Blaine has with the people of this country.

"They seem to admire above all things a statesman of brains—one who can inaugurate great national politics such as American reciprocity. But if Secretary Blaine is not able to undertake the labors of a presidential canvass the nomination naturally falls to President Harrison, whose clean and patriotic administration commends itself to those without the party as well as to the Republicans. Such leaders as Senator Proctor, who was secretary of war under President Harrison, would of course lend all their strength to secure his nomination, but it has not been necessary so far, and the state will undoubtedly give him a handsome majority.

"I believe Senator Hill will be strong enough to do any other candidate of his party a great deal of harm if he chooses to do so. He is strongest in New York, but I think his presidential boom has almost subsided. Cleveland is stronger today for having written his anti-silver letter. There is nothing that makes a man so strong with the people as to convince them that he thinks for himself and acts in the line of his convictions regardless of personal consequences."

Leaders.

The world has always admired and followed leaders, without much philosophizing as to what qualities they had that made them so. They have been in all walks of life, civil, military and religious. Moses, Alexander, Socrates, Plato, Cæsar, Mahomet, Luther, Columbus, Napoleon, Newton, Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Livingstone—all have had their impress, not only on their own generation, but on all which have followed to this day. The influence of some has been for evil—more for good. Among the benefactors are the discoverers and pioneers, and in this category can be justly placed the Burlington system of railroads. They opened up the great state of Nebraska, reached first that storehouse of silver, Colorado, and are pioneers in all improvements which add to the comfort or safety of patrons. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company Makes a Cheap Excursion to Crookston in June.

Agent Sharkey advises us that the Northern Pacific railroad has made a rate of one fare for the round trip, Minneapolis to Crookston, during the time of the Republican convention in Minneapolis in June. These tickets will be good for use until June 25th. People desiring to visit our magnificent city and the Red River Valley should take advantage of the cheap railroad fare.

Notice for Bids for Park Site.

Notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received by the City Council until Tuesday, June 14th, for a site for a city park.

The Lieutenant's Intention.

DUBUQUE, Special, May 24.—Lieut. Hetherington and wife will proceed from San Francisco directly to her folks in Wilmington, Del. They will avoid Dubuque, and Mr. Hetherington's father will meet them in Chicago Saturday. He hopes to hear an affirmation of the report that Secretary Tracy will assign the lieutenant to duty at Bethlehem, Pa., as a steel inspector.

At a Normal School.

MANKATO, Minn., Special, May 24.—The graduating exercises of the model department of the normal school occurred to-day. This afternoon the field day sports took place at the fair grounds. Sunday Rev. A. R. Taylor delivered the baccalaureate sermon, and the evening before the public session of the literary society was held. The graduating exercises occur Wednesday evening.

Saloonkeepers Arrested.

WASHBURN, Wis., Special, May 24.—All saloons, six in number, at Iron River, this county, were pulled to-day by the sheriff for running gambling rooms. The trial is now in progress here. Much interest is felt as the arrests were made under the state law and are the first of the kind here.

These Will Sell Stamps.

WASHINGTON, Special, May 24.—Minnesota postmasters appointed: J. Stolberg, Harus, Chisago county; Mrs. B. Washburn, Pelican Rapids, Otter Tail county.

Old Soldiers Take a Hand.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 24.—A soldiers' movement has been started here which may have an important influence on the politics of the state. The plan is to organize veteran leagues all over the state and give them a distinctively political character. The soldiers are hopeful of building a powerful political machine.

IS SHE GUILTY?

Mrs. Russell's Case Goes to the Jury Without Argument by Either Side.

Judge Bailey Makes His Charge and the Jury Retired Early Last Night.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Special, May 24.—There was some surprise this afternoon when Mr. James, attorney for the accused in the Russell murder trial, announced that the defense had no rebuttal to put in, but there was genuine amazement when Judge Bailey immediately thereafter stated that the case would be given to the jury without argument by either side. The long suffering jurymen gazed in blank astonishment for a moment, and then a smile of gratification overspread the faces of the twelve men who went into the jury box twenty-eight days ago. The smile spread to the lawyers, and Mrs. Russell, who was quite cheerful in the afternoon, smiled also. Court adjourned to 7:30 p. m., the hour fixed for the delivery of the judge's charge.

The proposition to submit without argument came first from Mr. James, and District Attorney Frawley and Mr. Erwin acceded to it on the understanding that the facts in the case were not to be reviewed in the judge's charge. The defense this afternoon called Sheriff Flemming and made him tell a good deal of the story of the deception practiced on Mrs. Russell when she was arrested. Then District Attorney Frawley himself was placed on the stand and subjected to a hot cross-fire on the same subject. He frankly told the whole story and did not seem to care what was thought of it. He said in substance:

> I sent Russ Whipple to the jail that night to get what he could of the truth about this murder. I went to the central telephone office, told Whipple to go to the jail and tell Mrs. Russell he was a logger, named Sweeney, from Fifield and a friend, and to find out everything he could. I talked to Mrs. Russell by telephone, I represented myself as no particular person, but represented myself as being at Mr. Carson's. When she asked whether it was Carson or Buffinton I gave an evasive answer. I intended to deceive her.

The district attorney found out by this means that the defense would produce the package of poison found in the bed of the deceased, but the court would not admit evidence as to what Russell really said. The judge said he purposed to certify to the supreme court the QUESTIONABLE CIRCUMSTANCES of this case; the way in which Mrs. Russell was arrested; the manner in which she came to waive examination; the episode at the jail, and the publication of the inflammatory letter in a local paper the day before the trial began; whether Mrs. Russell, the accused, had had a constitutional trial, and whether the actions of the district attorney had not deprived her of it.

Mr. Erwin, for the state, tried to get in some evidence as to the good character of Sarah Halverson, the girl who Mrs. Russell's nephew, Elmer Horton, swore he saw sitting on the lap of Peter Erickson on the piazza one moonlight night. The court ruled the evidence out and so Sarah was put on the stand and said that Horton's story was false. Then Mr. Erwin put in evidence an almanac to show there was no moon that night. The judge examined the almanac and told Mr. Erwin that he had read the figures wrong and that the almanac proved, if it proved anything, that there certainly was a moon that night. When Prof. Mulliken of St. Paul was called by the state to testify as a handwriting expert THE JUDGE BATTED ERWIN all over the field once more. The court said, "You will have to show more facts than this, Mr. Erwin, before he can testify." Witness was shown Exhibit 8, and Mr. Erwin asked him to illustrate his evidence by comparisons on a blackboard. The judge said no such comparisons would be allowed. "Besides that," the judge added, "the witness has not shown himself to be an expert." Mr. Erwin and Mr. Frawley endeavored to argue the matter with the judge, but his honor said the matter was settled, and he wanted to hear no more about it. The witness, he said, was deficient in scientific and practical knowledge.

Mr. Erwin—Well, then we ask time to get an expert here.

The court—Well, I won't give you time.

The matter was argued further, but the judge sharply "closed the debate," and Mr. Erwin remarked "That is all then, professor," and Prof. Mulliken left the stand. Mr. Erwin then called Prof. Curtiss and asked him if in his opinion the handwriting on the package of poison and that of Adam Erickson were the same and witness said he thought not. Curtiss was a witness for the defense.

THE JURY CHARGED.

At 8 o'clock to-night in a court room crowded to suffocation the jury stood up to listen to Judge Bailey's charge in the Russell case. As the opening sentences describing the crime of murder by person were read tears filled the eyes of Mrs. Russell and she partially buried her face in a handkerchief. Later she rallied, and by the time the jury had retired she was composedly chatting with her husband. Judge Bailey in his charge called attention to the fact that the character of the evidence relied on by the state to prove the charge against the accused was presumptively circumstantial as distinguished from evidence conclusively circumstantial; also that the jury must not infer, even though the accused had love for the husband of the deceased, that such love was a sufficient motive or that it would naturally prompt to the crime of murder. Reference is made in the charge to the accusation by the defense against the district attorney, and the judge said if it was made to appear that the prosecuting officer had suppressed or manufactured any evidence or attempted it then the whole testimony on which a conviction is asked may be thus tainted so as to be unreliable. At the same time, he said, the law presumed the district attorney innocent of any willful or guilty intent. The jury retired at 8:25 p. m.

MARION JUNCTION, S. D., Special, May 24.—An incendiary fire last night caused a total loss to Louis Seward of his store and stock of general merchandise of $3,800; insurance, $950.

Lincoln County Prohibitionists.

LAKE BENTON, Minn., Special, May 24.—The Prohibition county convention for Lincoln county was held here to-day. M. F. Woodard and F. J. Carlisle were elected delegates to the state convention, and J. M. Addington and John Stegner were chosen delegates the congressional convention. Prohibitionists who went with the Alliance two years ago were noticed in the convention. A new county central committee was elected, and after considerable discussion the convention decided to put a county ticket in the field this year. At night Rev. J. H. Hector addressed one of the largest gatherings ever held here.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XII.—CONTINUED.

Again I perceived broken brake, and, following the line, I threaded my way between the trees upon the slope of the hill until I emerged from the wood upon the high bank that edged the Abbey road at that part. It was as nearly as possible the point where Van Hoeck had stopped me in the morning, upon hearing Brace in our rear. Looking up the road, I saw the finger-post at the cross-roads; looking down, I saw that which took my breath away with amazement,—Brace was trudging along the road toward the Abbey, with Van Hoeck holding his arm on one side, and Lola his hand on the other,—an incomprehensible picture of unity, friendly assistance, and reliance.

It was true that, without assistance, Van Hoeck could not have found his way along the road, and very possible that, without the restraint of her father's hand, Lola would not have walked by his side; but all doubt as to the existence of a friendly understanding between the two men was dispelled from my mind by what followed. Arrived opposite the bridle path leading up into the wood, they stopped, and consultation ensued between the two men. I could not hear their voices at that distance, but I saw by their gesticulations that they were discussing some point; it ended by Brace going to the side of the road, and craning his neck to see if any one were in sight. I crouched down beside the thicket, which partly concealed me.

When I cautiously raised my head and looked again, Brace, still standing opposite the bridle way, was drawing his arm out of the sandy bank that there skirted the road.

I ducked my head, as once more he peered to the right and left. They were gone, all three, when I looked again.

When I thought it safe to venture, I went to the spot where Brace had stood. There was a rabbit-hole in the sandy cutting, partly hidden by the training growth from the overhanging edge. I took off my coat, turned back my sleeve, thrust in my arm, and drew out—the leather case in which the diamond had been taken from my wrist. It was empty.

I again thrust my arm in and explored the hole, thinking—though it was little likely—that the diamond had slipped out of the case, or been put in separately. It was a kind of cul-de-sac,—the earth had fallen in from above, and blocked the passage at less than the length of my arm from the entrance; but I did not give up the search until I was absolutely certain that the Great Hesper was not there. It was not probable they would place the diamond in such an open place; the leather case was different. It was unsafe to keep that, but it was of little consequence where they abandoned it. But why had they taken the diamond from the case? and what had they done with it?

A clue to this mystery also, I discovered before long.

When I got back to the Abbey, Brace, Van Hoeck and Lola were in the library with the police officer, Sir Edmund, Mr. Wray,—his lawyer,—and a couple of friends, justices of the peace, who had been brought there by the rumors which were already widely spread.

Lola was still under examination. She was stubbornly silent. It was with the greatest difficulty that any response to the questions put could be drawn from her. But she admitted seeing the man drop from the oriel; and, asked if it was one of the servants, she replied firmly, "No." But more than this could not be got out of her on this point.

To the inquiry how she had discovered the means of getting from the bay into the oriel, for it was by that way she had come to my assistance, she replied that she "had seen it done before," but she would not say whom she had seen.

The police officer asked me to go into the adjoining dining-room with him.

"May I ask," he said, "If you have any reason to suspect that you have been robbed by your friends,—your partners in the diamond? Because they profess to have been in the woods all the morning, whereas I have good cause to believe that they have been in the town of Southampton part of the time."

"Are you sure of that?"

"I will take my o-th that I saw the little savage in the red petticoat in the High Street as I started to come here."

CHAPTER XIII.

"I advise you, sir," said the officer, "to take the advice of Sir Edmund's solicitor, Mr. Wray."

I agreed, and he called in the lawyer. I told him, without reserve, all that had happened, showing him the leather case I had taken from the hole were Brace had placed it.

"A couple of cunning scoundrels!" he exclaimed; "their pretended suspicion of each other was, of course, intended to blind you to their complicity, while each, by implicating the other, diverted suspicion from himself."

"I was never in my life so completely deceived," I said. "Brace seemed to me the embodiment of rough honesty. I liked the man, and it was a painful shock to me when I found him unfaithful, and a thief."

"He is worse than that, Mr. Thorne; he is a murderer at heart; for there can be no doubt it was he who attempted your life; it was a sheer impossibility for the other man to do it. We have heard the story of the robbery from Sir Edmund. The intelligence that planned the attack was doubtless Van Hoeck's. He looks like a man of subtle intellect. I do not see what other part he could have played in this affair."

"Sir Edmund told me, sir," said the officer,, "that, on your return from the left wing, you heard snoring in Brace's room?"

"I certainly did."

"That could very well have been Van Hoeck, who had taken Brace's place while he slipped off into your room,—another proof that the two were eating together."

"Precisely," said Mr. Wray; and then, with an air of business,—"Well, now, what is to be done? that is the first question. The evidence is insufficient to charge either of the men even with being concerned in the robbery. The leather case proves nothing. They might declare they found it empty, and have concealed it through fear of accusation, or they might all three swear your statement to be false, and absolutely accuse you of being yourself the thief. And, until we can substantiate the charge by positive proof, we must be careful to conceal our suspicions from them. If they think they are likely to be brought to justice they will quit the country by the first steamer that leaves Southampton,—and we can not stop them. The thing that must be done at once is to search for the diamond. That is your affair," he said, addressing the officer; "undoubtedly they have placed it somewhere in Southampton, in readiness to take if flight becomes necessary."

"I'll have all the kens searched before the morning."

"That is part of your business, of course. At the same time, I would suggest that it is of far more importance to watch the men themselves. Van Hoeck would not trust the diamond to the keeping of ordinary thieves' receivers: it would be safer merely laid under a plant in the gardens down by the dock. You may be sure he has the ingenuity to suggest a safe place for its keeping."

"I'll have some plain-clothes men on the first thing to-morrow morning, and I'd better go and telegraph to Scotland Yard at once."

"As soon as possible. But not to alarm the men, you had better make a pretense of continuing your investigations, and avail yourself of some plausible pretext for returning to Southampton. Everything at this moment depends upon keeping Van Hoeck and Brace in ignorance of our suspicion. And with that view, he added, turning to me, "I counsel you, Mr. Thorne, to conceal your real feelings. Not one of these three ought to see any change in your demeanor toward them."

This was sound advice, and I recognized the importance of conforming with it; but I am the worst actor in the world where my feelings are concerned, and my very soul revolted against the men who had plotted together to take my life from the mere insensate greed of gain. I felt more bitterly toward Brace than toward his accomplice, not because I thought Van Hoeck less guilty, but because I had felt more kindly toward the Judge, to whom I seemed linked by the brotherhood of labor.

I kept out of his way when we returned to the library, and avoided looking at him, lest he should perceive that I was no longer his friend. But I knew he had his keen eyes upon me, and was reading the signs of my newly born aversion, and this made my acting worse.

When the officer had completed his investigation, he said sagaciously, as he closed his notebook:

"I have sufficient information for my present purpose. I may not be able to discover the perpetrators of this outrage and robbery immediately, but I think I shall be in a position to tell you something about the lost diamond within twenty-four hours."

Sir Edmund accompanied him to the door. When he returned and took the seat he had occupied at the head of the long table, Brace rose, and, placing himself at the opposite end, inclined his head first to the Baronet, then to the right, and to the left.

"Squire and gen'lemen of this committee," he said, "I don't want to speak disrespec'ful of the police; but the intelligent officer who has jest left us, as if he'd got hold of the tail end of a rocket, and meant follerin' it right up, and holdin' tight on till it bust, ain't goin' to do any good for hisself or any one else in this business. The big diamond's lost, end he ain't goin' to find it in twenty-four hours, nor in twenty-four years. Ef it was a haystack, I don't say but what, with the help of Providence—and a good lot of it—he might be up to the job he's ondertook. But it ain't a haystack. End ef he was to grind up the whole of this country end every blessed thing upon it small, buddled it in a clean flume, and sifted the tailin' careful, he wouldn't find it. End these bein' my views, it stands to reason that I ain't goin' to hang about here lookin' at the place where I've come to grief, like an old female what's slipped off the side walk on a bit of orange peel. With your permission, Squire, I'm going away right off."

"I can not stop you, Brace, even if I wished to," replied Sir Edmund, who, be it observed knew nothing of the suspicion against the Judge. "I am inclined to think that you will be happier in seeking a new fortune than in lingering about with the faint hope of recovering the old. If the diamond is found, you will hear of it whereever you may be. Are you going to look for another diamond?"

"No, Squire; I'm goin' to find that, please God," Brace, replied; then, after a moment's pause, he said, "There's a matter of business to finish up before I go, sir: all the money I have in my pocket belongs to you."

"It is a loan; keep it, Brace,—keep it until you are in a position to pay me; and I hope, for your sake, that time may not be far hence."

"You're grit, Squire,—real grit! I won't refuse your kindness. I shall need a bit to start with. But I'll ask you, sir, to hold this till I claim it."

He went round to Sir Edmund.

"What is it, Brace?" asked the Baronet, taking the paper Brace drew from his pocket. He found it was the Judge's copy of agreement. "Oh, I do not need this, my good fellow," he protested; "I have your I O U, and that is as good now as ever it was."

"If you won't keep it for your own security, Squire, I'll ask you to keep it for my own. It's a kinder ce'tif'cate, and if any one hes got any thin' to say agen me when I'm not here to defend myelf, I'll ask you to let that up. Good-bye, Squire."

He held out his hand, and said, as Sir Edmund shook it cordially, "Thank you, sir, thank you! You are grit!"

He strode down the room, brushing past Van Hoeck, who sat immovable and silent as though he were carved in stone, and came to where I was standing. My face must have told him that my heart had hardened. But he stretched out his hand, and said hoarsely,—

"Say good-bye to us, pardner."

I folded my arms and shook my head. He dropped his hand by his side.

"Prehaps you're right," he said remorsefully, "prehaps you're not. Time will show that I've got a clean conscience, if heaven is just." He paused; then in a still lower tone, and with an accent of reproach, he added, "Say yer hope so, pardner, say yer hope so."

"I hope so," I said.

He shook his head ruefully.

"'Taint yer old voice, Gentleman Thorne.—there's no heart in it. We've roughed it together, and we've shared our bacca out there, end,"—his chin twitched convulsively, and turning away, he muttered, "It takes all the pluck outer me to part like this."

Lola was standing in a corner of the room by the door, with her eyes fixed upon me. Brace was about to pass through on his way out, he caught up her wrist savagely in his hand. As savagely she tore it away and in her turn came and stood before me.

"I'm a-goin," she said.

"And a good riddance," I thought, exasperated by the belief that she knew where the diamond was and could reveal the whole mystery if she chose.

"You ain't goin' to let me go like him are yer?" she asked; "you ain't goin' to let me go without sayin' good-bye?"

There was deep pathos in her voice. The friendless little savage loved me. She had saved my life. My heart smote me for forgetting that. I gave her my two hands; she drew them round her slight body, and then flinging her arms about my neck she whispered, with tender impulsiveness:

"Shall I be good? Shall I tell you where it is?"

But just at that moment her fine ear caught the rustle of a woman's dress, and, catching sight of Edith, who was entering from the dining-room, she started back.

Scowling over her shoulder at Edith, her eyes aflame with hate, she said, in a voice from which all tenderness had gone:

"For her sake? No!" and without looking again at me, she went from the room and joined her father.

Then forget to say, "O this is a gloomy day."

Don't say, "It will be many a day before you will wear these boots again."

Remember, that although starch has its uses, there are invalids who cannot endure the rustle of aprons or skirts.

The Speed of Fish.

For long distance swimming the shark may be said to hold the record, as he can outstrip the swiftest ships, apparently without effort, swimming and playing around them, and ever on the look out for prey. Any human being falling overboard in shark-frequented waters has very little chance of escape, so rapid is the action of the shark, the monster of the deep. The dolphin, another fast-swimming fish, is credited with a speed of considerably over 20 miles an hour. For short distances the salmon can outstrip every other fish, accomplishing its 25 miles an hour with ease. The Spanish mackerel is one of the fastest of food fishes and cuts the water like a yacht. Predatory fishes are generally the fastest swimmers.

A Remarkable Bridge.

One of the highest bridges in the world is now under construction over the canon of the Pecos River on a cut-off line which the Southern Pacific Company is building from Helmet to Shumla, Texas. The "Railroad and Engineering Journal" says this viaduct is 2,180ft. long and 328ft. above the level of the river. It consists of 48 spans, alternately 65ft. and 35ft. long, supported on steel towers, with the exception of a few at the end, which rests on masonry piers. The 65ft. spans are deck trusses, and the 35ft. spans, over the towers, are plate girders. The central span, over the river, is a cantilever 185ft. long. The highest tower is 321ft. high. The towers are all 10ft. by 35ft. at the top. The Phœnix Bridge Company is building the bridge.

THE VETERAN'S STORY.

He tells once more the tale of strife,
When men fought men, and war was rife,
And naught so cheap as human life.

And around his knee each coming year
His children's children pause to hear
Of times when men turned pale with fear;

Of heroes who when called to fight
Saw naught but duty shining bright,
And gave their lives for home and right.

LOVE AND LOYALTY.

A MEMORIAL DAY STORY BY JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE.

[Copyright. All rights reserved.]

“YOU say you love me, Clarence, and yet you refuse to join the south in her great crisis. We are pledged to one another, and yet you would desert me and the cause I hold so sacred.” As she spoke she disengaged herself from his embrace and burst into tears.

“Do not weep, dear Clarisse. It makes me wretched. I do love you passionately, devotedly; but I cannot abandon my country, even for you. Patriotism, honor demands that I should not. You could not love me if I were dishonorable.”

“Dishonorable? Honor should follow your heart. If you're not with the south you're against me. You must decide between me and the north. I am a true daughter of Louisiana. I will sacrifice my love on her altar. Decide!” As she spoke her anger arose; her dark eyes flashed.

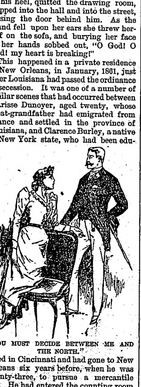
“This seems more like temper than love, Clarisse. Do you really mean what you say?”

“Absolutely. Decide!”

He looked in her face, pale with emotion and steadily hardening with intense resolve. The tears had gone, but their stain was on her cheek. She stood firm as a statue, her eyes all ablaze. No sign of relenting there.

Still gazing at her fixedly, he said slowly, “I have decided.” Then turned on his heel, quitted the drawing room, stepped into the hall and into the street, closing the door behind him. As the sound fell upon her ears she threw herself on the sofa, and burying her face in her hands sobbed out, “O God! O God! my heart is breaking!”

This happened in a private residence in New Orleans, in January, 1861, just after Louisiana had passed the ordinance of secession. It was one of a number of similar scenes that had occurred between Clarisse Dunoyer, aged twenty, whose great-grandfather had emigrated from France and settled in the province of Louisiana, and Clarence Burley, a native of New York state, who had been educated in Cincinnati and had gone to New Orleans six years before, when he was twenty-three, to pursue a mercantile life. He had entered the counting room of Pierre Dunoyer, a commission merchant, and had risen to a confidential place and had become an intimate friend of the family, with every prospect of being a partner in the firm of Dunoyer & Co.



“YOU MUST DECIDE BETWEEN ME AND THE NORTH.”

Thrown into close relations with Clarisse, a handsome, intense brunette, with many traits of her ancestral race, though distinctively an American, he and she had naturally fallen in love with each other; how or when neither of them could have told. She was a fiery little creature, enthusiastic in any cause she espoused, and a Louisianian, as she had often said, to the core of her being. He had sympathized with the south, especially since he had determined to make his home there, and had convinced himself that the north had, to an extent, invaded her rights. He did not believe, however, that there would be civil war, even after half a dozen states had formally seceded from the Union. If there should be he felt that he could not ally himself against the government. And when ordered, in an imperious manner, to decide between the south and the girl to whom he was engaged, he had decided as we have seen.

His course had been quickened by his consciousness of what seemed of late to be an overbearing disposition on her part toward him. Aware that her father was rich and that he was comparatively poor, he may have been suspicious that this was the cause of her arrogance. At least he thought he had given her ample opportunity to recall her dictatorial speech, and she had scorned him. “She cannot love me, after all,” he said to himself, as he walked briskly away from her father's house. “If she did, she would not, she could not, have driven me away so.”

Clarisse would have run after him to beg him to return three minutes following her outburst. But it was too late. The closing of the street door was the knell of her hope. Still lying on the sofa she groaned out: “I've destroyed my happiness. I shall never see him again—never, never!”

* * * * * *

Clarence Burley lost no time in adjusting his affairs with the firm. His expressed resolution to go north amazed and enraged the paternal Dunoyer, who was delighted to learn of the high and proper spirit his daughter had displayed to her recreant lover. Burley returned to Cincinnati, observing with deep concern, wherever the boat landed as she steamed up to Cairo, the excitement and belligerence in all the river towns.

He was in painful perplexity until the news of the firing on Sumter had electrified the land. That aroused every spark of patriotism in his breast, as it did in myriads of others, and he immediately volunteered. Within a few weeks he quitted the city as lieutenant of a company in an Ohio infantry regiment, and performed military service under General McClellan in West Virginia. During the campaign there, in which skirmishes were exaggerated into battles, he gained no little knowledge of the duties of a soldier, and was promoted to a captaincy. He learned one thing—that he could preserve his coolness under fire, and that what is called courage is largely getting accustomed to danger. At first he had imagined that every shot brought down a man, but experience taught him how many bullets are wasted, and how many men in imminent peril escape unhurt. His regiment was transferred with McClellan to Virginia, where he saw war in a grander and more terrible form, especially after the commander in chief had been superseded, than he had done before.

The hottest engagement in which he took part as major—I have heard him describe it—was that of Gettysburg, which, with the capture of Vicksburg, should have terminated the conflict, for after that the cause of the Confederacy was hopeless. If the enemy had been less desperate nearly two years' fighting and hundreds of thousands of lives might have been saved. The southerners, like all true Americans, did not know when they were beaten; or if they did know it they stubbornly refused to make acknowledgment. It was valor run mad, but it was supremely unwise.

Burley, who is a very good fellow, as he was a gallant officer, said to me one evening, when we were indulging in reminiscences of the war, that he had no expectation of surviving Gettysburg. “I had a kind of presentiment that I should die on that field, though I regarded presentiments as rank superstitions. Nevertheless, I could not throw it off. The idea was not nearly so unpleasant as I had fancied it would be. In fact, I doubt if the assurance of death troubles us much when we have once accepted it. To accept death is to die. So I may be said to have fallen then and there. I reflected that very rarely can a man perish in a good cause, and that when he does so perish he is very fortunate. He may be a very ordinary mortal, but death under such circumstances makes him a hero and embalms his memory.

“Gettysburg was a big fight, and no mistake. Lee had nearly 100,000 men, the best and bravest he had ever led. They were confident of victory, and that victory would realize their long cherished hope. It was their first invasion of the north, which had repeatedly been urged by the southern press, and they were convinced that it would prove their crowning triumph. The 4th of July, 1863, as they fondly imagined, would prove their new day of independence—independence of the detested north.”

CHEERING HIS REGIMENT.

* * * * * *

“On the first day,” said Major Burley, “my regiment was with Howard's command after Reynolds had been killed, and we were successful at the outset by our superior numbers, taking many prisoners, but when Hill came up from Chambersburg and Ewell from Carlisle, with their forces, they drove us by their vastly greater strength. It was very warm work, the heat intense, the dust choking. Our brave fellows fought like tigers. They disputed every inch of ground, but they were fearfully overmatched. They were steadily beaten back by the power of numbers. The enemy kept up a terrific fire. Men were dropping all around me. A tall fellow near me, trying in vain to stem the martial tide, and crying: ‘Stand firm! Sell your lives dearly!’ was suddenly silent. I turned just in time to see that a cannon ball had carried away his head, and his shattered trunk fell, with a great gush of blood, under my feet.

“A Confederate colonel, mounted and cheering his regiment on my right, was blown to pieces by a bursting shell. It seemed as if no one could live in such a fire of shell. The enemy suffered as terribly as we. A musket ball tore through my cap; another passed through my sleeve at almost the same moment. ‘When,’ I thought, ‘will it be my head or heart?’ Destiny must have miscarried, or I should be lying among the slain. Order and discipline finally gave way. We retreated in wild confusion through Gettysburg, having lost enormously in prisoners, and reaching Culp's hill, south of the town, rallied our broken columns and occupied a strong position.

“The next day Meade, who had remained ignorant of the action at Gettysburg, came up with the bulk of his army, Hancock having decided that there was the place to give battle. Lee confronted us with the mass of his men, and the pounding was harder than ever. Our forces occupied most of Cemetery ridge, and Lee held Seminary ridge opposite. Between the ridges in the valley and on the slope of Cemetery ridge the battle raged that day and the next. In the center of Cemetery ridge, where the land was low, Sickles lost his leg and his division was fearfully cut up. Warren occupied Round Top, which by accident we had overlooked, and repeated though unsuccessful attempts to expel him were made until dark. The day was spent in a series of desperate assaults and repulses, and the carnage was great, but nothing definite was gained by either side.

“The third day Lee continued his attack on our right and left, but evidently underrated our strength and determined to make his strong assault on our center. Meade very early took the initiative and drove Ewell from the place he had gained on our right. But as this important result was never communicated to Lee, his movements suffered in consequence. There is no rational doubt that a series of Confederate mistakes caused his retreat and the sacrifice of the southern cause. Pickett's charge was the crowning blunder, and Lee was avowedly responsible therefor.

“Much of Cemetery ridge, which we held, is so rough that we could not employ artillery to advantage, so that, with 200 guns, only eighty were used. Seminary ridge, on the contrary, was very favorable for artillery, and the enemy placed 120 guns there and directed them against us; but our infantry was so well protected by the crest that they mostly kept out of harm's way. Our chief of artillery after awhile stopped firing, except occasionally, awaiting the next movement of the enemy. Lee interpreted this as the silencing of our batteries, and ordered Pickett to charge with his 20,000 Virginia veterans, who had not been in action. Lee intended to support them with his artillery; but discovered too late to remedy the defect that ammunition was lacking.

“Pickett's division moved down the slope and across the valley, only to be met with a fatal fire from our batteries all along the line. Never did men show more intrepidity. They went steadily on in the face of certain death. They were enfiladed; great gaps in their ranks were made by the awful fire. They gradually melted away. Enemies as they were, I pitied and honored the gallant fellows—unflinching to the last. They charged over a low stone wall, behind which Gibbons' men lay, into the mouth of our batteries, and fought for some time with pistols and clubbed muskets. But our troops concentrated upon them and drove them down the slope, completely commanded by our fire. Unable either to advance, retreat or stand still, the poor fellows threw themselves down and held up their hands as sign of surrender. Very few escaped. It was a piteous sight, a horrible carnage. I forgot myself in that dreadful hour, thinking only of the needless slaughter. That was the last great action.

“On the second night the Confederate army began to retreat in the midst of a storm. While we held councils of war the enemy slipped away. We might have crushed him completely and shortened the conflict by two years. Gettysburg sealed the doom of the south.”

* * * * * * *

Burley had confided to me his broken engagement with Clarisse Dunoyer, which made him very unhappy, but which the stirring events of the long strife prevented from preying on his mind. The surrender at Appomattox came, and he had received but two flesh wounds; both soon healed.

He went soon after into business in Chicago, where I encountered him seven years later in Wabash avenue. He told me he was married, whereupon I spoke of Clarisse, and the close of the comedy, which might have been a tragedy.

“You can't expect a man,” he said, “to be loyal to a woman who has virtually thrust him out of doors.” To which I agreed.

He invited me to visit him, and I accepted. I found his wife gentle and interesting, and his two small children—a boy and girl—intelligent and attractive. They appeared to be a most harmonious family, and I ventured the remark that he was probably as happy as if he had married Clarisse.

“By the by,” I continued, “your wife must somewhat resemble your Louisiana sweetheart from what you have told me of her. She is small, slight, dark eyed and a brunette. I imagine you may have been drawn to her on account of this resemblance. I have known such cases.”

“My marriage was as romantic as my earlier courtship. By a strange coincidence my wife is also a Louisianian, and I met her at the end of the war. Her father, once rich, had died poor; her nearest of kin had passed away, and she was earning her own livelihood by teaching music. I tried to help her—I could easily do so, for I had made money in cotton, and my sympathy soon ripened into love. Adversity had developed and enlarged her. She is as strong as she is noble, as you will see when you know her better.”

“But what became, Burley, of poor Clarisse Dunoyer? I confess I feel a deep interest in her. You should have sought her out. I am sure she loved you.”

“Clarisse Dunoyer was lost”——

“Poor girl! I had feared catastrophe for her. How was she lost?”

“In Clarisse Burley, the mother of my children.”

Rural Memorial Day Preparations.

Memorial Day in the hamlets of northern Vermont is a joyful festival, anticipated with delight for weeks previous and remembered with joy for days subsequent to its occurrence.

The brass band has practiced a dirge for weeks; the choir, too, rehearses the “Star Spangled Banner,” “America” and “Marching Through Georgia,” and the minister burns the midnight oil.

The undertaker is the commissary general, and upon him devolves the most important of the elaborate preparations. He it is who goes about the town collecting the little flags which are loaned for the occasion, and early on Memorial Day he goes to the little cemetery or “burying ground” and plants them above the sunken graves where sleep the honored dead.—New York Sun.

OUR TWO OPINIONS.

Us two wuz boys when we fell out—
Nigh to the age of my youngest now;
Don't rec'lect what 'twuz about—
Some small difference, I'll allow;
Lived next neighbors twenty years,
A-hatin each other, me 'nd Jim—
He havin his opinyin uv me
'Nd I havin my opinyin uv him.

Grew up together 'nd wouldn't speak,
Courted sisters 'nd marr'd 'em too;
'Tended same meetin house oncet a week,
A-hatin each other through 'nd through!
But when Abe Linkern asked the west
F'r soldiers, we answered, me 'nd Jim—
He havin his opinyin uv me
'Nd I havin my opinyin of him.

But down in Tennessee one night
Ther wuz sound uv firin fur away,
'Nd the sergeant allowed ther'd be a fight
With the Johnnie Rebs some time nex' day.
'Nd as I wuz thinkin uv Lizzie 'nd home
Jim stood afore me, long 'nd slim—
He havin his opinyin uv me
'Nd I havin my opinyin uv him.

Seemed like we knew there wuz goin to be Serious trouble f'r me 'nd him—
Us two shuck hands, did Jim 'nd me,
But never a word from me or Jim!
He went his way 'nd I went mine,
'Nd into the battle's roar went we—
I havin my opinyin uv Jim
'Nd he havin his opinyin uv me!

Jim never come back from the war again,
But I hain't forgot that last, last night
When, waitin f'r orders, us two men
Made up 'nd shuck hands, afore the fight;
'Nd, after it all, it's soothin to know
That here I be 'nd yonder's Jim—
He havin his opinyin uv me
'Nd I havin my opinyin uv him!

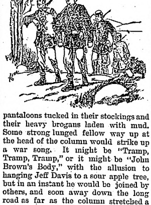
Singing on the March.

I have been with the column marching along roads which were muddy, when the men looked like anything but human beings as they crawled along, splashed from head to foot with dirt, their clothing disarranged, their pantaloons tucked in their stockings and their heavy brogans laden with mud. Some strong lunged fellow way up at the head of the column would strike up a war song. It might be “Tramp, Tramp, Tramp,” or it might be “John Brown's Body,” with the allusion to hanging Jeff Davis to a sour apple tree, but in an instant he would be joined by others, and soon away down the long road as far as the column stretched a mighty chorus would be going up, while the men would brace up, their eyes brighten and their footsteps lose the weary movement as they kept step to the music.

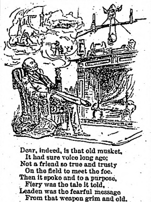


Twenty-five thousand men stretched out over a long distance in marching, and you can imagine the effect of such a chorus of male voices.—Volunteer.

A Relic.

On the wall above the mantel
There's an ancient weapon hung,
Tarnished, dusty, old and rusty,
Springfield pattern, sixty-one;
And the spiders, all unconscious
Of its power, upon it crawl,
And have webbed it, breech and muzzle,
Where it hangs upon the wall.

Could it speak 'twould tell a story
That would startle young and old,
Tales of long and weary marches
Could that weapon true unfold;
Tales of battles, tales of carnage
That would blanch the bravest cheek,
From Bull Run to Appomattox,
Could that ancient weapon speak.



Dear, indeed, is that old musket,
It had sure voice long ago;
Not a friend so true and trusty
On the field to meet the foe.
Then it spoke and to a purpose,
Fiery was the tale it told,
Leaden was the fearful message
From that weapon grim and old.

And I love it—who can blame me?
It and I were closest chums—
Old and rusty, tried and trusty,
Best of all your make of guns.
Comrades dead and comrades living,
It reminds me of you all:
Elbows touch whene'er I view it
As it hangs upon the wall.

Brings again your kindly faces
From that distant long ago,
When we faced the storm of battle
On the field to meet the foe.
On the wall above the mantel
There's an ancient weapon hung,
Tarnished, dusty, worn and rusty,
Springfield pattern, sixty-one.

THE LAST VETERAN.

ARE ONE-HALF THE SOLDIERS OF 1861-5 NOW LIVING?

Some Rather Melancholy Facts—Average Age of the Veterans—How Few Generals Still Live—Estimated Number of Actual Men Enlisted—Who Will Be the Last?

We are on the down hill side. We are looking toward sunset. The shadows lengthen fast and already to most of us the years since we were mustered out seem longer, as they certainly are more numerous, than the years before our enlistment. The youngest boy who could by any possibility have carried a gun in the great conflict is now far into middle life, he realizes that his golden prime is in the past and is warned every day by some physical symptom that decay has begun.

Be it that his service was the shortest and easiest possible. Be it that he sustained no injury, or even that he gained health and strength by the open air life of the camp, as a few unquestionably did; nevertheless, by the ordinary laws of mortality he can count on but a few years more. The individual feels this. The statistician knows that by the established laws of vital chances the percentage of deaths among the veterans must from now on increase at an arithmetical ratio. A glance at any life insurance table will teach one that.

And it was probably the youngest Grand Army ever mustered. The average age of the veterans at muster out was but a fraction over twenty-four years, while that of the Confederates is believed to have been thirty-six. The lad of twenty-four in 1865 is now fifty-one—and to most men fifty-one is old. A careful analysis of dates presented by several Grand Army posts shows that the average age of the veterans at death is but fifty-six and a half years. If any one mourns that the pension appropriation increases so rapidly there is consolation for him—it cannot last long. After 1893 it will scarcely be possible for the present pension force to “pass cases” as fast as pensioners will die.

And how many still remain? We cannot judge by our generals, for their age was greater; but of all who reached that rank how small a proportion is still with us! Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, McDowell, McClellan, Hancock, Meade, Burnside, Logan, Hooker—where are they? And of those only a little less celebrated, yet including such glorious men as Garfield, Hackleman, Granger, Heintzelman, Geary, Rousseau, Custer, Kilpatrick, Cruft, Ames and so many more that this column would scarcely contain their names, it would seem that not more than a third are still with us.

Yet how very young many of them now seem in the retrospect. McPherson was killed at thirty-five. Slocum was a corps commander at thirty-two. Reynolds was a major general at thirty-nine. Ames, Custer, Kilpatrick and McKenzie were brigadiers at twenty-six. Corse was but twenty-nine when he won immortality at Altoona. Garfield was a major general at thirty-one and Grenville Dodge at thirty-three, while Judge Gresham and John Beatty were brigadiers at thirty-two. We have been joking about “Old Ben Butler” ever since the war, yet he was but forty-two when he commanded the Army of the Gulf. Why, they were all mere boys!

A curiosity hunter, after long search, has declared that the very last men who were in any battle of the American Revolution died in 1863. Two fourteen-year-old boys who went from western North Carolina and took part in the battle of King's Mountain (Oct. 7, 1780) died in the year named—one in east Tennessee, the other in Indiana. Possibly others may have survived these, but be that as it may, the time is at hand when the veterans will be but a handful in any neighborhood.

Statisticians who have made a careful study of the percentage of re-enlistments, taking specimen counties as a basis, have concluded that the number of actual men in the Union army, counting each but once, was about 1,900,000. It is scarcely possible that one half of these are alive today. Of the full regiments of 1861 there is not one, so far as I can learn, that has been able to get 300 together at any reunion for years.

Yes—spin out the thread of life as they may there must come a time when in your city or state there will be a “last man of the Union army.” Possibly some slender stripling of 1861-5 will halt feebly along your streets as late as 1945, venturing out only when the sun shines most cheerily, and as he passes children will gaze and wonder, and men and women will repeat what they heard their grandparents say—how those grandparents as children saw the parades of 1865, and “how that old, old fellow looked when he came home from the war.”

J. H. BEADLE.

A Thought for Memorial Day.

I know not why this silence so presses on my brain. I sit among the graves of departed comrades of the war for the Union. I feel the touch of unseen hands. I hear voices none other hears. I sit enchanted and overawed. I sit alone, and yet in innumerable company of silent men, as one dwelling among tombs. The old days come back to me. I can hear the rustle of the old flag. So it rustled and rolled above us a quarter of a century ago, as the cannon and musketry of battle accentuated its rhythmic flow and the flash of war glanced across its glorious folds. Its stars glow as brightly, but the young hearts that beat below all its majestic motion and music are still in the grave.—Private Dalzell.

Rest in Peace.

Think not of the rising sun,
For, at dawning to assail ye,
Here no bugles sound reveille.

Everybody seems to be in attending court.

Court convened on Monday morning with a large calendar.

E. S. Corser is up from Minneapolis looking after his big farm.

Tommy Nicholson has gone for a two months visit to Toronto.

Geo. M. Swift came down from Mentor on Saturday to attend court.

Dept. Sheriff Losey made a flying trip to Thief River Falls last week.

Mrs. Falk is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. S. Rosenthal, in this city.

Alderman & Sylvester are pushing the work on their new machinery depot.

Prof. Wishard says the seeding is all done along the east side of Polk County.

And now the ice wagon makes its daily rounds to refresh our parching citizens.

W. H Averill the leading lawyer of Fosston, is in the city attending court this week.

Judge Mills is crowding the work in district court so as to get through as soon as possible.

Mrs. Horace Lucken arrived from Ashby on Saturday for a visit with O. H. Lucken and wife.

From all over the United States comes reports of bad weather, floods and storms. Our country will compare favorably.

"More transfers of real estate within the past two months than for the past six years," said E. M. Walsh, the real estate man.

John Mikulecky represents the town of Tabor on jury duty this week. John says he has his seeding all done except about 35 acres.

Hon. W. D. Carlton is in from Angus this week attending court. Carlton says the seeding is progressing nicely on the north side.

Eli Steenerson has taken possession of his new office on Main street where he may be found ready at any time to talk politics or business.

J. B. McManus tells the JOURNAL that he has 125 acres sowed to wheat and will keep pegging away until the 10th of June if he does not finish sooner.

T. J. McAdam the genial mayor of East Grand Forks, gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call on Tuesday. Mac is one of the rustlers that build up a country.

Miss Clara Aaker came over from Grand Forks last Friday for a few days visit with her parents and friends. She is engaged as teacher in the Lutheran college there at present.

W. W. Wilson a genial Polk county old-timer gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call on Tuesday morning. W. W. is one of the boys who did good service for Uncle Sam in the sixties.

Engineer Lew. Harmon dropped in on his old friends last Saturday for a short visit. Lew. is running on a road in the state of Washington and says he likes that climate very well.

The high water proves a boon to lumbermen. Bagley's drive is now expected to arrive inside of 15 days, very much sooner than it has been thought possible for it before the raise in the river.

O. S. Johnson told the JOURNAL on Saturday last that he has 175 acres sown already and expects to get all in that he had calculated on. He killed nine wolves last week and raked in $27 bounty.

Mrs. Dr. Mayer, of Montevideo, arrived last week on a visit to her sister, Mrs. W. D. Scott and friends in the city. When Mrs. Meyer was a resident of this city she was known as Miss Hattie Page.

Conductor J. B. Copeland returned from the Omaha railway employes' convention on Monday morning. Was in Sioux City on his way home and says the wreck is indiscribable. The loss of life and property is great.

A number of Frank Barnum's friends dropped in to see him on Wednesday evening of last week and left testimonials of regard in the form of numerous little presents. The occasion was the first anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Barnum.

W. G. Hunt the irrepressible Newsman of McIntosh, was in the swim on Tuesday. Hunt was hobnobbing with his friend Kirsch during all the time he had to spare from convention business, but as that occupied him wholly we fear he had "no time for Mike."

Lou. Cross came down from Angus to attend court, as a juror, but as his farming operations were very pressing the Judge excused him and he returned home on Tuesday morning. Lou. is one of the leading farmers up north and while in tried to talk an arm off Larsen (of Larsen, Carpenter & Co.) about a buggy. If he don't quit fooling with Larsen he will buy a buggy first he knows.

M. C. Rockstad is enjoying city life this week.

T. M. Nelson was in from Fertile on Tuesday.

Charlie Johnson is in the city courting this week.

Alphonse Berthiaume is up from Superior for a few days.

E. E. Abbott came down from Mentor on Tuesday evening.

Charlie Misner was too busy in his shop on Saturday to go to his regular meals.

J. S. Nichols was up from Fertile to attend the People's party convention on Tuesday.

District Attorney Eugene Hay was in the city on Tuesday to attend to a liquor case.

Ninety-seven delegates were reported in attendance at the convention Tuesday

Horace Lucken arrived from Ashby on Wednesday morning for a brief visit at the old home.

Leonard Lucken came up from Duluth this week for a few days visit with the old folks at home.

One notable feature of the People's party convention was the absence of any cut and dried progam previously arranged by a select few.

The grand jury has found bills against Wm. Moore, Henry Neely and James McGregor, charged with grand larceny in East Grand Forks.

Tom Harris commenced operations on Saake's building, corner of Second and Broadway, on Tuesday. He will move the building about six inches to the east.

Tom Adams is moving into the Warehouse—don't get the idea that Tom is moving into an elevator; the Warehouse in this case means the house recently occupied by P. S. Ware.

She could't marry three at the Grand opera house on Tuesday evening, May 31st. This play is one of the best on the road and our people will no doubt be very much pleased with it.

A delivery wagon caused a sensation on Broadway on Tuesday morning all because the horse indulged in a little go as you please race against time. From the way the goods flew out one would have taken it for a general delivery wagon.

Frank Barnum took a lay-off for a few days last week, and the Times local columns showed the fact very plainly. He is now on deck again and the local columns of the Times responded with their accustomed vigor. Frank is a good hustler for news.

"Hans Christyan Frederick Wilhelm Anker Rosenkrans Hanson" is the name of a man who proved up on his claim at the land office one day last week. Nothing lonesome about that name but it must be somewhat unwieldy to carry about with one.

Gordon McGrew has forsaken the primeval solitude of his claim near the reservation and is enjoying the wiles of civilization for the nonce. (We don't know what all this jargon means—it is Gordon's idea—got it up in the wilderness where he says the solitude nurtures poets).

A call at Brown's Select cigar house last week found seven men at work as busy as bees making cigars and Brown informed us that he could employ three more men if he could find them. Brown's trade has grown to mammoth proportions since he commenced in Crookston, and no wonder when you consider the quality of his goods.

Rev. R. H. Battey will speak at the Congregational church next Sunday. The Grand Army Post and Women's Relief Corps will attend the evening service. Morning sermon—"Jonah and Jesus." Evening—"The Fruits of War in Times of Peace." Let all be in the sanctuary on time for the services at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Very cordial welcome to all.

On Wednesday, May 18th, at the residence of his father, Peter Noesen, in this city, after a brief illness, of consumption, the life of Bernard Noesen was snuffed out. Mr. Noesen was a promising boy, just entering upon man's estate, highly respected by all who knew him, and he will be missed in the family circle. He was nearly 18 years of age. The funeral was held at St. Mary's church on Saturday, attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

News of the death of Mrs. A. A. Allen reached this city last week, which sad event occurred suddenly at their home in Central America in April. As the JOURNAL heard it she complained to her husband of a feeling of weariness and said she would lie down awhile after dinner. A short time thereafter Mr. Allen had occasion to go into the room and saw his wife lying on her side apparently sleeping naturally. A few hours later when he came again and found her in the same position, he discovered she was dead. Mrs. Allen was the daughter of Judge Lewis of this city and leaves many friends here.

S. L. Collins has just received a new hearse.

Peter Austin, of Ada, was in the city on Monday.

John O. Buhn, of Mentor, was in the city on Monday.

The river raised four or five feet as a result of the big rain last week.

R. Casmey was down from Euclid on Sunday. Says most everybody is through seeding up there.

Burkhardt Bros. have got their hotel all ready for business, re-painted and re-papered throughout.

Melville Milne has gone east on a trip for the benefit of his health which has not been good for some time.

Gus. Rasche, who went to Superior to live has returned, convinced that no place is superior to Crookston to live in.

The band was out on Friday evening of last week discoursing sweet music. Crookston has a band to be proud of.

Harry Pashley, of Thief River Falls, was in the city a couple of days last week, and called on the JOURNAL to see the new engine.

Work on the St. Louis hotel is being pushed and mine host Jerome hopes to see a large addition to his facilities at an early day.

Farmers should call at S. L. Collins' stables and see Noble's fine horses. His trotter is a picture and his Norman-Percheron is another.

Dan. Bach, who went to Washington some two years ago has returned to make his home in Crookston. Says he don't like it out there a good deal.

Editor Mussey, of the Thief River Falls Press, returned from St. Paul Friday morning. While in the saintly city he purchased a brand new outfit for the Press.

Rev. S. N. Millard of Glyndon the veteran Sunday school missionary of the American S. S. Union was calling on Rev. R. H. Battey Tuesday. He will hold a convention at Fosston next month.

Chris. Kjendsrud, the young man who was arrested last week for pushing young Klema into the river, was sentenced to pay a fine of $20 and costs of suit or take 15 days in jail. He chose the latter.

A pleasant entertainment was held at the parsonage home of Rev. and Mrs. Battey, Tuesday evening. Readings, recitations and songs, games, plays and visiting made the evening pass all too quickly.

Look out for the experience social superintended by the L. A. S. of the Congregational church. It's about to come forth from the secret place of wonder-land, and there'll be amusement by the cargo. You won't be given much time to prepare when it suddenly cometh.

F. C. Elliott, of the firm of Elliott & Heasley, proprietors of the Thief River Falls meat market, was in the city last Saturday to prove up on his pre-emption in Marshall county. He says Editor Mussey is a walker, and is prepared to back him in a 7-mile free-for-all contest. The genial editor paid his fare at St. Hilaire for a passage to the Falls, but the stage being unable to carry him, the boys blew in his fare, and Mussey struck out afoot with an O'Leary gait, and mud knee deep.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co. perceiving that summer "had came," last week took out their steam register to be ready for the summer trade. Later on, when the snow fell carrying the zero business along with it, Tom Bjoin fired up the heating business in the basement of the opera house block and in very short order the steam came up into the apartment of L., C. & Co. so thick you couldn't think, so they put a board over the pipe to shut off the steam. This was not quite effectual and after a few minutes Larson remarked: "What's the use standing this foolishness. I just know I am plumber enough to fix that thing!" So, procuring a gas pipe cap he raised the board intending to fit the cap on, but the steam, thus relieved deluged him in an instant and the next he knew he was crawling out of his hat at the farther end of the store as red as a boiled lobster. Then he arose and kicking the hat as far as he could see it delivered an elegant Fourth of July oration consisting principally of large-sized, hard-boiled words, while the boys stood by and laughed at his eloquence. Then he went and hired an experienced plumber—one who has been examined and tested by the chief boiler inspector, to come and fix the doggoned thing up—and ever since there has been peace in that establishment. But when Larsen goes forth upon the streets and the small boy catches sight of that hat the urchin spontaneously remarks "where did you yet that hat!" and when any citizen happens to remark upon the beauties of "steam heating apparatus" a wicked gleam appears in Larsen's eye and the boys never venture to ask him where he learned the plumber's trade.

Wheat opened out on Monday morning at 71 cents.

Barnes & Slocum are putting in new shelves to accommodate their growing trade.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs will still continue to sell all goods AT COST, and means just what she says.

Tom Harris is clearing the site for the buildings on Robert street by moving off the last house on the site.

Miss Dollie Bunnell of Crookston attended a grand May Pole dance at the hotel Dakotah, Grand Forks, last Friday night.

And still the rush continues to secure those cheap, elegant hats at Mrs. E. E. Bangs AT COST and below. Call while they are going.

There is so much to see in "She Couldn't Marry Three that it is impossible for us to describe it and so you will have to go and see it.

Ed. Bivins was enjoying a drive about the streets on Tuesday. Ed. is gaining slowly but looks like he had been run through a "sassage" grinder.

A railroad scene that rivals for beauty and effect the one use by Dan'l Sulley in "The Millionaire" is one of the effects used in "She Couldn't Marry Three."

This week the prospects seem better for all who have so far been unable to sow much wheat. Should we have a late fall, and we are very likely to, there will yet be time to make good crops.

Superintendent F. B. Chapin, of Becker county, gave the JOURNAL office a pleasant call on Monday. Mr. Chapin is one of the best school superintendents in the state and is a very pleasant gentleman to meet with. He is all wrapped up in his work and as a consequence is doing good work.

P. G. Falardeau the Red Lake Falls attorney, was in attending court this week. By the way, while the democrats are looking about for a candidate for county attorney they could do a great deal worse thing than to select Falardeau, who is one of the most prominent lawyers in the democratic ranks.

"She Couldn't Marry Three" will be the next attraction at the Grand. It is a comedy drama of today and abounds in exciting and ridiculous situations. A small boy once said after witnessing Lillian Kennedy as "Bess" in "She Couldn't Marry Three," that he felt as if he had had hundred years worth of laughter. The company carries a complete set of calcium lights, and all their own beautiful scenery.

About $1,500 has already been subscribed by the citizens toward making up the $5,000 required to secure the erection of a college in Crookston by the synod of the Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran church. The synod agrees to put in one dollar for every dollar subscribed, but the citizens must raise $5,000 before the undertaking will be commenced. The JOURNAL has heretofore fully outlined the project, which is a worthy one, from a business as well as an educational standpoint, and should be encouraged.

Deacon Bain, of Fisher, gave the JOURNAL office a pleasant call on Thursday of last week. The deacon says this spring reminds him of that of '82, when it was very problematical whether we should be able to get any seeding done in time. Farmers were seeding up to June 15th that year and never raised better crops. He has not quite finished as yet and will seed until June 10th, if not done before. The deacon is one of those men whose faith in this country is never weakened by untoward circumstances and he always looks upon the bright side of everything.

Dr. Cleveland of Caledonia was in the city on Monday to furnish expert testimony before the grand jury in the case of the State vs. Skogan. The doctor is a breeder of Shetland ponies and has quite a squad of them and offers to bring them over to Crookston during the encampment for a reasonable consideration. These ponies would prove a great attraction and should be secured by all means. If the ponies are brought here the little folks will be given an opportunity to enjoy many rides in pony carriages or on horseback as they prefer. This attraction would be a rich treat for the little folks and the JOURNAL hopes to see it succeed.

Coroner Shepard was called to Fertile on Saturday evening to hold an inquest on the body of James Price who was killed in that village on Saturday. Arriving at Fertile he impannelled the following jury, viz: E. L. George, H. C. Burdick, S. F. Ener, F. J. Cooke, G. Kronschnabel and Hans Paulsrud. Stripped of legal verbiage the verdict was as follows: "We the jury find that at the village of Fertile in said county, on the 21st day of May, 1892, James Price came to his death by accident while switching cars on the Northern Pacific railroad in the village of Fertile. We exonerate the engineer and trainmen and the railroad company from all blame for his death."

Call at the JOURNAL job rooms for elegant job printing.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

J. B. Berthiaume came up from Superior Sunday for a few days sojourn with friends and relatives in Polk county.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bemis left last Friday for Mount Clements, Mich. The traveling men miss the colonel's smiling face at the Commercial.

John Quisnel was in from Mentor on Tuesday as a delegate to the convention. John says he don't claim to know it all, but he had four votes in that convention all the same.

Work Horses - - - and Mares.

FOR GOOD, SOLID WORK HORSES and MARES, go to

M. R. BROWN,

The old reliable dealer, who has sold horses in this county since 1878, and who is always on hand to make his guaranty good. Every man who ever sold horses here is ready (when he sells) to guaranty, but later, if you happen to want him to make his guaranty good you can't most always sometimes find him ready to make his recommend good. He handles only good young horses and has sold more than any dealer in the county. He is now prepared to supply the demand for good teams—he handles no other—and guaranty them just as recommended. RINGLING BROS. CIRCUS.

Cheap Excursion Rates to this World-Famous All-Feature Exhibition.

The JOURNAL takes pleasure in announcing to its readers that while the famous Ringling Brothers' World's Greatest Shows will not be seen elsewhere in this vicinity during the present season, arrangements have been made with the railroad authorities by which all who desire to come to Crookston where this aggregation exhibits Thursday, June 16th, can do so at greatly reduced rates. A visit to this biggest of big shows will constitute a gala day long to be remembered, and, besides, it will furnish an opportunity of seeing the grandest exhibition in the world. Under the largest tents ever constructed will be shown the finest zoological collection on earth, including two great herds of performing elephants, a whole drove of camels, the largest living hippopotamus, a magnificent Percheron stallion with a mane nine feet in length, a complete horse fair containing 350 head of high-bred horses, and a circus performance embracing more high-salaried performers than any other two shows can boast, the best bareback riders in the world, and the most exciting chariot and other races ever seen under canvas. A grand street procession occurs at 10 o'clock, when among many other novel features there will be exhibited free, a mammoth highway locomotive drawing one section of the parade,—a magnificent reproduction of Moscow's Kremlin Tower, with its chimes of sweet sounding bells, and a full mile of other wonders, such as no other show in the world has ever exhibited.

CHEAP EXCURSION RATES.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company Makes a Half Rate to Minneapolis.

For the National Republican Convention to be held in Minneapolis, the Northern Pacific will sell tickets to Minneapolis and return at one lowest one first class fare for the round trip. Dates of sale, June 4th, to 7th inclusive, with final limit until Jnne 25th. The return portion of these tickets will be good for return from Duluth instead of Minneapolis, if desired.

CHEAP EXCURSION RATES.

The Northern Pacific Excursion to Grand Forks.

The Northern Pacific make excursion rates to Grand Forks during the Firemen's Tournament on June 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd and 24th, good for return June 25th, at one fare for the round trip.

To the National Democratic Convention at Chicago, June 21st.

The best, quickest, and most comfortable line is "The Burlington."

Tickets will be sold at all stations at one fare for the round trip. Dates of sale and limit of return will be as follows:—

At Prairie du Chien and all stations south of that point, tickets will be on sale June 17th, 20th, 21st, 22d and 23d, good to return until June 27th.

At all stations north of Prairie du Chien, tickets will be on sale June 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th and 21, good to return until July 6th. Ask your local agent for a ticket via "The Burlington" (C. B. & N. R, R.) and take no other. [7-9]

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company Makes a Cheap Excursion to Crookston in June.

Agent Sharkey advises us that the Northern Pacific railroad has made a rate of one fare for the round trip, Minneapolis to Crookston, during the time of the Republican convention in Minneapolis in June. These tickets will be good for use until June 25th. People desiring to visit our magnificent city and the Red River Valley should take advantage of the cheap railroad fare.

Mrs. E. E. Bangs will still continue to sell all goods AT COST, and means just what she says.

If it is a choice steak or roast you want call on Chas. Vine, Broadway & Robert.

TOWN TALK.

Marcus Johnson: You have a good business point here, and will eventually have a big city.

Special Agent Stone: Just back from Minneapolis. My company, the Northwestern Life, gave me credit for doing the biggest day's work of any of their agents.

Prof. Casad: We will start out with our company on the 19th of June, giving our first show at St. Cloud. We have a good company of 20 people and a first-class orchestra.

L. K. Aaker: No I do not expect to go to the big convention next week. The boys want to go and so I think I will remain and run the business so they can enjoy an outing.

E. M. Walsh: I have sold the Dr. Thomas property on Robert street at what I call a very reasonable figure for Robert street property. I look for an increase in sales from this on.

Manager Lent: The Columbus & Lent attractions will go on the road in November. Mr. Columbus will be here during tne encampment week with the Fierce, Albright company which he is now managing. He is in South Dakota or southern Minnesota now.

E. O. Flanders: I have decided, if my land remains too wet to sow by machinery and drag in the usual way, to put my force on and sow by hand, without dragging. I believe these beating rains will do what dragging is needed this season. I think I shall have forty or fifty acres to treat in this way.

Wm. Watts: I do not expect the nomination for judge from the People's Party. Am afraid I am too much of a railroad attorney. I should not be surprised to see Judge Mills endorsed. He has made a most excellent judge, is well liked by all and besides the People's Party in Becker and Clay will make a strong effort to endorse him. I should like to see this done.

M. R. Brown: I do not think that I know any news of a startling nature. Just now I am interested in the outcome of the convention next week. I am of the opinion that it looks very much like Blaine and I certainly hope that will be the result as I believe him to be not only the best man but also the man surest of election, although I am out of politics now and attending strictly to my legitimate business.

P. M. Ringdal: It seems strange that no one makes a specialty of raising poultry in this country. The market is always good and for at least nine months of the year eggs command a big price. I believe the poultry business would pay a big dividend. This county abounds with clay and I have an idea that pottery clay can be found. If this theory is correct there would be a mint of money in a pottery establishment, as the frieghts are at least one-half the cost of it now.

Geo. M. Swift: I can see but one danger ahead of the People's Party and one very natural in view of the sweeping victory two years ago next fall; and that is the danger of nominating poor sticks for office with the idea that anything on the ticket no matter how poor can be elected. What they want to do is to put up none but the most capable men for office for the farmers have learned independence in voting and will have the very best material offered no matter where they find it.

Herd Notice.

All parties who desire to herd with me for the coming season can secure good pasturage for their stock by delivering the same to me on section 1, Kertsonville.

MOSES E. TRUDEAU.

Don't forget that Charlie Vine is on deck to supply your wants in the line of fresh meats of all kinds at reasonable figures. When you want a choice bit, call on Charlie.

Bids for Building Bridges.

Bids will be received by the board of supervisors for the town of Fairfax at their meeting on Friday, June 10th, at the office of the town clerk of said town for building two bridges, viz: One bridge over the runway near the residence of Henry Steege, and one bridge across the ravine near Kittson, between sections 29 and 30, according to plans and specifications which may be seen at the office of S. L. Collins, in the city of Crookston. The supervisors reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

WM. HIMMELSBACK,
[6-8] Town Clerk.

HOME NEWS.

The Doings of the District Court—A Number of the Cases Disposed of.

The Board of County Commissioners Meet and Allow a Number of Bills.

Memorial Day Observed in a Fitting Manner by the G. A. R. and Citizens.

District Court.

Among the most important cases heard in the district court last week were:

Stevens vs. N. P. R. R., an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages to a car load of vegetables shipped from Crookston to Butte, Mont., over the defendant's road. Judgment was found for the plaintiff and $25 damages was allowed.

Stevens vs. Canadian Pacific railway was also an action brought to recover damages. In December, '91, Stevens shipped a car of potatoes to Winnipeg. Through some neglect of the C. P. R. yardman at that place the potatoes were allowed to freeze, and the company will have to pay Mr. Stevens $100 for the damage done.

Beauchaine vs. John R. McKinnon et al has been in court before. Beauchaine seeks to recover from the bondsmen of Sheriff Patterson the amount of his bonds. The jury disagreed.

The Minneapolis & Northern Elevator company vs. John Johnson was an action on a promissory note given for an agent who was short in his accounts. Judgment was ordered for plaintiff.

Smith vs. Peterson was to recover attorney fees. The defendant failed to appear, the case was tried by the court and judgment ordered for the plaintiff.

The most interesting case tried this term is that of Michael P. Valerius vs. Teddy Richards et al. Valerius is a Wisconsin horse importer and holds a note for $2,000 against the said Richards and seventeen others. The note was made to Kingsland Brothers of Grand Forks for a stallion and was by them transferred to Valerius. The defendants all signed a joint note, but now they nearly all refuse to pay their shares of the amount, claiming that they did not sign a note, that it was a blank piece of paper they signed, and that they thought they were signing a call for a meeting to consider the matter of purchasing the horse. The defense advanced the theory that the plaintiff either had a note printed on the aforesaid sheet of blank paper after the signatures were made, or a piece of white paper was placed over the printed portion of the note and removed after the signatures were made. But as several of the signees testify that they saw the note, read it over. and knew what they were signing, the argument of defense appeared weak. But the jury found a verdict for the defendants, and the case will probably be appealed.

County Commissioners' Meeting.

The board of county commissioners met on the 25th at the auditor's office and adjourned till the morning of the 26th on account of the sale of state lands held at the same place. An agent for a St. Louis company came before the board on its re-assembling on Thursday morning and offered to supply eating booths to the county for $9.00 each f. o. b. St. Louis. The auditor was instructed to communicate with the town clerks on the subject. Resignation of Dr. McEachran accepted and H. Shepherd appointed coroner for the balance of the term. H. E. Cooke, as administrator of the estate of W. G. Cooke appeared before the board and upon his showing that said estate had no personal property in Fairfax in 1891 the personal tax on said estate, $6.50, were ordered cancelled. The bonds of the 1st National bank of Red Lake Falls were received and approved. The sum of $100 was granted the town of Tynsed from the road and bridge fund, $300 for roads and bridges on the outskirts of the city of Crookston and $50 for bridges in the town of Louisville. Application of Martin O'Brien, city attorney of the city of Crookston and, a rebate of taxes was granted and taxes ordered cancelled. Rhinehart and Stortroem were authorized to examine the bridge at Fisher and report at next meeting. Taxes of W. Kyle abated. Bills to the amount of $3,107.08 were audited and allowed. The bill of A. E. Permain was laid over till next meeting also that of J. O. Brandt. The report of A. C. Rhinehart in relation to bridge between Sections 3 and 34, Tps. 153 and 154, R. 50 was accepted and the auditor instructed to draw on order for amount of claim in compliance with the same. The chairman was authorized to attend to the construction of the Thief River Falls bridge on behalf of the county. Flakne & Onstad were appointed text book agents of Beltrami and Ole Narveson at Erskine.

Memorial Day.

Memorial Day was duly observed in this city. At 1 o'clock Col. Cobham Post, the Woman's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans formed in front of G. A. R. hall, and headed by the band marched to the cemetery, where the program, as published in our last issue, was carried out. The address of Edward George was a fine effort, meriting and winning lots of favorable comment. The day was an extremely cold one for this season of the year and prevented many from taking part in the solemn ceremonies.

Special Committee Report.

Notice is hereby given that the undersignedco mmissioners appointed by the City Council of the City of Crookston, Minn., to view the premises and ascertain and award the amount of damages and compensation for property to be taken or injured because of the grading of Broadway street from Third to Fletcher street, Ash street from Third street to Loring street, and Robert street from Great Northern railway crossing thereon to bridge thereon crossing to Jerome's addition, to said city, as ordered by the City Council by resolution passed the 27th day of May, A. D. 1892. And also to assess the amount of aforesaid damages and compensation and the cost of such improvement upon the land and property to be benefited by the same, and proportion such benefit to each parcel of land in accordance with section 6 of chapter X of the city charter of the City of Crookston, will on the 13th day of June, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day meet at the city hall in the City of Crookston and there and then ascertain and award such compensation and damages as aforesaid and hear such allegation and proof as interested persons may offer.

Dated June 2nd, 1892.

Commissioners.

But Ten Rounds.

LONDON, May 31.—The National club was crowded to suffocation to-night with spectators anxious to witness the Slavin-Jackson fight. The entrance became so obstructed by the crowd that the owners of the building refused to allow any more to enter without a ticket. Two hundred policemen kept order in the club house, where a surging mass had assembled with the expectation of being admitted.

Lord Lonsdale opened the proceedings with a speech and the fight began. After the first few rounds it was evident that Slavin had no chance against the bigger man, yet he always came up pluckily to the call of time. In the tenth round Slavin was knocked helpless against the ropes, being in a terrible condition from the fearful punishment he had received. It 7:10 o'clock when Jackson and Slavin made their appearance in the ring to begin the fight. The usual preliminaries occupied only a few minutes.

The fight was for the championship of Australia and a purse of $10,000.

At Sherman's Grave.

ST. LOUIS, May 31.—Memorial day was observed here in about the usual manner. There was a parade of the G. A. R. posts and Sons of Veterans, after which they and several thousand citizens went by railroad or steamboat to Jefferson barracks, the army recruiting station twelve miles down the river, where the remains of some 15,003 Union and Confederate soldiers lie in one of the nation's cemeteries. The grave of Gen. Sherman in Calvary cemetery received special decorations.

To a Confederate General.

RICHMOND, Va., May 31.—A monument to the memory of Gen. A. P. Hill, of Confederate fame, was unveiled here to-day with great pomp and ceremony. Gen. James A. Walker, commander of the Stonewall brigade, was the orator of the day.

Honor to Whom Honor.

MANKATO, Minn., May 31.—To the Editor: The diplomas were presented to the graduating class of the Mankato normal school by Hon. T. H. Kirk, assistant superintendent of public instruction, who made a brief address to the class. This statement is to correct an error in the report as published.

Records Broken.

NEWARK, N. J., May 31.—The American twenty-five-mile bicycle road record was broken to-day over the Irvington-Milburn course by Hoyland Smith of New Bedford, Mass. His time was 1:17:10. The best previous time made by the same rider was 1:19:13.

Two records were broken to-day in the Passaic river regatta. In the junior six-oared gig race the Passaic crew won in 8:11, breaking the record by four seconds. In the senior eight-oared shell race the Cornell crew won in 7:21, beating the record by sixteen seconds.

MURDER EVIDENT

A Citizen of Council Bluffs Found Mortally Wounded on a Dark Street.

In the Fight a Hack Driver Is Killed and Is Found Near the Injured Man.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, May 31.—W. F. Jones, manager of the Sandwich (Ill.) Manufacturing company, who has been under the influence of liquor for several days with a considerable sum of money on his person, was called from his wife's side just when he had reached home last night by a message stating that his presence was required at the Ogden house. That was the last seen of Jones until his body was found this morning in a dark street near the hotel. He had a bullet hole in his abdomen and his skull had been crushed. A revolver was clutched in his hand, and he was still alive, but speechless. A block away, close to a blood-stained hack, the dead body of one Jack Wade was discovered, with a pistol wound in the breast. Wade also had a revolver. The driver of the hack, Tom Crogan, has since been arrested with a man named James Maher. The indications are that the double tragedy occurred at the point where Wade's body was found, and that Jones' supposed corpse was dragged through the yard of a disreputable house with the intention of concealment. Maher, Wade and Crogan are all hard characters, and are supposed, with robbery for a motive, to have sent the message which decoyed Jones from home. It is probable that he did not succumb when struck on the head, and that a remarkable pistol duel between himself and Wade followed on the lonely street at midnight.

AN EXCITING EXPERIENCE

Of a Tennessee Prisoner to Escape Angry Mobs.

MORRISTON, Tenn., May 31.—Charles Weems, the negro charged with attempting to assault a white woman at Chattanooga, on May 19, is in jail here. When first arrested he was jailed at Chattanooga, but was soon removed, owing to many threats of lynching. Then began a race that has never been equalled in the state. Weems was taken to Guthrie, Ky., but was compelled to leave in order to avoid a mob. He was taken to a number of other places with the same result. In five days he traveled over 1,000 miles, saw over 200 mobs ready to lynch him, was refused admission to a score of jails, was attacked in three, went twenty-four hours without food, during which time he traveled twenty-five miles over the worst mountains in the state, was thrown from a train, was shot at, visited three states and was so near two others that he could see them. If the story could be told in all its details of stratagems, narrow escapes, exciting encounters, wild rides, lonely walks and agonies of suspense, it would out-novel a novel. Weems claims the woman met him by appointment.

MANY HOMELESS.

A Terrific Rain Causes Suffering at Wellington, Kan.

WELLINGTON, Kan., May 31.—The most terrific rain storm that ever visited this section fell this morning. The water came down in torrents and the streets were running rivers within ten minutes and unroofed stores and residences were flooded, greatly adding to the misery and distress caused by the tornado. In the city the homeless need immediate help. They are suffering for the absolute necessities of life, and need the assistance of a charitably inclined public. Contributions sent to Mayor Thompson will be judiciously distributed. The situation is indeed deplorable and no storm in the history of the county has been more universally disastrous. Each hour adds to the number of the injured, and many are not only destitute but sick from exposure.

Not Guilty.

HUDSON, Wis., May 31.—Charles Colbeth, a farmer of this county, has been acquitted on his second trial. He was charged with larceny of grain from the farm of Wellington Vannatta on the night of May 15, 1890, and before his final hearing, May 24, he jumped his bail bond. His bondsman, Hon. M. A. Fulton, traced him through Idaho, Montana, Washington, the Dakotas, and finally, last March, he was located and captured in a lumber camp near Brainerd, Minn., and brought back here for trial. He was tried and convicted in April, but owing to an error in the charge of the court was granted a new trial. Upon the day set for the new trial he signed an affidavit of prejudice against the judge, the jury was discharged and again summond, Judge Marshall of Chippewa Falls, presiding.

One Killed, Twelve Injured.

CHICAGO, May 31.—The wreck on the Santa Fe road near Lemont, Ill., last night resulted in the death of Engineer W. A. Isbell. The injured were:

J. I. Allen, Mrs. Maria A. Bissell, J. I. Eggman, Charles Fannine, Mrs. Belle Friely, Miss Hulda Fricke, Maggie Kilpatrick, Charles M. Welsh, all of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Quigley, St. Louis, Mo.; Chris Slosson, Streator, Ill., fireman; Miss Belle Wreel.

The accident was caused by a cow and calf getting caught in a cattle guard at a curve. The accident was unavoidable.

A Student's Death by Drowning.

NEW ULM, Minn., Special, May 31.—Carl Bernecke lost his life through drowning in the Big Cottonwood river. He was a student of the Martin Luther college of this city, and went to the river with a companion to take a swim. When there he made a bet with his companion that he could swim across the stream which he undertook, and when in the middle of the stream he got cramps and succumbed to the inevitable, his schoolmate being unable to render any assistance. The remains were recovered and taken to Zumbrota, Minn., for burial, where his parents live. Bernecke's father is a minister. Carl was his only son.

The Day in South Dakota.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Special, May 31.—The memorial sermon was preached in the opera house last evening by Rev. S. G. Updyke, the G. A. R. and Woman's Relief corps attending in a body. The soldiers' graves were decorated with flowers this morning, and this afternoon exercises, including an address by Rev. Kennedy, were held in the opera house.

HENS THAT PAID A MORTGAGE.

A New York Hen Farm Where No Incubators Are Used.

The stock is pure White Leghorn, with the exception of a few common fowls which are kept for sitters. The houses now number eighteen which together accommodate 1,000 hens. The farm of 150 acres is run entirely for poultry. The crops and skimmilk are used to feed the fowls, butter being a secondary product. The soil, a gravelly loam inclined to sand in some portions, is capable of producing cereal and root crops in abundance, and is good fruit land. There is some pasture and meadow land. Although wheat, corn and potatoes are raised to a certain extent, the staple is a mixed crop of oats, peas and barley, which is easily harvested with a binder.

This mixture is ground, and an excellent meal is the result. Fourteen of the houses are grouped near the dwelling, and there are no fence restrictions. A cook room is connected with the dwelling, and each morning a large box is filled with the hot mess, placed with a barrel of water upon a stoneboat, and hauled from house to house by teams. The methods are of the old style, that is, no incubators or brooders are used, no eggs are packed, and the buildings are cheaply built, and not in a way to secure a great degree of warmth. The hens, however, are fed enough during the winter months to keep them healthy, and the floors are covered with straw, which when worked down, is drawn out upon the land.

Behind each house a shelter has been formed of rails covered with straw. This enlarges the run, and when frightened the hens go into it at any time of the year. An eighth of a mile from the house the farm is cut by a ravine in which there is an abundance of spring water. Four substantial houses have been built along this ravine, and each year the most promising pullets are transported to these buildings. A sufficient number of nonrelated male birds are obtained, and all the eggs for hatching are taken from these houses. The fowls have unrestricted range, but the flocks are too far apart to mingle. The hens are abundantly supplied with oyster shells and gravel at all times; the latter is taken from a bed on the farm.

The fowls are fed only twice a day—morning and afternoon. The first ration is cooked the day before it is used, in a large furnace kettle, and warmed up each morning. It is a mixture of meal, bran, middlings, often whole grain, milk, water, salt, apples, beans, potatoes, pumpkins or other vegetables. Mr. Sidway buys scorched or wet grain in large quantities, often by the carload. The damp grain is distributed around on the available floor space in barns, outbuildings and garrets, and is shoveled over at intervals until thoroughly dry. When an elevator fire occurs anywhere within reasonable distance Mr. Sidway usually obtains some of the scorched wheat, and has sent as far as Baltimore for it. Hardly any corn is fed.

The hatching and rearing of chicks have been the work principally of the women folks. A building is selected for sitting hens, and a row of thirty or forty nests is made of boards all around the interior next to the wall on the ground. The nests are divided only by board partitions. Great care is taken to obtain enough hens to fill all the nests, and they are all set at one time. The eggs are placed in the nests, and the hens are put upon them after dark. The hens are shut on for a day by boards placed over the nests. An abundance of food and water is set in the center of the house. After that no trouble is experienced with the hens, as they do not try to "double up" as long as there is one nest apiece all around. At hatching time the hens are left entirely to themselves. If there is danger of lice, a quantity of sulphur is put in the nests before the broods are taken off. Thus hens and chicks get the full benefit of the warm fumes that arise from it.

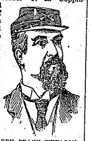
When strong enough the broods are removed to an orchard on the north side of the house. Here are scores of coops, and after a few days the hens are allowed to range at will with their chicks among the trees and currant bushes. The hens do not fight each other or molest strange chicks. This is because all are white. When a hen hatches by chance a dark colored chick, the others lose no time in pecking it to death. A number of long, low shelters have been built here under which the broods gather during storms, and eventually many of the growing chicks make these their home.

On this farm large profits have been realized in spite of comparatively low prices, as eggs in any amount are not expected before the middle of February. The prices received range from fourteen to twenty-two cents per dozen, a few early eggs being sold at much higher figures. But at any time of year these eggs sell for two to three cents above the market price. The eggs are all of one color, are carefully washed and assorted and packed in clean crates, and shipped once per week to regular customers, who promptly return drafts for them. During freezing weather shipments are made by express, but the bulk of the eggs goes as freight.

By careful selection a strain of Leghorns has been established which are larger and lay larger eggs than the ordinary kinds, and are excellent types of the business hen, though perhaps not characterized by a great number of fancy points. When the season is fairly opened about thirty dozen of eggs per day are gathered. Exact figures as to cost of feed and labor, and the receipts of money could not be obtained, but the yearly product was estimated at 10,000 dozen, worth at least $1,600, half of which was set down as clear profit.—Arthur D. Warner in Rural New Yorker.

THE NEW BRIGADIER GENERAL.

Record of Colonel Frank Wheaton, Recently Promoted by the President.



GEN. FRANK WHEATON.

One of the most spirited contests for promotion the army has had for years was recently brought to a close by the appointment by President Harrison of Colonel Frank Wheaton, of the Second infantry, as brigadier general, to succeed General Kautz, who retired some months ago. Colonel Wheaton had as competitors for the place Colonel Eugene A. Carr, Sixth cavalry; Colonel W. P. Carlin, Fourth infantry; Colonel E. S. Otis, Twentieth infantry, and Colonel J. L. Coppinger, Twenty-third infantry. Each of these gentlemen had influential backing, and the contest, though actively waged, was exceedingly friendly throughout. Colonel Carr's claims were advocated by Secretary Elkins, while ex-Secretary Proctor desired the selection of Colonel Otis. Colonel Carlin was the choice of General Schofield, and it was generally believed that Secretary Blaine would have been gratified by the appointment of his son-in-law, Colonel Coppinger. However, as Colonel Wheaton ranked the other applicants, his selection by the president has produced no asperities. The career of the man, too, amply warranted the promotion.

General Wheaton was born in Rhode Island May 8, 1833. After a preliminary education he took a special course in civil engineering at Brown university, and before he was eighteen years old was appointed an assistant on the United States and Mexico boundary survey. He did much other government work of the same nature, and became a first lieutenant of cavalry in 1855. He was on duty during the Kansas border troubles of 1856, and did much toward quelling the disturbances incident thereto. He also participated in the Cheyenne expedition of 1857 and the Utah expedition of 1858. Upon the breaking out of hostilities between the north and south Lieutenant Wheaton was on duty at the New York state headquarters. He received the appointment of lieutenant colonel, Second Rhode Island volunteers, and joined his regiment in the field during July, 1861. For his gallant conduct at the battle of Bull Run, where he commanded the regiment, he was made colonel. He also took part in nearly all the battles along the Potomac and James rivers up to the time of Lee's surrender.

From 1862 to 1865 he was a brigade and division commander, and in 1865 and 1866 he had charge of the troops in the territories of Nebraska, Dakota and Montana. His promotion in the regular army from the time of his appointment as first lieutenant, in 1855, was comparatively rapid. In 1861 he became a captain in the Fourth cavalry, in 1863 lieutenant colonel of the Thirty-ninth infantry and colonel of the Second infantry in 1869, with the brevet of major general for his services throughout the war. His brevet of major general of volunteers he had received in 1864, for his gallant services at Opequan, Fisher's Hill and Middleton, Va. General Wheaton will be retired from active service May 8, 1897. The other brigadier generals of the regular army are David S. Stanley, appointed March, 1884; Thomas H. Ruger, appointed September, 1886; Wesley Merritt, appointed April, 1887; John R. Brooke, appointed April, 1888; Alexander McD. McCook, appointed December, 1890.

Of these General Stanley is the senior, but it is impossible for him to go any higher, as the longevity act will operate to retire him June 1, 1892, when he will have attained the age of sixty-four years. General Stanley has been denominated "an ideal western soldier and cavalryman," and the designation has not been misapplied. Born in Cedar Valley, O., June 1, 1828, he was graduated from West Point in 1852. He became a second lieutenant of the Second Dragoons, and in 1853 assisted in a survey of a transcontinental railroad route along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude. In 1855 he became first lieutenant and in 1861 captain. His life during this time had been passed on the frontier in the saddle, and he there earned the reputation for gallantry and military sagacity which he has since so well sustained. Captain Stanley was appointed brigadier general of volunteers in September, 1861. He was frequently complimented in orders during the civil war. In November, 1862, he was sent a peg higher up by being made major general of volunteers.

General Stanley participated in nearly all the battles during the campaign against Atlanta, and behaved with conspicuous gallantry. When General Thomas was ordered to Nashville to prepare the place for defense, Stanley was put in charge of the Army of the Cumberland. He was severely wounded in the battle of Franklin. After the close of the war, Stanley's command accompanied Sheridan's army to the Rio Grande at the time of the Maximilian-Mexican trouble. In 1866, when he was mustered out of the volunteer service, Stanley, who had only gained the rank of major in the regular army, was made a colonel. He had already received several brevets, including one as major general, for gallantry. The general has been in the west almost continuously since 1866. In 1884, when he was appointed brigadier general, he was assigned to the command of the Department of Texas, where he has remained ever since.

Has Luminous Leaves.

An observer of the curious in nature says that some twelve miles north of Tuscarora, N. Y., there grows, or at least recently grew, a tree or shrub about seven feet in height, the leaves of which were luminous. In general appearance it resembled the barberry, the leaves favoring somewhat the aromatic bay tree of California. At certain seasons of the year the foliage is so bright that on the darkest night it can be plainly seen at a distance of one mile, while the light at the tree is sufficient to admit the reading of the finest print. The luminous substance is a gummy matter on the outside of the leaves, which imparts the same property to whatever it is rubbed on.

A Railway Accident.

Reports of disasters caused by spring floods are already beginning to come in. A little after midnight one morning recently the engine and eight cars of a freight train on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago railroad went through a bridge a mile north of Otis, Ind. Engineer John Murray, Fireman James Bowen and Brakeman Elmer Brown went down with them. The caboose and two cars remained on the track. Heavy rains had washed away the foundations of the bridge, leaving the upper portion intact.

[5-10] HUGH THOMPSON, Register

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND.

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XIV.

My engagement with Edith was broken off that evening.

I had not the faintest hopes of recovering the lost diamond, and, when I told Sir Edmund my reasons for despairing, he did not attempt to conceal his satisfaction with regard to my determination.

"A man should never be dependent on his wife. It must necessarily be a source of humiliation to him; and no man suffers humiliation without in time losing his own self-respect. That will never, I hope, be your loss, Bernard. · · Poor girl, it will be a great grief to her; for, though she has known you but a little while, she has found in you a great deal to admire and love and her affection is so tenacious that I doubt if she will ever cease to love you." He sighed, and for some moments sat in thoughtful silence; then he said. "We must not break her heart, my dear fellow,—we must leave her some hope. As it is necessary that for some time you should be separated, it is right that you should both be free to form other engagements, at the same time there may be a tacit understanding that, should you succeed in making a position for yourself in a reasonable space of time, and then both are still warmly disposed toward each other, the engagement shall be renewed.

"There is no necessity for your having a large fortune; but it is essential, as I think, and as you happily think also, that you should be able to provide yourself with the necessities of life. I promise that Edith shall bring with her the luxuries."

He then offered to use his influence in procuring me a secretaryship; but, as I had never been accustomed to sedentary occupation, and such an appointment could never satisfy my more ambitious hopes, he generously placed his purse at my disposal, to use as I might find occasion.

I have purposely abstained from dwelling upon my love affairs, for, if I entered into them at all, my feelings would lead me to dilate upon the delights of my brief wooing, to the exclusion of the graver matters which form the subject of this book. For the same reason I shall pass over the bitter grief of our parting. I will only say that Edith's last words awakened courage in my sinking heart.

I could form no satisfactory theory with regard to the Great Hesper robbery, but I was disposed to regard Van Hoeck as the least culpable agent concerned in it.

It was impossible to tell how the robbery affected this mysterious man. As I have said, during the investigation he sat perfectly motionless and perfectly silent. His face wore the inscrutable expression of a death-mask.

Sir Edmund had no sympathy with him after learning from me the particulars relating to the adventures of the morning.

When we entered the library from the dining-room, where our interview had taken place, we found Van Hoeck sitting where we had left him.

"I have ordered the carriage to be at the door in half an hour, Mr. Van Hoeck," said the Baronet. "Be good enough to make your arrangements for departure by that time."

Van Hoeck inclined his head.

"I shall be glad if you will redeem your I O U at an early date," the Baronet added sternly.

Van Hoeck put his hand in his pocket, drew out a purse, and extended it. I took it, seeing the Baronet's repugnance, and placed it on the table.

I accompanied Van Hoeck to Southampton. Neither of us spoke on the way,—indeed, I had not heard a word pass his lips since we parted in the early morning.

I took a room for him at a hotel, and, when the servant who led us to it was gone, I said:

"I am going to leave you, Van Hoeck."

A gesture of indifference was his only reply.

"You have nothing to say,—no explanation to offer?" I asked.

"What do you mean?—speak plainly," he said.

"I saw you discussing with Brace what should be done with the case that held the diamond before he secreted it."

"If you know that we were discussing that, you know all. It is useless to make an explanation that you would not believe. I have nothing to say."

He groped his way to a chair, and threw himself into it.

I put a packet of notes on the table, and told him that if he had need of further help he might write to me, addressing his letter to the care of Sir Edmund. Then I left him.

· · · · · · ·

I had a vague idea of purchasing a partership in some business where I could find active employment, and with this view I took lodgings in London, and began to look about me. I had been engaged in this pursuit about a week when I received a letter from Sir Edmund.

"I inclose," he wrote, "a cutting from one of the weekly papers. Vine growing, as it is here described, seems to be the very thing that should suit a man of your disposition and taste; it would suit me if I were thirty years younger than I am. As it is, nothing would better please me than to see you a prosperous fruit farmer.

"That Edith might have something to look forward to, I have proposed that our next summer holiday trip should be to San Diego. She thinks we should find California hotels insupportable. Perhaps you will be able to offer something more acceptable than hotel accommodation. In any case, my dear fellow, you can give me no more acceptable testimony of your affection than in availing yourself freely and fully of my pecuniary assistance."

The cutting referred to vine-growing and fruit culture in Southern California; but before I read a single line of it I had made up my mind to be at San Diego to receive Edith and her father in the summer.

CHAPTER XV.

Fortune favored me; before I had been twenty-four hours in San Diego, I learned that one of the best fruit farms in the State was to be sold. It lay in Elysium Valley, about twelve miles back of San Diego City, and was the property of Colonel Hinks. On hearing this, I hired a horse at once, and rode to the estate. The road ran between irrigated plantations of lemons, citrons, oranges, and other fruit that perfumed the air; the higher slopes were covered with vines. In the distance before me were the snow-capped peaks of the Sierra Nevada, and turning in my saddle as I ascended the gentle rise on which the house stood, my eyes were dazzled with the beaty of San Diego Bay.

The house was large and well built, in the Italian style,—a style not unsuited to that unclouded sky, and the surrounding scenery. The view from the belvidere was indescribably beautiful, and indeed justified the high sounding name given to the valley it overlooked.

There were flowers everywhere about and around the house; they festooned the terrace fronting the facade; they hung from the windows; they edged the paths; they even twined from bough to bough of the great cedar that lent shade to the lawn.

"This is a house worthy of Edith," I thought. "Oh that it may be mine to offer her!"

It would be time wasted to enter into my business transactions with Colonel Hinks. Suffice it to say that my ardent wish was realized, and that, in less than a month from my arriving in San Diego, I entered into possession of the beautiful property. Doubtless it was a hazardous undertaking for one who knew nothing whatever of the business; but what hazard is too great for a man whose object is to win the woman he loves? That the money I invested was not my own, did not lessen the risk I ran, but increased it; for, unless I could show a reasonable probability of repaying Sir Edmund's loan, I could not demand Edith's hand. However, I had every reason to believe that Colonel Hinks was a gentleman, and an honest and conscientious business man; added to this, I had confidence in my own perseverance, energy and strength, and that buoyant feeling of hope with which nearly every one who breathes the healthful air of this delightful continent seems to be inspired.

Early in November, I received a letter from Sir Edmund. Amongst other things, he wrote:

"The robbery is still a mystery,—to me it is a greater mystery than ever. Van Hoeck has taken lodgings in the village. I have met him twice in the woods, a wild, deplorable object, and, indeed, pitiable, if one may doubt his complicity in the robbery. Once he was upon his hands and knees, groping amongst the ferns, as if he expected to find there the lost diamond; but he chooses the night for these expeditions,—probably because he is then less open to observation. The keepers tell me that he passes the whole night, and every night, in this hopeless search. Why on earth should he do this, if he and Brace got possession of the diamond, as we suppose?"

In a postscript, he added, "Mr. Furnival, dating from Haxel's Hotel, London, wrote, asking me for your address. I replied that you were at San Diego, California."

The news with regard to Van Hoeck did not add greatly to the mystery in which this strange man was involved; but the postscript was a new source of perplexity to me. I knew no one of the name of Furnival; I could not recollect having spoken to any one of Sir Edmund while I was in London.

How, then, could this Mr. Furnival have known where to apply for my address? I expected a letter from him to clear up this matter; but no letter came.

A few days later, I received a letter addressed to me at Monkey Abbey, and re-addressed in Sir Edmund's hand. Turning to the signature, I found it was from Brace. It was dated October 15th, Petersville, Nevada County. The Judge, then, was in California, within a day's journey of me. I was not surprised at this, knowing his partiality for the State; but it was irreconcilable with the supposition that he and Van Hoeck had the diamond. He wrote thus:

"I rite these lines fur to show where I am lokated; and likewise that I have not slinked off like a thief in the night to hide my lites under a bushel. If things ain't no forarder than they was in the direction of clearin' up what's become of the Great Hesper, they ain't anywas no backarder.

"It ain't no use promisin' without you are got it right inter yer to perform, but I will allow that I ain't goin' to chuck up the cards before I've made you shake my hand and acknowledge I've played square. The Kid is frettin', and things in gen'al is not lively with your pardner,

"Jos Brace."

I did not reply to this letter. I heard again from Sir Edmund at the end of November. He felicitated me heartily upon the purchase I had made, and added the warmest wishes for my success.

He continued;

"Thank you for Brace's letter. The tone of it would lead one to imagine not only that he knows where the diamond is, but has a strong belief in his power to recover it! One can not possibly believe that it was he who robbed and attempted to murder you. But whom are we to suspect, if not him? If he were not guilty, why should he try to conceal the leather case which might lead to its recovery? There is a fascination in this subject which overcomes my wish to drop it. It is like the fifteen puzzle that drove half the world mad some years ago.

"Van Hoeck still wanders about the woods through the night. More than once he has been seen standing outside the room in which Edith and I pass the evening, listening.

"His suspicions have perhaps fallen upon us. The poor wretch may have lost his reason. His appearance when I caught sight of him the other day justifies the suspicion.

"I have to confess to an indiscretion which may have no serious result, but which I regret all the same. Yesterday I received a telegram from Furnival, dated Haxel's Hotel.

"It ran thus:

"'We have important clew. Send address of Joseph Brace at once, or place where he is likely to be found.'

"The 'we' led me to suppose that he was an agent of the detectives employed in this case, and, without further reflection, I sent Brace's address, having your letter under my hand. I became uneasy as soon as the messenger was out of sight, and sent Wilson over to Southampton with two telegrams, one for Furnival, and the other for the head of the detective department, asking for further particulars. I have received no reply whatever from Furnival, and the detectives replied by letter that they employed no one named Furnival, and that all inquires were made through the head office

"Who on earth can this Furnival be? and what can be the object of his inquires? The mystery was sufficiently incomprehensible without this addition."

Incomprehensible indeed, and the more closely one examined the mystery the more inscrutable it appeared.

"I inclose," he wrote, in conclusion 'a letter which came to hand this morning."

It was a second letter from Brace. This is the copy:

"Tibbal's Golden State Hotel,
"Sacramento City, November 8.

"Gentleman Thorne, Sir,—I didn't expec you to answer my letter, but the Kid have took it to heart moren natral. I told you she was kinder frettin, and to please her I made believe I had sent the message she ast me to rite. Which gettin no anser to said message she sorter felt youd turned your back on her forever. I don't think she's goin to make old bones. Seems to me like as if she meant knocking off early. Ses she don't feel like gatherin any more wild flowers.

"The doctor considers that sickness she get out Africa has settled into her, and she can't corff it off.

"The rains hes set in early up Petersville, and they ain't no good for a poor little sick Kid. We come down here day fore yesterday.

"She's pinin, pardner, that's whats the matter with her, witch is why I rite her message.

"She says she wants to be good; thems her words. I never knew her say such a thing, an I can't hardly expect you to believe it knowin what she was, but, if you could only see her as she is you'd believe it. She's that altered; no tantrums, no opposishun, no obstinacy,—no nothin.

"Seein this, you may be moved, sir, bein kinder pitiful by natur, to write her a few words, jest to say you've got her message, and hope she'll stick to her promise. With a little bit of encouragement like that, I don't think she'd go away without telling us what she's done with the Great Hesper.—Yours respectfully,

Jos Brace."

I started for Sacramento without a moment's delay.

TO BE CONTINUED.

HER ONE WISH.

Commendable Object of a Philanthropic Spinster.

Most people who go to Europe have their minds set upon at least one place or thing which they are particularly anxious to see. This was the case with a philanthropic spinster who had lived in Boston for nearly sixty years. She was to make her first trip abroad with her brother's family.

Her sister-in-law and her neices were mapping out the route for the six months' travel, and presently one of them said to her, "Now you must tell where you want to go, Aunt Martha; we're all choosing our favorite places, you see."

"I've heard you all agree on Italy," replied Aunt Martha, "and that's the only country I have any special desire to visit."

"Why, how nice!" said the neice, in a tone of pleased surprise. "We were talking it over the other day, and mamma said she was afraid you wouldn't care to go to Italy. You're so fastidious and though Italy is lovely, of course there are drawbacks, you know."

"I presume there are drawbacks," said Miss Martha, shivering a little. "I've heard of them. But you mustn't think I want to be sitting about on cathedral steps or damp walls, my dear. All I wish is to see some organ-grinders in their native land. That has been my desire for a good many years. The men we see here look so poor and ill-fed!

"I thought perhaps," added Miss Martha, "if I could learn enough Italian to make myself understood by those men, it would be a good thing for me to advise them not to come to America."

"I think it would!" said her listeners in chorus; but Miss Martha never understood why they laughed.

He Knew Better.

Said a dolt to a professor: "I should like to know how it is you never talk to me."

"You would like to know the reason? This is it. When you don't agree with me, I am sorry for you; and when you do, I am sorry for myself."

FARM AND GARDEN

CUTWORMS.

An Experienced Gardener's Methods of Preventing Their Ravages.

A large number of species of cutworms make themselves highly obnoxious to the gardener by the impudence with which they attack and cut down almost every kind of newly set plants.

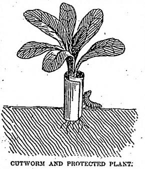
MOTH AND LARVA.

CUTWORM.

They are mostly clumsy and greasy looking caterpillars of some dull shade of color (grayish, brown, greenish), remain in their hiding places on bright days, and come to the surface at night or in cloudy weather to seek what green stuff they can devour. The illustration, from Greiner's work "How to Make the Garden Pay," presents both the worm and the moth of one of the species.

Mr. Greiner says: "Fortunately these worms have many natural enemies, among them the robin, thrushes, quail, wren and other birds, toads, etc., which together keep their numbers down quite well. Fall plowing serves to bring many of the worms to the surface, and to expose them to 'birdseye view' and perhaps to destruction by frost. The fresh effects of their night's work can best be noticed bright and early in the morning, and they can then be found near the place of mischief, hunted up and killed. Before a piece of plowed ground is planted we can often dispose of the majority of the worms by placing pieces of sod sprinkled with a poisonous solution at regular intervals over the ground. The remedy is simple and may be repeated, thus making the way clear for setting plants. Beans are sometimes planted for bait, and in advance of the real crop, whatever that may be. The field is looked over on several mornings after the beans are up, and the worms hunted up where plants are seen cut off. The regular crop is planted after most of the worms are destroyed.

"A practice often resorted to is to encircle each plant set out with a piece of paper which should reach down into the soil, as the worm cannot crawl under it, and extend several inches above the surface so it cannot crawl over it. The picture shows how this is done and how the plan works. I often use plant protectors somewhat resembling bottomless flower pots which I had made for the purpose, as a mechanical obstacle to the cutworm's progress."



CUTWORM AND PROTECTED PLANT.

Cutting and Curing Clover.

Be sure and cut the clover early, before the seed has formed. Clover is a biennial, one of those plants that begin to die when once it has produced seed. Here is the point: By cutting before the seed forms you can cut two crops in one season and still keep the root alive. At least it will not die because its purpose has been fulfilled. This year we shall need all the hay we can get. Skillful management of our clover meadows will give us a large additional yield of hay and have the roots right for the next season. That wise farmer, the late Hiram Smith, once showed us a field of medium clover nine years old from which he had taken that year fully three tons per acre in three cuttings. But there is another great advantage in early cutting. The hay for milk and butter purposes is worth double that of the ordinary grade, says as good authority as Hoard's Dairyman.

The thick stems of a rank growth of clover make it hard to cure by the ordinary means of exposure to the sun. Long before these stems are dried through the tender, thin leaves will be shriveled up and broken off. This necessitates curing clover by heating and with as little stirring as possible, and that only when freshly cut. American Cultivator says that the best way is to follow the mower with the hay tedder with only the least interruption. Then as soon as the leaves have dried rake the clover and put it in cock. It may seem dry because the leaves will rustle, but leave it twenty-four hours or, if need be, thirty-six or forty-eight. Then open and it will be found moist inside. The moisture has come from the stems, and when this has dried off the hay will be cured sufficiently to go into the barn or stack. The slight heating which hay thus gets not only does not injure it, but really makes it more palatable to stock.

Hay Caps.

A Connecticut farmer, writing to Hoard's Dairyman, says: "When I think of the amount of hay my caps have saved me I do not ask myself whether they have paid or not. Last year I bought some unbleached cotton two yards wide and made a sheet wide and long enough to protect a large stack of hay. It more than paid for itself, and is good for twenty years to come. It is a very handy thing to throw over a load in an emergency. It is a good failing to have it rather too large than too small. This sheet was made with eyelet holes in the sides and ends in which to tie strings and cords. To these cords weights are attached to hold the sheets in place."

SALISBURY ADVOCATES PROTECTION.

It is certainly a sign of the times, says the New York Press, when the Premier of England comes out openly as the advocate for a tariff for the protection of English industries. Lord Salisbury, in his speech at Hastings on Wednesday evening, acknowledged that free trade for England was a failure. "Fifty years ago," he said, "everybody believed that free trade had conquered the world and prophesied that every nation would follow the example of England, the results, however, are not what had been expected. Despite the prophecies of the free trade advocates, foreign nations are adopting protection. They are excluding us from their markets and are trying to kill our trade. And this state of things appears to grow worse. An important point is, that while nations are negotiating to obtain each others commercial favor, none is anxious about the favor of Great Britain, because Great Britain has stripped herself of the armor and weapons with which the battle is to be fought. The attitude we have taken in regarding it disloyal to the glorious and sacred doctrines of free trade to levy duties on anybody for the sake of anything we get thereby may be noble, but it is not business-like. On these terms you will and do get nothing."

Lord Salisbury went on to advocate a tariff, with a view to reciprocity. In fact, for a novice, he went surprisingly near to urging the enactment of an English McKinley law.

Lord Salisbury is one of the shrewdest statesmen of the age. He is easily the leader of his party in political sagacity, and just at present he is anxious to capture the votes of the British workingman. He knows that the British workingman is tired of free trade, that he is tired of having England made the dumping ground for the refuse of continental manufactures, while nearly every civilized nation in the world protects its home industries against foreign competition. Various devices have been tried to extend protection to the products of British labor. One of these is a law for the marking of merchandise with the designation of its origin. This, as well as other schemes, has proved a failure. While the goods come in free they will be bought, and sentiment will not take the place of a tariff at the expense of the purchaser's pocket. The British workingman sees the United States prospering under protection, and he asks why he should be deprived of the armor which defends the American workingman against the deluge of goods from abroad.

Lord Salisbury has discerned the growing impatience of the working classes of Great Britain under free trade, and in raising the banner of protective tariff he is undertaking to guide and turn to the aggrandizement of his party a popular conviction that is gaining ground with marvelous rapidity among the toilers whose ballots will control the destinies of the British empire.

KENDALL FOR CONGRESS.

The political pot in the Sixth District, which has been simmering slowly for some time on the subject of a congressional candidate now begins to boil furiously at the announcement of Col. C. H. Graves that he will be a candidate. Up till that time public sentiment had about united on Hon. H. C. Kendall, than whom no better man exists.

While it is none of our business in the Seventh to meddle with the affairs of our neighbors in the Sixth yet we do feel an interest, believing that Duluth should secure the Congressman as what is of benefit to Duluth benefits all this upper country. While Mr. Graves is fully capable and all that he never could be elected in this district and we do not believe he could in the Sixth as he is the head of the elevator system of Duluth, which fact would greatly handicap him in the race to say the least. Mr. Kendall is by far the stronger man of the two and a mighty good man too. Another thing if Duluth goes into the convention divided she loses the nomination anyhow. If she goes in supporting a weak man she is liable to lose it but if she goes in solid for Kendall she is very liable to get him and if he is nominated he is reasonably sure of election—very much more so than than Graves would be.

HE IS IN TO STAY.

The following special from Washington under date of June 1st confirms all reports that Blaine will be a candidate and will receive the nomination at Minneapolis.

"Very much to the disgust of the administration managers the Blaine cyclone increases in force and volume as the Minneapolis convention draws near. Nobody in Washington now pretends to question that Mr. Blaine is in the field to stay, or that he will fall far short of an unanimous nomination next week. One of the singular facts connected with the situation is that even the office holders under the Harrison administration, as a rule, are apparently delighted with the prospect that their chief will be defeated. One week ago the News correspondent commenced interviewing appointees under Mr. Harrison. Up to date forty-three have been questioned privately as to their preference for president. Only four expressed themselves as wishing to see Mr. Harrison renominated; twenty-five were enthusiastic for Blaine; nine were in favor of other candidates, and five did not care who was chosen at Minneapolis. After careful inquiry amongst the best informed men of all parties in Washington, the summing up may be made in five words: Harrison is not in it. Absolutely nobody believes he will be renominated."

THE Clay county convention of the People's Party, held at Glyndon on the 24th inst., endorsed Judge Mills for the district judgeship. One speaker voiced the sentiments of the convention as follows: "The People's Party was in a predicament with regard to the judiciary. There was no attorney in the entire district who was a true People's Party man, and they had no man fitted for judge." The JOURNAL is glad to see that the People's Party recognize the folly of electing incompetent men to office. The judgeship is a position which requires ability and experience. Honesty of purpose and sympathy with the People's Party movement are not sufficient qualifications for a judge, and the farmers do not propose to trust the most important office in the district to an unqualified or irresponsible man. Judge Mills has filled the bench of one of the largest districts of the state, satisfactorily to all. He has unquestioned ability, and is universally liked because of the faithful performance of his duties and the fairness of his rulings. Should he be willing to accept another term, it is more than likely that he will have little or no opposition.

Glyndon News:—Mr. Comstock's point—that the suppression of the colored vote in the south, with the knowledge and consent of the "intelligent" whites, amounts to a negation of the constitutional guaranty on the part of the nation of a Republican form of government to each state—is a tremendous point. It is well taken. And patriots who do not think so, but who have no other argument than the epithet "forced bill," are a sorry lot.

THE rapidity with which the national debt of the United States has been reduced is the financial wonder of the century. At the close of the war the debt was $2,773,236,173. In 1870 it was $2,386,000,000, a reduction of $1,398,000,000 in twenty years. Before the century closes the debt will be entirely discharged. Our present per capita debt of $28 is less than that of any other nation.

AFTER a good deal of discussion and voting on the question of closing the World's Fair on Sunday, the house finally disposed of the question, and the proviso relating to Sunday closing now reads: "Providing that the government exhibit at the World's Columbian exposition shall not be open to the public on Sunday.

NEXT Tuesday the republican national convention meets at Minneapolis, and as the time draws near everything seems to point to Blaine and Rusk as the nominees for president and vice-president. A stronger team could not be named, unless it was Blaine and Alger.

SOLDIERS ON WHEELS.

With Full Equipment a Trial Is Made at Chicago.

CHICAGO, May 31.—Pullman's small boys had a new attraction to follow this morning. Nine soldiers, with all the appenpages and appurtenances pertaining thereto, mounted on safeties, pulled out for Chicago, a distance of eighteen miles. Attached to the safety were a Springfield rifle, an ammunition belt, a blanket, a shelter tent, a haversack containing a day's provisions, extra clothing, a brush, comb, towel, canteen, knife, fork, tin plate, tin cup, frying pan and various other things. Gen. Nelson A. Miles decided to make an experiment to test the value of bicycles for army tactics. Yesterday, in obedience to the first order issued by any army officer for the use of bicycles in transporting troops, Lieut. Hunt, of the Fifteenth infantry, stationed at Fort Sheridan, with eight of the non-commissioned officers and privates, went from Fort Sheridan down to Pullman, whence at 7:30 this morning they started on their safeties for the Pullman building in Chicago. They carried the full equipment that would regularly be carried in a cross country march, moving in what is called by the soldiers, have marching order. Just one hour and twenty minutes after the start the whole command presented themselves before Gen. Miles looking none the worse for the trip. Gen. Miles was highly pleased with the result.

"It was a complete success," said he, "and it is a satisfactory demonstration that a military command can move over country roads in heavy marching order mounted on a wheel a great deal faster than the ordinary. It would have taken at least five hours for a body of soldiers to have traveled the same distance."

SOUTH DAKOTA CROPS.

Conditions in That State Reveal a Marked Improvement.

HURON, S. D., Special, May 31.—The weather crop bulletin for South Dakota for the week ended May 28 says:

The temperature during the week was a little below the average, the amount of precipitation considerably below, and the amount of sunshine about the average. On Saturday morning, 21st inst., quite heavy frost occurred in some localities, affecting to some extent small grain crops on low lying lands and early fruit buds, but no serious damage is reported. The remainder of the week was highly favorable, and very marked improvement in the condition and growth of all crops is reported from all portions of the state. Grass has grown rapidly, putting the ranges in excellent condition for stock. Fruit trees are in blossom. There were several quite warm days, with but little wind, that were highly favorable to all crop interests.

The conditions have enabled the farmers to get in a full week's work, and progress has been made in the sowing of late oats, flax and millet, planting corn and potatoes and breaking sod. In some localities corn is up and growing nicely. Some complaint is made of a crust on the top of the soil, due to the excessive rains of the preceding week, but this condition was doubtless improved by the showers of the 27th inst., which were quite general. Reports indicate that the average rainfall during the week was very light, except, probably, in the eastern portion of the state.

He Thought Johnny Was Right.

Tommie's mother caught him in the very act of pounding another boy, and she had frequently admonished him for this fault. "Come here," she said sharply, as she dragged him off. "Haven't I told you not to fight the other boys? Come along in the house now, and I'll give you a whipping that you won't forget very soon." "Well, mamma," whispered the boy, "Johnnie Muckly said you was a regular old scratch-cat, and I was sluggin' him for it." "That don't make any difference; I told you I'd whip you for fighting and I'm going to do it." "Let me loose a minute first," he blubbered, holding back. "What for?" "I want to apologize to Johnnie for lickin' him for what he said."

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

Mrs. J. D. Gilbert, of Union Lakes died, aged about fifty years.

Adolph Briere and Ephraim Cutter broke jail at Anoka by sawing of two bars. No attempt will be made to recapture them.

Mrs. James Frost died at Brainerd from effects of carbolic acid. Whether it was suicide or accident is not known.

Arthur Harmen, a young man 22 years old, committed suicide at his father's home in Waseca.

Two cases of diphtheria have about closed the lower grades of the public schools at Little Falls.

A. H. Baldwin goes on June 11 as county secretary into Olmstead county, under the direction of the Y. M. C. A.

Hans Monson, of Eagle Lake, was killed by lightning while driving home in a storm.

Wm. Armstrong of Buffalo was taken to St. Peter. This makes the third time he has been sent there and each time when he is let out he seems entirely cured.

The first and only cheese factory where cheese is made from whey is about ready to start up at Stanton, 2,500 cows having been secured.

Since Oct. 16, 1874, there has been paid out through Freeborn county for wolf bounties $3,884, and yet the "varmints" seem to be as thick in the county as ever.

The seventh anniversary of the founding of the Winona Norden society was celebrated recently in a very appropriate manner by the members of the society and friends.

Terrence Brazil, one of the pioneers of Renville county, was drowned in attempting to ford Wabasha creek, seven miles east of Morton.

State Auditor Bierman has been in Crookston selling the state school lands. He sold in the neighborhood of 5,000 acres at prices ranging from $5 to $12 per acre.

The militia company which has recently been organized at Crookston, has received 40 stands of arms and is drilling and making preparations to have an entertainment in the opera house.

The Crescent Creamery Company of St. Paul has added another creamery to their large number in the vicinity of Northfield. This time it is at Waterford, three miles distant.

Mr. Lever, of E. Lever & Sons, of Knoxville, Iowa, was in Sauk Rapids recently, looking into the advisability of the location of a woolen mill here. Work will begin as soon as the necessary stock is raised.

B. Rosenburg, one of St. Cloud's oldest settlers died aged eighty-one years. He was a pioneer merchant, but retired in 1870 and for ten years had been totally blind.

Quite a number of cases of scarlet fever are reported in Chatfield. Several dwellings have been quarantined, and two of the primary rooms in our schools have been closed.

The grand jury at St. Cloud has finished its labors and handed in three indictments. Thos. Quinlivon was indicted for assault with intent to do bodily harm and Lewis Berg and John P. Roller were indicted for grand larceny.

Thos. McGuire, a detective of the Milwaukee road arrested Edward Carney, charged with having broken into a Milwaukee freight car. Carney was brought before Judge Allen at Winona and his case was taken under advisement.

Rev. W. Schietel, of Wood Lake, while attempting to cross the Yellow Medicine river with a one horse gig, was drowned and his body has not been found up to this writing. The dead horse was found on the bank attached to the rig.

The remains of Rev. Wm. Schietel, who was drowned in the Yellow Medicine river, was found about 15 rods below where he attempted to cross. Deceased was pastor of the German Lutheran Church at Echo, and was well and favorably known.

At the preliminary examination of Edward Murrell he was held to the grand jury in Hastings in connection with the mysterious death of Mrs. Holmes, or Murrell, who had considerable money in her possession, and which has not yet been found.

The grand jury at Mankato has completed its work. It brought in 11 indictments, one of which was for manslaughter in the first degree against Carl Wilson for causing the death of Christ Thorstead, of Butternut valley. It also recommends the building of a new jail at once.

A load of six young people returning to Cloquet after attending a wedding at Carlton, met with a a serious accident. Near Cloquet the team ran away and the buggy was overturned. Miss Larson had an arm broken in two places and Maud Hall her shoulder blade broken.

John D. Hayes waived examination at Duluth, and was committed to jail in default of $500 bail to await action by the grand jury on a charge of assault. Hynes is the man who attempted to murder his wife with a hatchet and succeeded in severing one of her thumbs.

Robt. L. McCook Camp, No. 8, Sons of Veterans, was organized at Glencoe, by Commander De Long and staff, of Hutchinson. The following officers were elected: Willard Richardson, commander; Lewis Child, S. V. C.; S. G. Fadden, J. V. C.; F. E. Ford, Wm. Johnson, Ormar Martin, camp council.

NORTH DAKOTA.

The next annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of North Dakota Odd Fellows will convene at Fargo.

A North Dakota girl dies after killing her illegitimate child. The alleged author of her ruin is hiding from the girl's vengeful brothers.

The Democrats of Stark county draw the party line and nominate a straight ticket this fall for the first time. The Recorder changed management this week, and will hereafter be Democratic.

The North Dakota State Medical Association met at Grand Forks with a large attendance. Owing to the death of President Shurlock, Vice-President Rounsevell, of Larimore, presided. A number of papers were read.

Archie Macahey was bound over to the district court at Grand Forks in $1,000 bonds for trial on a charge of shooting at Tom Hill and with intent to kill. It is not probable he can obtain bonds. Hill's examination on a similar charge will be held.

The Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., of North Dakota wound up a three day's session at Devils Lake by the election of the following officers: grand master, John Munson, Fargo; grand secretary, John Powell, Grand Forks; grand treasurers, J. J. Neierling, Jamestown.

Louis Agaard, on trial in the United States court at Fargo for disposing of liquor to Indians, was sentenced by Judge Thom as to thirteen months in the penitentiary and a fine of $50. He was convicted on the evidence of Captain Red Tomahawk and his Indian police.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

DR. BRIGGS' CASE.

Majority and Minority Reports Discussed by the Presbyterian Assembly.

A Resolution Giving the Seminary Privilege to Withdraw Defeated.

PORTLAND, Or., May 31.—The mayor of Portland addressed the Presbyterian assembly this morning. After unimportant business Judge Ewing introduced the following resolution in the Briggs case. It is mainly formal, and it is only important in its workings:

The general assembly having on the 20th day of May, 1892, duly sustained specifications for error alleged and set forth in the appeal and specifications in the case, it is now ordered that the judgment of the Presbytery of New York, entered dismissing the case of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America against Rev. Charles A. Briggs, DD., be and the same is hereby reversed and the case is remanded to the presbytery of New York for a new trial, with directions to the said presbytery to proceed and pass upon and determine the sufficiency of the charges and specifications in the form and legal effect, and to permit prosecuting committee to amend the specifications on charges, not changing to general nature of the same, if in furtherance of justice it be necessary to amend so that it may be brought to an issue and tried on the merits thereof speedily and may be practible.

The supplementary report was read, Several changes were made from the former report, among them a recommendation to enjoin the presbyteries to see that the students under their care be prepared for their sacred office in the seminaries and under teachers who are under the oversight and direction of the assembly, and that the board of education be directed to restrict the appropriations for the education of the students to those who are pursuing their studies in such institutions.

WANT THE SEMINARY BOYCOTTED.

This is aimed at the Union seminary and puts on that institution a boycott, as was forcibly stated during the ensuing discussion. With regard to the seminary direct as to the identity of transfers and original appointments in the case of professors, it is recommended that the general assembly is constrained to insist upon its interpretation of the terms of the compact as given by the assembly at Detroit. The report recommends a negative answer to the memorial of the Union seminary directors asking the co-operation of the general assembly in severing its connection. It recommends the adoption of a resolution declaring that the assembly recognizes the status quo as to the difference of interpretation and agreed to refer the differences in the interpretation as to transfers, to a committee of arbitration, five to be appointed by the moderator and five by directors of the Union seminary, these ten to select five others.

The minority report recommends that the Union seminary be given liberty to honorably withdraw from the compact of 1870, and that a committee to be appointed by the assembly to confer with all the theological seminaries now under its supervision, touching the reviews as to the agreement of 1870 and any new agreement they may devise, and so formulate a new agreement adapted to happily unite all seminaries under such general supervision by the general assembly as will tend to safety in the church and efficiency in her work, the same to be submitted to the general assembly of 1893.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

Dr. Blayney of Kentucky proposed as a substitute to the previous reports a set of eight resolutions, which borrowed from part of the majority report and containing many modifications and additions. The resolutions were seconded as an amendment and a discussion of the whole subject proceeded, a large number of speakers being heard. Dr. Taylor, the framer of the minority report, in his argument said the Union seminary has a perfect right to ask to be relieved, because there is no legal basis for the agreement and its experience has not been particularly pleasing. He said the best way to keep the seminary in the church is to relax the authority of the assembly rather than draw the reins tighter. Dr. Lapman of New Jersey created a stir by his speech, in which he said:

What I object to is that you should come with a flag of truce in one hand and a club in the other to beat out the brains of the institution.

These words he was called upon to retract, but the moderator interposed, interpreting the words as a figurative expression of his opinion. The morning hour having expired the discussion went over.

In the afternoon the report of the committee on Sabbath observance was considered for the second time. The assembly entered a protest against the opening of the world's fair on Sunday. The committee on bills and overtures recommended a denial of the request of several presbyteries for a shorter catechism. The report on temperance caused considerable discussion. Prohibition was not mentioned by name though practically the same thing was endorsed. A lengthy report on the deaconess question closed with a proposal of three alternative overtures to the presbyteries looking toward the establishment of the order. Adopted.

A TALK BY THE MODERATOR.

The discussion on theological seminaries was resumed this evening. The moderator took the floor to advocate a substitute offered by Dr. Green of New York. The vote was taken on the first portion of the minority report, allowing the union seminary to withdraw, and it was lost with a roar, a few voting in favor. The remainder of the report was then voted down and Dr. Green's substitute adopted. It is substantially as follows:

The assembly endorses the interpretation of the compact of 1870 as expressed by the action of 1871; declines to be a party to the breaking of the compact with the union seminary; is persuaded the church should have direction and control over its theological seminaries; that the committee of fifteen be appointed to take into consideration the whole subject of relation of the assembly to theological seminaries and report to the next general assembly, such action as it thinks will result in closer relations, the committee of conference appointed last year to be dismissed.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

[First publication Thursday, June 2d, 1892.]
[Last publication Thursday, July 14th, 1892.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaac W. Webb and Edna P Webb, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 6th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of December, A. D. 1888, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 447.

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $70 that became due December 6th, 1889; $70 that became due June 6th, 1890; $70 that became due December 6th, 1890; $70 that became due June 6th, 1891, and $70 that became due December 6th, 1891.

And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sums in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described, upon which there is default, the following sum, to-wit: Twenty-four hundred fifty-four and 70-100 ($2,454.70-100) dollars; and whereas the said power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-eight, (28) Township one hundred and forty-seven, (147) Range forty-six, (46) containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof, all of said premises situate and being in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and seventy-five (75) dollars attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on

Monday, the 18th day of July,

A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated May 21st, A. D. 1892.

IN A QUICKSAND.

AN ELEPHANT SWALLOWED WHOLE BY TREACHEROUS MUD.

The Unavailing Sagacity of the Doomed Creature—Calm in the Midst of Danger, the Intelligent Brute Grew Frightened Only at the Very Last.

"Did I ever see an elephant die?" said the keeper, repeating a reporter's question. "Well, I did and I didn't."

"How was that?" asked the reporter, feeling for his notebook.

"I did not see him actually die," replied the keeper, without the vestige of a smile. "He was living when I lost sight of him. He was swallowed alive."

"This is going to be a pretty stiff yarn, keeper," remarked the reporter, as a shade of disappointment crossed his face. "I guess I won't need the notebook. You saw him swallowed alive, eh? I always thought you were an antiquity, I never suspected you to be antediluvian. What did it, a megalosaurus?"

"Never heard of such a thing," said the keeper gruffly. "This was a quicksand."

"Oh, a quicksand! Go on, old man," responded the reporter, delighted, as he pulled out a pencil or two. "Tell us all about it."

"It was in India," said the old keeper, "where I learned a good deal about elephants, never thinking that it would come useful to me in after years. Elephants are common beasts of burden there, and on this day a heavily loaded one was crossing a shallow but broad stream by wading. The sagacious brute had refused to step on the badly constructed bridge which the natives had erected, but his instinct did not warn him of a dangerous quicksand which the water concealed, near the farther bank.

"I was attracted to the scene by the shouts of his owners, five Indian merchants, whose wares he carried from one bazaar to another. They did not know of the quicksand and could not understand why their elephant did not come out of the stream which he had almost crossed. When they learned the predicament he was in, their howls of grief and despair were earsplitting. I suggested that bundles of turf and branches be thrown to the elephant, and this was done. The old fellow, seemingly aware of his danger, took each bundle with his trunk and thrust it under water. Then with a mighty effort dragging up one foot out of the sucking sand, he would put it on the bundle of fagots and press it down. He got a lot of them under him in this way with more skill and precision than you would think possible, but the soft sand took them all in and still let him down farther into its depths.

"His master procured a small boat and poled it out to him. Then they took all his load of goods off, put them in the boat and brought them ashore. This lessened his weight a good deal, but the sand was by that time up above his shoulders and soon his entire back was covered by the water. Only his head showed now, and still the old fellow was the only calm and collected individual in the crowd. I cannot help thinking of an elephant as a person; no one can who has been with them and witnessed their intelligence as much as I have.

"Collecting some floating boards which had been thrown out to him, he made a sort of raft of them with his trunk and rested his big head on them. It was no use, however. He was doomed and we knew it. Before long the water covered his mouth. Then he lifted his long trunk and curled it back over his forehead. The water filled his ears and he flapped them vigorously for a time. Soon it reached his eyelashes, and then his big burning eyes, just at the water's edge, took on a pitiable expression.

"They seemed to beseech aid and succor from those he had served so long and so faithfully, and his masters fairly groveled in the dust as they yelled to their gods and frothed at the mouth in their frantic Indian way of expressing sorrow. The tears came into my own eyes as I looked at the old fellow and knew there was no help for him.

"As the water covered his eyes his courage gave way at last, and he uttered a piercing scream of fright through his trunk and repeated it several times. It made my blood curdle, I tell you. Have you heard horses scream in a burning building? It is almost human. So was the old fellow's death cry. The end was close at hand. His long trunk still waved wildly above the water, but nothing else of him was visible. Its length grew less and less, and finally the water poured over the top of it.

"One more bubbling, choked, gasping scream threw the water out again into a high jet, but that effort was the last. The stream quickly filled up his only channel to the air above, and the old elephant was buried before he was dead. I could have watched a dozen natives swallowed up in the same way without feeling half as bad about it."—New York Tribune.

Cæsar's Ignoble End.

Julius Cæsar is by many considered the most remarkable man who ever lived, take him all in all. As a statesman, orator, writer and soldier, he continually aroused the admiration of his countrymen and astonished his enemies. He was a many sided man, and to whatever he turned his hand he succeeded in a pre-eminent degree. He overthrew Pompey, conquered Gaul and Britain, and, having finally made himself virtual dictator of the Roman republic, was offered a kingly crown. At this culminating moment he was ingloriously assassinated by some of those whom he looked upon as his warmest friends.—Yankee Blade.

The Market Value of a Maine Man.

A Belfast man who evidently had been rejected by some pensioned widow was discussing pensions recently. He said very indignantly: "If I had my way I'd abolish the darned widows' pensions. They won't marry, preferring twelve dollars per month to a man. Abolish 'em, I say!"—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

RANGE INSPECTORS.

Detectives of the Plains Whose Work Old Sleuth Himself Might Envy.

Column after column has been written about the daring deeds, miraculous escapes and cunning capture of criminals by the detectives of Europe and America. In thousands of cases the praise accorded these officers for their ingenuity and daring has been deserved; but there is a class of detectives in this country who risk their lives oftener, and who must know not only the ways of the highwayman when he is in the city, but also his haunts and his hiding places and his go-between in the thinly settled country as well. These men are on the go almost all the time—today down in New Mexico looking for a horse thief, who is a murderer as well; next week far across the Canadian line on the trail of a gang of cattle thieves who have been despoiling the Montana or Wyoming ranges. It is only in the past ten or fifteen years that their worth has been appreciated or their services valued as they should be.

In the early days of cattle raising in Wyoming and Colorado, whenever the range thieves became too bold, the ranchmen for miles around would organize, get on the track of the thieves, run them to their holes and then shoot or hang them. After a visitation of this kind herds would be comparatively safe for a time. Nevertheless thousands of head of cattle and horses were stolen each year and shipped to Chicago, for which the rightful owners received not a cent. The stockmen of Wyoming organized a stock growers' association and appointed for each county in the state a stock inspector. Colorado followed suit in a few years, to be followed later by Montana. The duties of these inspectors were not to look out for diseased cattle, but to inspect every carload of cattle shipped out of the state, get a list of the brands, who the consignee was and report the facts to the secretary of the association.

There were of course mistakes made at first, but of late years so perfect has the system become that it is almost an impossibility for a thief to ship a head of beef by rail out of Montana without detection. Gradually the duties of the inspectors were added to, and in addition to watching the shipping points they have become thief chasers. The inspectors are selected from the bravest class of western men, thoroughly conversant with the country, and men of intelligence. Their powers in Montana are equal to those of a deputy sheriff, and their authority is recognized all over the state.

Among the Montana inspectors are men who could tell some thrilling stories of their adventures, not only with horse and cattle thieves, but with Indians as well. In point of continuous service Inspector W. D. Smith, now the representative of the Montana association at Chicago, and whose headquarters were formerly at Miles City, outranks his associates. He has been in the service of the association some eight or ten years, previous to that time being an inspector in Wyoming. He is a typical westerner, close mouthed and without a particle of fear. He walks with a slight limp, and one unacquainted with his history, meeting him on the streets of Chicago, would almost immediately conclude he was a cattle grower of moderate means, who was satisfied with life, attended strictly to his own business and would be the last person one would pick out of a crowd as the most noted trailer of cattle and horse thieves in Montana.—Helena Independent.

The Wise Lady of Kalamazoo.

She had come down from Kalamazoo and was seeking quarters in a Detroit hotel. She was about fifty and the years had taught her great conservatism and caution.

"Is this a safe tavern to stop in?" she inquired of the chivalrous clerk, who was at that moment wearing his diamond pin on his back, or rather the coat for whose value the pin was collateral.

"In what respect, madam?" he asked.

"Fire, of course," she said suspiciously. "Ain't anything else to be afeard of, is there?"

"Oh, certainly not, madam; certainly not," he hastened to assure her. "And as to fire, our house is absolutely fireproof, and even if it was not, we have fire escapes everywhere."

"Fire escapes!" she exclaimed, with a gasp, reaching for her bundles. "Well, if your dratted house is fireproof what have you got escapes for the fire for? I s'pose you've got burglar escapes too. I guess I don't want to sleep in no taverns like this. Good evenin," and away she went, leaving the clerk in a perfect halo of despair and disappointment.—Detroit Free Press.

Exercise and Pure Air.

Exercise, as well as pure air, helps us in our constant struggle against the poisons that we manufacture within ourselves. It does this by driving the blood charged with oxygen, by means of the pressure of the muscles called into play, more thoroughly through the tissue, and thus it would quicken the breaking down of dead tissue into its safe and final waste products (water, carbonic acid and urea), and shorten the period during which the dead tissue was passing through various dangerous forms which it temporarily assumes. From this fact we may infer that the man of sedentary life above all others requires pure air.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Pneumatic Sole.

A pneumatic inner sole for boots and shoes has recently appeared in London. It is inflated with air or gas under pressure, the external protective covering being canvas linen or some other suitable material that can withstand the pressure.—New York Times.

Silver in Soot.

A CLUB FOR MOTHERS

THE HOUSEKEEPERS' ORGANIZATION OF COCOANUT GROVE.

Florida Women Who Have an Interesting Way of Securing Relaxation from Their Home Duties—Some Rules and Objects of the Society.

Away down on the east coast of Florida, 300 miles south of St. Augustine, is the pretty little settlement of Cocoanut Grove. It is situated on the banks of Biscayne bay, one of the loveliest sheets of water for winter cruising and fishing that it is possible to conceive of for those who are not afraid to go beyond the daily mails and telegraph wires, for at present there are no railroads or steamboats, not even a wagon road, connecting us with the outside world—sailboats only, but plenty of those, and good ones, too, which is very necessary, as the nearest market or source of supply is Key West, 150 miles to the south.

Of course there is a hotel, postoffice, store and Sunday school building, which, with the Biscayne Bay Yacht club house, the various winter residences of the northern yachtsmen and the pretty little houses of the pineapple growers and cocoanut planters of the keys, each built according to its owner's fancy or means, and set in the midst of cocoanut, lime, orange, banana and guava trees, form a most attractive picture, to which may be added the ever changing life of the bay, the coming and going of the yachts, the arrival and departure of the mailboats and freight schooners. But if the place is attractive, very much more are the people who have helped make it, and this is especially so of the women, whose husbands and sons are the spongers, wreckers, carpenters and boatmen of the reef, when not engaged in truck farming or pineapple raising.

It is to these women and their club—a housekeeper's club—that I wish to introduce my readers. A woman's working club in every sense of the word, with an attending membership of twenty and a correspondence membership of ten, the latter residents of New York, Boston, San Francisco, Brooklyn, Staten Island and Key West.

To most of the women born and brought up on the keys of the reef or in Key West, and of English parentage—for the majority of the settlers came originally from the Bahamas—the experience of belonging to a society, however simple, for women only, was a novelty. Although "our club" is now a frequent and proud expression among them, and member, in talking it over with her husband, assured him that the "bylaws of her club were as well made and just as binding as those concocted in the capitol at Tallahassee."

And so they are to the faithful band of women who gather every Thursday afternoon in the little Sunday school building, and join heart and hand in helping each other to enjoy and improve the two hours a week rescued from their household cares. For nearly every member is a mother, not of one, but in several cases of eight and ten children, with no one to assist in the daily and hourly work attending such a household, so that the first rule made and rigidly enforced, "No babies allowed at the meetings," is a genuine relief, and gives time and freedom for much that would be otherwise impossible.

Sometimes the children are taken to a neighboring house, ten or twelve little tots from one to three years old, and a husband or eldest son volunteers to oversee those that are able to walk, in which case, as it draws near closing time, one little head after another will be seen coming, Indian file, along the narrow path, all of them bareheaded or nearly so, in search of mamma and generally in great glee at having escaped. Of course there follows a grand baby show.

The originator of the club is its president, Miss Flora McFarlane, of New Jersey, a woman who has proved herself in every way capable for the life she intends leading, having homesteaded a hundred and fifty acres of government lands, which she has gone bravely to work to clear and improve.

The officers of the club are the president, secretary, assistant secretary, treasurer and caretaker, who has entire charge of the club's workbasket, giving out the work and collecting materials, such as scissors, thimbles, needle books, patterns and button box, after each meeting. These meetings occur every Thursday afternoon from 3 to 5.

At the organizing of the club it was voted that the time be spent in making useful articles of clothing from material either given to the club (thereupon the president presented a dozen kitchen aprons) or bought with the club's funds, the funds being derived from membership dues (which were promptly paid, so that the treasurer found herself busy at once) or gifts. That such articles should be sold at each meeting, and to members, at cost price.

That the money received for the first year be spent in the purchase of materials and also in suitable and useful articles for a bazaar, to be held at the annual meeting for the benefit of the church building. That resident members be elected by means of a vote cast with black and white beans; distant or correspondence members on the good faith of the housekeeper proposing them.

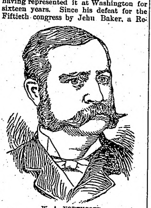
Bright, newsy letters are received from the nonresident members, and all sorts of gifts in the way of household articles, from half a dozen cup towels to a bedspread.—Harper's Bazar.

Taking Photographs by Balloon.

It is proposed that balloon photography should be used in sieges by the besiegers. One plan is to start a small balloon, loaded with a camera, to windward of the fortress, the plates being exposed by means of clockwork arrangement or slow match. These, of course, are adjusted to the time which would elapse before the balloon will reach the point or points where the exposures are to be made. The gas escapes, and the balloon descends on the farther side of the fortress, within the besiegers' lines.—New York Telegram.

IT'S A POLITICAL BATTLE GROUND.

The Close and Famous Eighteenth Congressional District of Illinois.



W. A. NORTHCOTT.

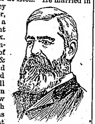
The Eighteenth congressional district of the state of Illinois was formerly known as "Bill Morrison's borough," he having represented it at Washington for sixteen years. Since his defeat for the Fiftieth congress by Jehu Baker, a Republican, the district has been very close. William S. Forman, a Democrat, is the present representative, because he got twenty-six votes more than Baker in the last contest.

The district is composed of the counties of Bond, Madison, Monroe, St. Clair and Washington, and because of the fierce fights made on the tariff issue it has achieved national notoriety. The Republicans in convention at Alton the other day chose as their candidate for congress W. A. Northcott, of Greenville, Bond county, a gentleman about fifty years of age, who sports carefully groomed side whiskers and mustache, and who has had considerable experience as a practical politician.

The committee on resolutions, whose work Mr. Northcott indorsed in his speech of acceptance, "set the pace" for the coming contest when it reported a platform favoring a tariff so levied as to benefit and protect American labor and American productions; favoring reciprocity; declaring that every dollar bearing the government stamp should be of equal value and interconvertible, whether it be of gold, silver or paper; opposing free coinage of silver, heartily indorsing the administration of President Harrison, and complimenting Secretary Blaine. The resolutions also declared in favor of the repeal of the compulsory school law of the state, and the enactment in place thereof of a law which will not interfere with the rights of parents to send their children to such schools as they may deem best. The state administration was indorsed and the course of Senator Cullom was approved.

Governor of England's Bank.

The Bank of England is among the greatest financial institutions in the world, and the recent election of Mr. David Powell to the important post of its governor is a high tribute to his business integrity and financial sagacity. He is a graduate of Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1861. His preliminary education was received at Eton. He married in 1867 Miss Lucy Elizabeth Pryor, daughter of a wealthy merchant of Hylands, Essex. He became a member of the firm of Cotesworth & Powell in 1863, and is still interested there. Mr. Powell has traveled in Australia, New Zealand and South America, and has also done a great deal of literary work in this connection. He has been deputy governor of the Bank of England for the unusual term of three years. His last year of office was accepted at the urgent solicitation of the retiring governor, Mr. Lidderdale, who wished to have the benefit of Mr. Powell's advice in some important negotiations which were then pending with the British government. It was at the last meeting of the board of directors that he was chosen governor, a position which his previous record warrants his friends in asserting that he will fill with credit to himself and honor to the institution of which he is now the head.



DAVID POWELL.

Romance of a Coin.

It was a Mexican dollar, from which the imprint of the government had been removed, so that instead of a coin it seemed to be an engraved disk of silver until the owner opened it and disclosed a charming miniature. "I can tell you a thrilling story about a dollar like that," said its owner to a Boston Herald reporter. "When I was in New Mexico I knew a young man who had a dollar similar to this, only that it contained the miniature of a lady whose husband was a regular fire eater. He was a fighter from the word go—the worst in town. One day the young man and I went to the races together.

"My friend had the souvenir dollar in his pocket, and in the excitement gave it to the pool seller with three ordinary dollars. It was much lighter than the dollars, but that was not noticed, as it was stacked up with them. My friend did not find out what he had done until we had left the race track. Then he was the worst scared man you ever saw. The original of the miniature was well known, and it meant death for somebody if the hollowed out dollar got into her husband's hands. First I went to the banks, but it had not been offered there. Then I went to all the faro banks and told the dealers that I would give ten dollars for that particular coin. For three days we were in an agony of suspense, and when the missing coin finally turned up at a faro table my friend thought it was the cheapest money he had ever got hold of."

The Arizona Onyx Mines.

One of the most beautiful decorative materials of stone and one of the most costly is onyx. Up to recently the only source of supply was the La Pedrara mine, in the state of Pueblo, Mexico. However, there are now on exhibition at Chicago about thirty specimens of onyx from the recently discovered Arizona deposits. Investigation shows that the stone can be obtained there of a size suitable for architectural purposes and of the finest quality. While the Mexican deposit was only three acres in extent originally, and is now practically exhausted, the Arizona quarries cover about 800 acres. The specimens on exhibition show infinite variety in color and take the highest polish. The exhibit consists of slabs about one inch thick and varying from four to twelve square feet in area. The Arizona deposits are located about twenty-seven miles southwest of Prescott.

CITY COUNCIL.

The Proceedings of the City Fathers at their Last Meeting.

Proceedings of an adjourned meet- of the City Council of the City of ookston held in the city hall on iday evening, May 27th, 1892.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

Roll call:

Aldermen present: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Marlette, Morrisey, Cromb.

Aldermen absent: Austin, Walker.

The finance committee reported favorably upon bill number 919 of Alex Grundysen for burying dead animals amounting to $12.00.

On motion the report was accepted and the bill ordered paid.

The city engineer presented an estimate on the cost of grading parts of Ash, Broadway and Robert streets as instructed by the council at a former meeting.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Morrisey, that the city engineer be allowed to withdraw his report and estimate on the sewer in the Second ward which was presented at a former meeting. Carried.

The city engineer presented a report on the cost of constructing a sewer in the Second ward. From the center of Sixth street southerly along Front street and across Front street to the Red Lake river, with an estimate of the cost of building of such sewer assessable to the owners of the property adjoing same.

The city attorney reported that he had settled the matter of the taxes for the lot on which the city hall stands, and that the county commissioners had rebated the amount paid.

The committee to whom was referred the matter of grading reported as follows:

To the Honorable City Council of the City of Crookston.

Gentlemen:—Your committee to whom was referred the advisability and possibility of making the permanent improvements now contemplat- by your honorable body, beg leave report:

hat the necessary improvements ow needed in our city are grading Broadway street between Sixth eet to Eighth street and from Sec- d street to Fletcher street, Ash reet from Third street to Loring reet, Robert street from railroad ack to bridge crossing to Jerome's ddition, Second street from Main to sh, Third street from Main to Ash, Fletcher street from Main to Ash, Sixth street from railroad crossing to Birch, also sewer in Second ward as contemplated. The total cost of which will amount to about $4,875.

Your committee would further report that there is now in the permanent improvement fund of the city the sum of $1,500, that other departments of city finances owe to improvement fund the sum of $2,000, that on June 1st there will be drawn from improvement fund $500, that the amount of uncollected taxes belonging to said fund is between $800 and $1,000. This would give us a power to make improvements to the extent of $3,300, should we desire to exhaust the fund at present on hand.

The expense of aforesaid grading will be about $1,761, of the sewer $3,100.

We consider that the grading is the more necessary of the two, and should it prove impossible to perform both, in our present financial condition, would advise that grading be done at once.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANK JEROME
MARTIN O'BRIEN.

Moved by Alderman Marshall, seconded by Alderman Marlette that the report be accepted and filed. Carried.

On motion the purchasing agent was instructed to have the roof of the city hall properly repaired.

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Jennings, that the matter of giving the mayor a special salary of $500 for the ensuing year be referred to a committee of three to report at the next meeting. Carried.

The president appointed as that committee, Aldermen Marshall, Marlette, McGlogan.

Moved by Alderman McGlogan, seconded by Alderman Jerome, that the chief of police be instructed to have the weather service flags raised each day. Carried.

The clerk was instructed to send to W. J. Murphy, president of Water Works, a copy of the resolution which was passed the 26th day of April, and relating to the Water Works company.

At an adjourned regular meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston, held the 27th day of May, 1892, Alderman Jerome offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Cromb:

The City Council of the City of Crookston do hereby resolve, that, the plats and surveys of the city engineer showing his estimate of the cost of and improvement with his statement explaning the same relating to the grading of Broadway street from Fletcher to Third street, Ash street from Third street to Loring street, Robert street from Great Northern railroad crossing to bridge crossing to Jerome's addition, be and the same are hereby adopted by the City Council, and ordered filed with the city clerk and marked respectively exhibits, "A," "B" and "C" of grade profiles.

Upon the call of ays and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Marlette, Morrisey, Cromb.

At an adjourned meeting of the City Council of the City of Crookston, held the 27th day of May, 1892, Alderman F. Jerome offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman Cromb:

The City Council of the City of Crookston do hereby resolve that P. J. McGuire, C. H. Mix and William Munch be and they are hereby appointed commissioners to view premises and ascertain and award amount of damages and compensation for property to be taken or injured by the grading of Broadway street from Third street to Fletcher street, Ash street from Third street to Loring street, and Robert street from Great Northern railroad crossing to bridge crossing Red Lake river to Jerome's addition to the grade established thereon by the City Council and in accordance with the plats and profiles thereof filed with the city clerk and marked exhibits "A," "B" and "C" of street grades. Said commissioners also assess the amount of each damage and compensation and the cost of such improvements upon the land and property to be benefited by such improvement, and proportion the benefit to be secured to each parcel of lands benefited thereby, without regard to cash valuation in accordance with section 6 of chapter X of the City Charter of the City of Crookston.

Upon the call of ays and nays, the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative: Anderson, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Marlette, Morrisey, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative: None.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of council.

Passed this 27th day of May, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
Pres. of the Council.

Approved this 28th day of May, 1892.

Attest: WM. ANGLIM,
E. C. CARRUTH, Mayor.
Clerk.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH,
Clerk.

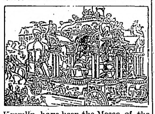
MOSCOWS' CHIMING BELLS.

Reproduction of a World Famed Novelty for Ringling Bro's. Grand Parade

Of all the cities of Russia, Moscow is the most renowned. In that city is located the famous "cracked bell" of history and there, also, for centuries the sweet-toned bells of the Kremlin, have been the Mecca of the music lovers of all Europe. The percentage of those who can visit so far a country as Russia is, however, small, and to exhibit in America a fac simile of the greatest curiosity in all Moscow, must be conceded a feat of startling magnitude. But this is just what the Ringling Bro's. have done. By long endeavor and expenditure of vast sums of money they have accomplished the almost incredible task of securing as one of the features of the World's Greatest Shows, an exact representation of those farfamed cathedral chimes of the Kremlin tower, the music of which has been the inspiration of musicians and poets the wide world over. As an illustration of the magnanimity of this great circus management, these marvelous chimes are not enclosed under canvas, but are exhibited free and open upon the streets in the mammoth daily procession, while an accomplished manipulator, imported especially from Moscow, discourses the sweetest of sweet clanging melodies. These famous bells will be seen at Crookston, Thursday, June 16th, during the visit of the Ringling Brother's colossal shows.



A New Map

When Napoleon the First was in the full tide of success, over-running Europe at his will, William Pitt said to his secretary, "Take that map down from the wall, and roll it up; we shall not need it for fifty years." In this country our situation is much the same; we have to put away our old map as of no use, but unlike Pitt, we never expect to need it again. His maker of new maps was Napoleon; ours the railroad. The geographies used in school forty years ago are curiosities for a museum, but did you ever think that but for the railroads, we might use those same geographies with very little changes? The country west of the Mississippi would still be the "Mandan Territory" and the "Great American Desert." The railroads have filled the west with cities and towns, and the Burlington reaches more of the principal ones than any other line. For tickets, maps and information, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

CALL IN.

First publication April 21st, 1892.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a mortgage containing power of sale dated May 13th, 1885, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, June 13th, 1885, in book W of mortgages, page 81, whereby William Watts and Edith Watts, his wife, mortgagors, mortgaged to The Middlesex Banking Company, mortgagee, the west half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of Section thirty-two (32) in Township one hundred and fifty-three (153), of Range forty-six (46), in said Polk County, by which default the power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover the debt remaining secured thereby, or any part thereof, and there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date hereof, $322.08, to which amount should be added the taxes on said property paid by said mortgagee, amounting, with interest as provided in said mortgage, to $22.40, making the total amount claimed to be due at the date hereof on said mortgage $344.48.

Now, notice is hereby given that by virtue of said power said mortgage will be foreclosed and said premises sold at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or his deputy, on

SATURDAY, JUNE 4TH, 1892,

at ten o'clock a. m., at the front door of the Court House in Crookston, in said county, to pay said debt, interest, attorney's fees and disbursements allowed by law.

Dated April 15th, 1892.

Somewhat rainy on Friday.

Will Lanctot goes to Minneapolis to see the great doings next week.

The post-office was closed on Monday in deference to Decoration day.

Tom Harris will attend the great convention at Minneapolis next week.

Supt. Jenks was over to attend the show at the opera house on Tuesday evening.

J. L. Hampson was up from Ada on Saturday in attendance on the prohibition convention.

W.C.Andrews, representing Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, was in the city on Friday rustling for his house.

At the sale of state lands last week nearly 500 acres were disposed of at an average price of $5.00 per acre.

Out of respect to Memorial day, Judge Mills adjourned court from Saturday evening to Tuesday morning.

The resolution in relation to only one term for office seems to make some of our county officials extremely weary.

Contractor Preston received the jack-screws for raising the St. Louis hotel last week, and is now at work raising that structure.

W. L. Davies dropped in to see the little gasoline engine run last Wednesday. Says it is a dandy, and the press the best he has seen in this country.

Tom Morris is putting on a good deal of style—gold bronzed railings and plush curtains in his show windows, but then he has a stock of goods that will warrant some expense to show off.

Superintendent V. D. Carruth returned from Kansas City on Friday morning looking more bright and rosy than ever. Mr. Carruth has taken the Keeley cure and says his craving for liquor is entirely gone.

R. E. White, one of the leading farmers of the Marais, was in on Friday to pay up his taxes, and incidentally dropped in to set his subscription ahead a peg. Although the season is so unfavorable he is well up with his work and expects to see good crops.

Our thanks are due to Andrew Goff for several views of Sioux City after the recent flood. Such a scene of devastation and ruin is seldom witnessed, and aside from the loss of life the damage to property must reach a very high figure. Mr. Goff will be remembered by some of our citizens as the boomer of the Robert street restaurant last summer.

Thomas Ulven got into a bit of a misunderstanding with a granger friend at the saloon of Wilson & Thompson, and in the fracas the understanding of Thomas was fractured to that extent that he will be upon the dry docks for repairs for a time. The foot will come out all right, no doubt, in time, but Thomas' faith in his fellow-grangers—that one in particular—will remain somewhat strained.

Col. Cobham Post No. 90 met at the post room at 10:30 on Sunday and marched in a body to the Presbyterian church, where they listened to an eloquent sermon by the pastor, Rev. O. H. Elmer. In the evening the Post, the Women's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans, went in a body to attend services at the Congregational church, where Rev. Mr. Batty preached a most eloquent discourse to a large audience, very many of whom could not find seats owing to the crowd.

In our issue of May 19th, the sudden death of R. P. Herrick, at Oswego, N. Y., was announced by telegraph, but no particulars were given. It seems that it was a case of suicide. The Oswego Times states that soon after his arrival at home, he went into the bath room where an hour or so later he was found dead, with his throat cut. It is thought that he was deranged at the time, and since this news has reached the city, his friends recall instances which go to show that he was not right sometime before he left here.

Barnesville Review:—Mr. H. A. Lucken, proprietor of the Ashby flouring mill, was in the city Tuesday looking the town over with a view of moving his mill here. Mr. Lucken was well satisfied with the outlook and considers the opening here for a mill to be excellent. The business men are now very much interested in the project and are prepared to assist the scheme in a substantial way. Mr. Lucken left with the determination to move his mill. If everything works favorably, he will be ready in a few weeks with a close estimate of the total cost of moving his plant and putting it in working order, and in the mean time the business men here will push the enterprise from this time on in the way of securing a suitable site and anything else needed to set the wheels going.

Geo. M. Swift of Mentor is doing jury duty this week.

Call at the JOURNAL job rooms for fine job printing of all kinds.

Braley has enlarged his barber shop, making it six inches wider

F. O. Sibley, postmaster at Winger was in the city on Thursday.

Dr. Moyer of Montevideo is visiting with friends in the city this week.

August Wentzel is building a large barn at his residence near the brewery.

Mrs. McGrew and Mrs. Sebastian went over to Grand Forks on Tuesday.

Mrs. B. J. Duntley goes to Minneapolis Sunday evening on a three weeks visit.

Dr. McEechran has resigned as coroner and Henry Shepherd is appointed in his place.

Ladies do not fail to see Mrs. E. E. Bangs' new summer millinery if you would obtain bargains.

Minneapolis will see the biggest crowd she ever saw in her life at the great convention next week.

Senator Hill is up from Wisconsin for a few days looking after the seeding operations on the big farm.

Herman Wold came down from Winger on Thursday evening. He has his seeding nearly completed.

Comrade King, of McIntosh, and Comrade Flesch, of Rosebud, came before the examining board on Wednesday.

The Crookston Furniture company's new hearse weighs 1300 pounds and is said to be the finest in the northwest.

Mrs E. E. Bangs is receiving her new summer goods, consisting of hats, flowers etc. The ladies are invited to call.

A. D. Stephens went down to St. Paul on Tuesday evening to attend a meeting of the republican state central committee.

Frank Montague returned to civilization on Thursday of last week looking much improved. He is almost as fat as a match now.

The republican editors of Minnesota will be given a front seat in the great convention next week and most of them will be there to take in the great doings.

Relative to the rumor that another circus will appear in the city on the day the Ringling Bros. show here, the JOURNAL is authorized to say that such will not be the case.

"Doc" Rutledge of the Fisher Bulletin was up on Tuesday. Doc heard that "she couldn't marry three," so he stopped at the opera house in the evening to see which one it would be.

Chas. Misner received a bunch of Jessamine buds from a friend in Texas last week. These are the latest fad for button-hole bouquets in the east, and have taken the place of the rose.

A. M. Stewart has been doing a rushing business in lumber. Besides supplying several large orders in the city he has sent several carloads to Dugdale, Warrenton, Fisher and other points.

C. B. Palmer returned to civilization on Tuesday morning as lively and frisky as ever and as full of business. C. B. is the man who was instrumental in getting our gasoline engine for us, and it looks as though C. B. did a good thing that time.

Chauncey M. Depew will speak in Minneapolis on Saturday evening of this week under the auspices of the press club of that city. As this will be the only opportunity afforded the public to hear Mr. Depew, everybody will naturally want to avail themselves of it.

A little two-year-old daughter of Martin Benson, of the town of Knute wandered away one day last week and got lost in the woods. Sympathetic neighbors searched throughout the whole night and in the morning found the body of the little one who had perished from exposure.

"She Couldn't Marry Three" drew a good audience and the people seemed well pleased with the acting. Several features were especially good, notably the scenery, which was fine. Barring a disposition to over acting, the play was very well rendered and well worth the admission price.

An exchange says that there are too many people who will not cast their bread upon the waters unless they are assured beforehand that it will come back again in a few days a full grown sandwich, all trimmed up with ham, butter and mustard, rolled up in a warranty deed for one half the earth and a mortgage on the other half.

The Kickapoo Indian Medical Co, have opened a three week's engagement at McKinnon hall, Crookston, commencing on Wednesday evening, June 1st, giving free shows to adults only. All under 18 years of age will be charged 10 cents admission. On Saturday and Wednesday nights of each week, the will be given a Grand Double Bill, and on these nights 10 cents admission will be charged to all. Don't forget the dates.

J. P. Nelson arrived from Pasadena, Cal., last week on a visit to the old home at Warren.

Dr. J. H. Thomas has sold his Robert street property to a Marshall county man for $3,700 cash.

Chris Houston will bring suit for damages against the Northern Pacific railroad company for injury from flowage.

O. H. Lucken and P. J. McGuire will take a furlough for a few days and go down to the great convention next week.

Bert Duntley has added a fine billiard parlor to his establishment, where you can enjoy a quiet game of billiards or pin pool.

The work of excavating for the cellar for Anderson and Olson's new building on Robert street was commenced on Thursday.

The prohibs held a convention in the city on Friday to elect delegates to the various conventions. Not very many showed up.

The Crookston Furniture company has closed its branch store in the opera house block and removed the goods to the Second street store.

E. D. Childs estimates that he will get in about 50 per cent. of what he intended to sow. Some of the farmers will not get that much seeded.

Will and Ed. Cleary returned from the west last week. They do not consider that the best country they ever saw either for health or wealth.

The JOURNAL is informed that E. S. Corser has 900 acres of plowed land that is too wet to sow and cannot possibly get dried off in time for this year.

The JOURNAL learns that John Hunter is at his home at Maple Bay on a 30 days furlough from the soldiers' home, very much improved in health.

Dept. Auditor Cornelius informs the JOURNAL that 4,000 acres of State lands were sold at prices ranging from $5 to $12 per acre at the sale on Wednesday, May 25th.

Mr. Lee and son Harry arrived from Buffalo, N. Y., on Friday to look after the Lee & Herrick mill property which has been practically without a head since the sad death of Mr. Herrick.

Deputy Sheriff Losey went out to McIntosh last Satutday to make a trip out in the country from there. Upon arrival he found the roads in such a bad condition that he was forced to give it up and return.

Jos. LaFramboise reports his seeding well along on his home farm near Gentilly, but on his Fairfax farm little has as yet been done. Says he will sow it to oats and barley and take his chances on that.

Beginning next Sunday night at the Baptist church with the subject "Possibilities of Young Men," the pastor, H. F. McDonald, will preach some sermons especially for young men, and a cordial invitation is extended to them to be present.

The bishop ordered priest Connelly of St. Mary's church to Duluth, pending an investigation into his conduct while here. An official of the church was here the latter part of last week taking testimony, which will be submitted to the investigating committee.

The Great Northern road contemplates beginning work on raising the grade in the yard soon and will have more than 200 men employed at that and on the bridge which work has been delayed somewhat on account of high water. This accession to the laboring force of this city will make business lively while it lasts.

Another soaking rain on Friday delayed the seeding until Monday. This has been one of the most extraordinary spring seasons ever seen in this country—so much rain and cold and so backward—at least a month later than usual. The fact that the leaves and grass is also backward would seem to indicate a late fall, the same as was the case in 1882 when we had one of the biggest crops on record. We have heard some of our leading farmers, who are behind with their seeding, say that they intend to keep right on until June 15th if necessary.

An item in the Times last Thursday kept Leonard Lucken guessing whether he had better go round and see Barnum with a box of cigars or a shot gun. The item was to the effect that Leonard and his wife were visiting the old folks. He managed to fix it up with the boys—a few good cigars did that, but however he will explain it to his best girl is what bothers him as the account of a marriage ceremony on that same evening at his father's residence might seem to give color to the Times' statement.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Lucken gave the JOURNAL office a pleasant call on Friday afternoon to see the new engine and press. Mr. Lucken being the owner of a flouring mill that runs by steam, is interested in anything that gives promise of cheaper power, and he is of the opinion that gasoline or electricity will yet solve the problem. Mrs. Lucken having been for some time previous to her marriage engaged in a print shop, has not lost her interest in the art preservative and was very much pleased with our elegant new outfit. They left for their home at Ashby, Minn., on the evening train.

The race course is being put in shape for races during encampment week.

A. C. Schmidt went down to Fisher on Wednesday to decorate a room for A. A. Tofte.

Hello there, Young Bros.! Where is that street sprinkler; or are you "two Young to know?"

The work of laying brick in the walls for the new Fournet block was commenced on Wednesday evening.

Complaint reaches us of the rough condition of the streets for driving purposes and the question is asked if all this is necessary?

Department commander Lange writes Commander Mix that he will be on deck for the great doings at the Park Region encampment.

Bro. McKenzie, of the Times, is going down to Minneapolis to see the next president of the United States (James G. Blaine) nominated.

All the ladies unite in saying that Mrs. Bangs has secured the services of the most artistic trimmer ever graduated in Chicago. Miss Hammond's hats are all the rage.

John Urness and Peter Cornelius tried their luck fishing Wednesday night. Pete informs us that they took about a barrel of ludi-fisk, or skip Yack or somedings like dot.

J. E. O'Brien returned from a pleasant visit to the old home at Belvidere, Ill., on Friday last, glad to get back to the land of pleasant weather again and looking very much recruited by his outing. From his report it would seem that other people can afford to have some weather also.

On Tuesday morning Mrs. I. U. Jennings received a telegram that her daughter, Mrs. I. M. Underhill, who is confined to her bed by inflammatory rheumatism, is very much worse and left for Portland, Oregon, via N. P. that evening to care for her. She hopes to bring her home as soon as she is able to travel.

The Scandia Furniture Co. has secured the rooms in the opera block, recently occupied by the Crookston Furniture Co., and is putting in a full and complete stock. The business will be managed by Chris. Hanson, who has been with the Crookston Furniture Co. for so long, and who is a man of experience in the business.

The Lutteman Sextette will appear at the Opera House here on the 7th of June. The Chicago Inter Ocean thus speaks of this famous company: "The voices are sonorous, fresh, full of that crispness and vigor of the north land, and thoroughly blended for fine esemble. The elaboration and beauty of piano passages was excellent, the delicate fading quality being beautifully sustained almost to the whispered breath; while the joyous and heroic element was carried witn artistic force and finish."

None but first class artists could elicit the following praise from the St. Petersburg Zeitung: "The Swedish Sextette answers almost to the claims which you are entitled to put on a classical vocal interpretation. The a capella song of the six gentlemen is a musical feast to the ears. It seems as if they had all finished their studies by one master and according to the same method. It is needless to talk about their fine musical taste, this is an evident thing." This company will appear at the Opera House, June 7th.

Our reporter interviewed Peter Misgen in relation to the rumor that he was going to shake Crookston. Mr. M. with some warmth said that he had never intimated that he was going to leave for good. "Why," said he, "I got enough of that when I went to Superior to live not to be fool enough to go away again very soon. No, sir, you may say that Pete will not leave Crookston. I am going to put in a pop factory at Red Wing it is true but I expect to sell it soon. In any event I shall return about July 1st to engage in business in Crookston."

The State Convention.

The state central committee met at St. Paul on Wednesday, June 1st, and issued a call for a Republican state convention to be held at St. Paul, July 28th. The basis of representation was fixed upon the Republican vote of 1888 which with five delegates at large entitles Polk county to 12 delegates.

THE REPUBLICANS

heir Tenth National Convention Opened Tuesday in Minneapolis.

Fassett of New York was Temporary Chairman and McKinley Permanent.

Harrison and Blaine Enthusiasm Rolled High all the Week.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 7.—It was fitting, perhaps, that the patriotic airs of "Columbia," "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "The Star Spangled Banner" should be the prelude to the opening of a national convention and scarcely had the last echo of this inspiring melody died away when Chairman Clarkson, of the national committee, rapped the tenth Republican national convention to order.

Prayer was offered by Rev. William Bush, chancellor of the University of Dakota, of Mitchell, S. D., who prayed that the deliberations of the convention might be free from partisanship to the end that the great good of the nation might be subserved.

Michael De Young, of California, one of the secretaries of the national committee, read the call of the convention.

"Gentlemen of the convention," said Chairman Clarkson, "I am instructed by the national committee to nominate for your temporary chairman the Hon. J. Sloat Fassett, of New York."

There was a momentous pause while everybody awaited the action that might be taken by the Harrison element in opposition to Mr. Fassett's selection. But the anticipated contest did not take place. No one was placed in nomination in opposition to Mr. Fassett, and when the question was submitted there was not an opposing vote to Mr. Fassett's election.

"Your temporary chairman, gentlemen," was the very brief introduction with which Mr. Clarkson presented Chairman Fassett to the convention.

The expected Blaine demonstration was forthcoming when Mr. Fassett advanced to the front. One prolonged cheer resounded through the halls and galleries, and the Blaine delegates arose as a man to salute their chairman, who made an address, of which the following is a concise summary:

> It is eminently fitting that a Republican convention should be held in a temple erected for the display of the products of protection to American industries.
>
> We are here not as warring factions, struggling to win supremacy under favorite leaders, but as co-members of one great party, seeking to select from the shining roll of our nored great men that type of statesman hich shall be regarded as the soundest and ost complete embodiment of the cardinal octrines of our party.
>
> Our differences should end at the convention oors and will end there. When this conven on shall have concluded its labors, we shall ave but one choice, and that the nominees of this convention, but one purpose, their election.
> The eyes of all the Republicans at home and the eyes of all our adversaries everywhere are intently fixed upon this convention. A nation is watching us, our enemies to criticise, our friends to ratify. The responsibility is enormous, but you will meet it wisely. The Republican party has never yet made a mistake in its choice of candidates—it will not make a mistake here. All over this broad land the bonfires are set to be lighted, the flags ready to be unfurled, and the Republicans at home are in waiting to shout in approval of your choice.

Mr. Fassett then reviewed the achievements of the Republican party in national affairs, beginning with the war of the rebellion and ending with the McKinley tariff changes and Blaine's reciprocity measures. His closing words were as follows:

> Our pledges have been kept, all save one, and I greatly mistake the temper of the Republican party if it will ever be contented until that pledge is made good. Our manhood and honor is pledged to continue the contest for a free and honest ballot until this vexed question is settled in the right.
> Sometimes we are told that the mission of the Republican party is ended. We have met our destiny and fulfilled it. But the destiny of a progressive party is never fulfilled in an advancing and expanding national list. So long as there remains a wrong to be redressed, so long as there remains a right to be enforced, so long as all the privileges of citizenship are not freely enjoyed under the guarantee of the constitution to all citizens of this Union, just so long will there be a mission for the Republican party.

Some one started the cry of "Reed! Reed!" and it was instantly taken up by the delegates and the gallery until the building rang with the popular demand for the appearance of the man from Maine.

"Reed is always in order," said Chairman Fassett, and reluctantly Mr. Reed arose from his seat and walked to the front under the escort of a member of the national committee. Of course the speech of the Republican leader of the national house of representatives was well received. His allusion to the sensitiveness of the Democratic party particularly excited the hilarity of the convention, and uproarious applause punctuated nearly every sentence of his eloquent extemporaneous speech. His closing sentence was "to have a nobler future is to give every citizen of the United States the liberty of thought and action; wealth and prosperity are noble, but human liberty is magnificent."

The temporary officers were selected by acclamation, and it was ordered that, until the permanent organization shall be effected, the convention should be governed by the rules of the last preceding Republican convention.

A Resolution from Sewell.

Ex-Senator W. J. Sewell, of New Jersey, presented the following:

> Resolved, That the roll of states and territories be called, and that the chairman of each delegation announce the name of each person selected to serve on the committee as follows: Permanent organization, rules and order of business, credentials and resolutions.

The resolution was adopted and the roll call of states began. A member of the Alabama delegation said that the contest in Alabama had just been settled, and he asked that the state be passed until the delegates could hold a conference. This was agreed to, and then each state as it was called announced through its chairman the members it had chosen for service on committees.

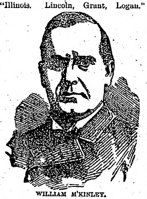
When the name of Kansas was called and ex-Senator Ingalls made his report as chairman of that delegation he was heartily applauded. An ovation equally flattering greeted William Warner, past commander in chief of the G. A. R., when he presented the names of the Missouri delegation, and Governor McKinley when he submitted the report of Ohio. The announcement of ex-Governor Foraker as Ohio's member of the committee on resolutions, also received hearty approval. Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania; ex-Senator Mahone, of Virginia, and ex-Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, were also received with enthusiasm.

Immediately after the completion of the call of states and the announcement of the membership of the various committees, the convention adjourned until 11 a. m.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Major McKinley Selected for Chairman of the Convention.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 8.—Cloudy skies with only occasional sunbursts marked the opening of the second day of the convention. Among the distinguished guests were George W. Childs and party just returned from their Rocky Mountain trip. California's lone banner of the first day was supplemented by a handsome blue standard borne by the Illinois delegation and planted in the main aisle, bearing this inscription "Illinois. Lincoln, Grant, Logan." Eloquently suggestive that if the convention chose to add a fourth name to that illustrious trio "Barkis was willin."



WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

Three minutes before the hour of opening the proceedings (11 o'clock) Governor McKinley, the chairman elect, walked down the main aisle to an accompaniment of cheers. He bore no roll of manuscript and it was evident that he had prepared no set speech. The snow-white but still abundant locks of the venerable Fred Douglass caught the eye of the galleries soon afterwards and the great colored orator and pioneer of emancipation was warmly greeted.

Mr. Ingalls, of Kansas, received another mark of recognition as he entered. It is evident that the galleries mean sooner or later to get a speech out of the brilliant and caustic Kansan.

The band struck up the "Star Spangled Banner," followed by a selection from "William Tell," and then the trombones showed off the acoustic properties of the hall to fine effect wrestling with the sonorous tones of "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." McKinley meanwhile had seated himself in the gallery behind the chair, in close company with George C. Gorham and Senator Carey, all friends of the administration. Temporary Chairman Fassett was late in putting in an appearance and so in fact were a good many of the delegates who were engaged in committee work. But the band kept things lively. Ex-Speaker Reed's familiar form was looked for and found in the same place as on the first day. Fred Douglass was invited to a seat on the platform. It was 11:45 when Chairman Fassett rapped the convention to order. The Rt. Rev. H. B. Whipple, Episcopal bishop of Minnesota, who had been sitting to the left of the chair, with his head protected by a little skull cap, removed that covering and opened the proceedings with prayer, as follows, the delegates and most of the audience standing the while:

> Almighty God, who hath promised to give wisdom to all who reverently seek Thee, who alone pourest into the hearts of men that most excellent gift of charity, we ask Thy blessing upon this convention. Help them to realize that the government is a trust from God, who alone has the right to govern, and that His love has given to every nation the right to say in what form that trust shall be clothed. Grant, Heavenly Father, that the one they may choose shall be a man after Thine own heart, a lover of righteousness, the defender of the poor and the needy and the guardian of the nation's honor. Give this people an understanding heart to obey Thee, that so truth and justice, religion and piety, peace and happiness, may be established among us for all generations. Grant this for the sake of Thy son, Jesus Christ, in Whose words we sum up our petition: "Our Father Who Art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in eaven, Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

Mr. Webster of Nebraska, asked permission that Mr. Walker of Nebraska, be given the floor to present a gavel to the convention. The chairman announced that he could have the floor. What purpose? said some delegates in the front row. Mr. Fasset explained. Mr. Walker then took the platform and made a little speech in so low a tone that there were cries of "louder" from all parts of the hall. The gavel was presented in the name of young Republicans of Nebraska, in the memory of the homesteads. There were two silver coins in the end of the wood.

Mr. Fassett as temporary chairman returned the thanks of the convention to the state of "Nevada." This slip of the tongue caused laughter, which Mr. Fassett adroitly turned by saying there was so much silver about the gavel that the mistake was excusable.

The temporary chairman announced the order of business to be the presentation of the credentials committee report. Mr. Coggswell, chairman of the committee took the floor and said that the committee was not ready to report. He asked permission for the committee to sit continuously until it had completed its labors; that if the committee is attended by reasonable success it can't report before morning. Leave to sit continuously was granted.

Mr. Coggswell and Mr. Spooner having taken their seats the chairman announced that the report of the committee on permanent organization was next in order.

D. C. Lockwood, of Idaho, chairman of the committee, was recognized and took the platform. He presented the name of Hon. William McKinley, of Ohio, for permanent chairman. It was received with tumultuous applause.

Charles W. Johnson was named for secretary and the assistant secretary of of the temporary organization were recommended to continue. The committee recommended that each delegation appoint an honorary vice president and secretary. Mr. Lockwood moved the adoption of the report and it was adopted. The chairman appointed Samuel Fessenden, of Connecticut; ex-Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, and General Mahone, of Virginia, a committee to escort Major McKinley to the chair. They came up from the body of the hall and went up the narrow aisle beside the chairman's platform to the place where Governor McKinley was seated. Then Mr. Spooner proceeded and General Mahone followed him down the aisle to the platform. He shook hands with Mr. Fassett while the convention cheered. Mr. Fassett turning from him thanked the convention for its kindness to him and then he introduced the permanent chairman. There was another tumult of applause, an Ohio delegate sprang to his feet and proposed three cheers. They were given with a will.

When the noise had ceased, Governor McKinley said, speaking with that clear enunciation for which he is noted:

> Gentlemen of the Convention: I thank you for the honor of presiding over the ninth national convention of the Republican party. A Republican convention means something. They have always meant something. Republican conventions mean what they say. They declare principles and policies and purposes, and when entrusted with power they execute and enforce them. (Cheers.) The first national convention of the Republican party thirty-six years ago met in the city of Philadelphia. The platform of that convention reads today more like an inspiration than the affirmation of a political party. Every provision of that great instrument made by the fathers of our party is in the hearts of the countrymen today. (Cheers.) Whenever there is anything to be done in the country and by the country and for the country, the Republican party is called upon to do it. (Applause.) There is one thing that can be said of our organization which cannot be said of any other—it can look backward without shame or humiliation and it can look forward with cheer and exultation. That cannot be said of any other political organization in the United States. Gentlemen of the convention, we are here today to make a platform and a ticket that will commend themselves to the consciences the intelligence and the judgment of the American people, and we will do it. (Loud cheers.) Whatever is done by this convention will meet the approval of the American people in November of this year. Rhode Island has spoken. (Applause.) Only yesterday Oregon spoke three Republican representatives to congress. (Cheers.)

Continuing his remarks Mr. McKinley said the action of this convention would be the law of the Republican party and the assurance of Republican success. The Republican party stood for protection and reciprocity. (Great applause.) It was not going to turn back in its course. It proposed to tax the products of other nations rather than our own. The party did not believe in "taxing ourselves so long as we can find anybody else to tax." A protective tariff did all that any other tariff would do and more. It stimulated American industries. Did any one know what tariff reform meant? (Cries of "No" and laughter.) You would read all of Cleveland's utterances and come away ignorant of what it was. There had been three great tariff reform bills since the war. They were made to symbolize tariff reform and none of them were alive. Mr. Mills and Mr. Springer differed totally. The Democratic house of representatives, elected, as they claimed, on a tariff reform basis, had passed three bills—free tin, free wool and free cotton ties. They meant free goods to the Democratic states and duty to the Republican. Free wool and tariff clothes, free cotton ties and tariff hoop iron. The Republicans today were to declare themselves on other questions, a free ballot and a fair count for everyone. No Republican platform or speech should be made without insisting that that constitutional guarantee should be a living birthright. (Prolonged applause.)

They could well leave to the committee on resolutions the duty of making a platform. "When we go out of this convention on a true Republican platform" said he, "we will go marching to victory, no matter who carries the banner."

The speech was greeted with prolonged cheers. At its close there were repeated cries for "Douglass," and the venerable ex-slave had to come forward and bow his thanks. When order was restored the chairman recognized Chairman Bingham, of the committee on rules and order of business, who took the platform and read that committee's report. The paragraph adopting the rules of the Fifty-first congress was emphasized by Mr. Bingham in reading and the convention applauded. Mr. Bingham explained that with two exceptions these were the rules of the last national convention. One of these exceptions was the insertion of a rule providing that a motion to table an amendment shall not prejudice the pending question. This was the rule of the United States senate. The other was the recognition of the house of the Fifty-first congress, "instead of the rules of rules of the present house, which permit indefinite filibustering, obstruction and non-action."

Mr. Cullom of Illinois asked if the printed copy of rules distributed throughout the hall was correct. He was assured that with one simple error they were. The report was agreed to without division. The chairman then announced that the next order of business was the report of the committee on resolutions. Mr. Foraker took the floor to ask further time. He could not be heard by the convention for the applause. The chairman heard him, however, and said that if there was no objection further time would be granted. The roll was then called for the names of members of the national committeemen.

Mr. Clarkson's name was greeted with prolonged applause, Mr. Manley's name was applauded and when it was learned through the announcement of the name of R. C. Kerens from Missouri, that the fight in that delegation had been settled against the old committeeman. C. I. Filley, there was also applause. Mahone's name and several others were applauded. Perry Carson's name was received with laughter.

The chairman requested that the missing names be sent to the clerk during the day. A Texas delegate asked that Texas be passed until the chairman of the delegation should arrive thus repudiating the announcement of Wright Coney's name.

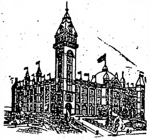
The chairman then announced that the next business was the naming of candidates for the presidential nomination. There was an excitement buzz and Senator Cullom jumped to his feet and asked that the list of states be called to name honorary vice presidents.

Mr. Cogswell asked that the rules be read. Clerk Johnson read them, and they provided that the reports of the committees on credentials and rules must be acted upon before any nominations were made for president. Chairman McKinley accepted the correction and withdrew his announcement. On motion of Mr. De Young, of California, the convention at 12:50 and adjourned until morning. There were cries of "No, no," as the motion to adjourn was made and the vote in its favor was small, but the chairman put it quickly and quickly declared it carried.

A MODEL CONVENTION HALL.

The Meeting Place of the Tenth National Republican Convention.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 7.—Under a dome of blue, with forty-four stars scattered very irregularly over its surface, but all of them there, the tenth national Republican convention met today. All the arrangements for the comfort and safety of the delegates and the public seem to be as nearly perfect as possible. The pillars on each side of the platform are supported by natural eagles with wheat and brown millet trimmings. The presiding officer's table has been specially carved by the pupils of the state mechanical school. His chair is of carved bits of oak, embellished with designs characteristic of the state.



AS IT LOOKS OUTSIDE.

On the face of the galleries and underneath them the shields of the forty-four states are emblazoned on American tin supplied by the Tin Manufacturers' association, of Cleveland, O. The shield and eagle of of the United States are displayed behind the chairman. To his right and left respectively are the twin mottoes "Reciprocity" and "Protection" in gilt letters on a blue field with brown border. A monster eagle of embossed tin surmounts the stairway by which the delegates enter. The thirty-six columns which now only support the roof, but which formerly held up the second floor, now removed, have all been gilded and bronzed. Where the girders of the second floor were let in the scars are skillfully covered by sheaves of wheat, oats, barley, flax and grasses, with bronze colored banners as a background. The galleries are artistically hung with brown plush, and the hanging gallery, fifteen feet from the roof, where the Chicago band is to discourse sweet music, is similarly draped in old gold. The roof and the skylights have been tinted in two delicate shades of blue, picked out with stars to correspond to the states. The passage ways and platform are covered to deaden the sound of footsteps with linen made of flax grown in Minnesota and woven in Minneapolis.

The delegates occupy a square to themselves in front of the chair, fenced in on each side by a wire screen. Oak opera chairs have been provided for their accommodation. The 10,000 spectators will be seated in two tiers extending all around the back of the platform. Care has been taken to insure absolute safety. The floor and galleries are all so girded and trussed that practically every chair rests on an independent support more than sufficient to uphold a ton weight. Ventilation, acoustics, light and decoration are all admirable. Minneapolis has prepared a model convention hall.

Thomas T. Holton, of Warsaw, has lost three daughters by death within a month. On May 12, Gertie, aged twelve, died; on May 14, Anna, aged twenty-five, passed away, and on May 25, Lina, aged eleven, expired. Gertie and Anna died of consumption, and Lina of heart disease.

The two-year-old child of Martin Benson, living near Crookston, wandered from its home the other day, and not returning at night a large crowd started in search. It rained nearly all night, but the search was kept up. The next forenoon the dead body was found in the woods, the child having died from exposure.

The seven-year-old daughter of George Schumann of the town of Hart, was assaulted by a boy fourteen years of age. The name of the boy has been suppressed. Mr. Schumann came to Winona and consulted attorneys and has concluded to settle the case with the boy, who is willing to settle and avoid a public prosecution.

Elaph Rund, who was arrested for assault at Minnewaukon with a gun and knife on Jonathan Mathews, was discharged by Justice Stahls. Rund was recently discharged from the insane asylum as cured. He is 45 years old and labors under the delusion that Jonathan's 15-year-old daughter is his promised bride. He will be returned to the asylum.

A sad accident occurred on the St. Paul & Duluth road at Sturgeon Lake near St. Paul, by which J. H. Barrows, fireman, lost his life. The engine and fifteen freight cars were derailed by running over a cow. Engineer Kirsland and the head brakeman saved themselves by jumping, but Fireman Barrows, who lives in St. Paul, clung to the engine and was killed.

The contract for the erection of the new Baptist church at Owatonna has been let to Kilroe Bros., of Minneapolis, for the sum of $14,000. The church will be of pressed brick, with brown stone trimming, and promises to be one of the most complete in every particular of any church in this part of the state. Hon. G. A. Pillsbury has promised to give the church the finest organ in this part of Minnesota.

J. Savage, a Concord farmer, about 55 years old cut his throat using every one of six dull case knives, nearly severing the windpipe. He then used a flatiron to smash his head and fractured the skull. His throat was hacked into mince meat, a large piece of cartilage being entirely severed. It took over an hour to sew up the gashes. The patient lost much blood and is in a critical condition. This is his third attempt.

On a recent Sunday evening Rev. E. A. Steiner, pastor of the Congregational Church preached at St. Paul a rather strong sermon against the present administration of the city government and the way the saloons and gaming houses were allowed to run in open defiance of the law. It naturally created considerable feeling and as evidence of the fact some one cut both the tires of Mr. Steiner's pneumatic bicycle while he was at supper at the hotel.

The Minnesota Prohibitionists held their convention at Minneapolis recently and nominated the following ticket; For governor—W. J. Dean of Minneapolis. "Reed and Rusk," yelled an enthusiastic citizen, as he saw the burly form of the ex-speaker in the West corridors last night.

Last evening Delegate F. W. Simmons of Iowa said: "You can announce that Iowa is prepared to vote for the nomination of Allison whenever any other delegation is ready to do so."

The Flour City Cadets band discoursed excellent music in the West hotel yesterday afternoon. Some of the members of this youthful band are so small that they are in serious peril of blowing themselves into their musical instruments.

It is estimated that the preparations made in Minneapolis were sufficient for 30,000 people. The best judges there place the attendance within 20,000 and to the credit of the Flour City it could care with its arrangements for double that number.

The subcommittee to which was referred the matter of the contest in Utah reported to the national committee yesterday, seating the regularly elected delegates, Salisbury and Cannon. The latter body unanimously approved the report. This settles the factional fight which has been going on so long, and the Utah delegation is satified.

John Flittie and Senator James McCormick of North Dakota were at the West yesterday. They are both ardent Blaine men, and declare that seven-ninths of the Dakota people are for the Plumed Knight. "The state senate is all for Blaine, and passed resolutions favoring his nomination. The house passed similar resolutions with only two dissenting votes," said Mr. Flittie.

One of the most prominent women present, who hugely enjoys the animated scenes in the West hotel as viewed from the second floor, is Mrs. D. R. Locke, widow of the late "Petroleum V. Nasby." She is accompanied by her son, Robinson Locke, proprietor of the well known Toledo Blade, and at one time United States consul to Newcastle-on-Tyne. Both have many friends among the party leaders and their visit is being made very pleasant.

Tom Reed of Maine, ex-speaker of the house of representatives, visited Massachusetts headquarters yesterday and was enthusiastically received. The ponderous Maine man moved around shaking hands with all introduced to him and smilingly accepting their compliments. He parried in a good-natured manner all questions regarding his opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of nominating Mr. Blaine.

Nothing but Blow.

Washington, June 7.—The senate passed most of the day listening to a speech by Mr. Vest on the free wool bill, during which he discussed the silver question, the tariff and reciprocity in his usual style, and fired many rhetorical shafts at the Republicans. No business was transacted.

HOW TO WRITE DATES.

Various Forms Used in Writing Letters Nowadays.

"The Listener" writes in the Boston Transcript; "January 2, 1891," is a date which looks picturesque, distinguished and fin-de-siecle on paper. It reminds one that the world is getting particularly old. It will be very interesting to write "1900" at the top of one's letters when the year comes around; it would be still more interesting to write "2000" there. Few of us will ever do it, though if science does its duty and finds a way to prolong a civilized person's life to the term of a California mission Indian's some of us may hope to do it. The writing of that date above reminds the Listener that there is a great diversity of usage nowadays in the writing of a date. Looking over a number of private letters, the Listener has found them dated in all of the following ways:

1. December 24, 1890.
2. December 24th, 1890.
3. 24th December, 1890.
4. 24 Dec., 1890.
5. Dec. 24, 1890.
6. 24th Dec., 1890.
7. 1890, 24th December.
8. 12 | 24 | 90.
9. XII., 24, 1890.

It would be hard to say which is the most approved of these methods. It is very much according to the taste and fancy of the writer, like spelling of the honored patronymic Weller. Perhaps the commonest method is No. 5, while the most vulgar is No. 8. It smacks of the retail store and laziness, too. Personally the Listener does not like an abbreviation in a date, and consequently does not like No. 5. We ought at least to have the appearance with our friends and the general public of having enough time at our disposal to write out the full name of a month at the top of a letter. None but a slave should be under the necessity of abbreviating it. No. 4 is old-fashioned and rather English; No. 1 and No. 2 are sensible and approved methods. The letter dated "XII., 24, 1890," was written by a schoolmaster and is to be classed as an evidence of eccentricity rather than of haste or laziness. It has a sort of antique, Romanesque appearance, too, though to be consistently classical it should no doubt have been written XII. XXIV., MDCCCXC.

GOING TOO FAR.

He Had a Somewhat Fastidious and Refined Appetite.

"Have you any cold vituals?" inquired the rusty looking pilgrim, "to spare for a hungry—"

"No!" snapped the woman at the kitchen door.

"Perhaps I was wrong in asking for cold vituals," he rejoined, apologetically. "If I had suggested tenderloin steak with baked potatoes, madam, and a cup of cocoa—"

"You wouldn't have got that either."

"Ha! My own preference, I acknowledge, would have been roast turkey with cranberry sauce, chicken salad, a morsel of Roquefort cheese and French coffee, with perhaps a glass of—"

"It wouldn't have done you any good to ask for that either, you impudent, insulting vagabond! You ought to go to work!"

"Madam," interposed the rusty tourist, with dignity, "I can overlook your total inability to satisfy the gastronomic requirements of a man with a somewhat fastidious appetite, but when you apply offensive epithets and offer unsolicited advice, you are presuming altogether too far. Madam, good morning."

And as he got around the angle of the kitchen he could plainly hear the dipperful of hot water strike the wall of the house opposite with a horrible swash.—Chicago Tribune.

A Brave Soldier, But Not a Warrior.

"The soldier is always more or less brave," remarked the veteran, "and even when he is not at all inclined to heroism he will when the tug of war comes rise superior to himself and do great deeds of valor. It is funny to hear a man you know, who will go right up to a cannon's mouth when it is loaded to the muzzle and a man standing at the vent ready to pull the string express his feelings when the spirit isn't moving him. Once when we were down there before Petersburg, when the shot was tearing up the ground in 40 places at once, I was lying in a safe corner with a man who had only a few hours before come through a perfect rain of fire, carrying the flag to a point where he could shake it in the enemy's face. We got to talking about war in general and this sort of fighting, and I said to him:

"If you had your choice, would you have war this way or out in the open, face to face?"

"There's only one way I'd have war," he said sharply.

"How's that?" I asked.

"Have it over, and that quick," he replied, and 10 minutes afterward he was doing a deed that won him his shoulder-straps.—Detroit Free Press.

Three Maidens.

New York Herald:

Three maidens went shopping out in the West—
West Twenty-third—when the sun went down,
Each thought of the color that suited her best
For a new spring hat or a dancing gown,
And had it sent home on the morrow.
And each for the man she loved did buy
A wild and terrible patterned tie
That each man wore in sorrow.
For women must buy and men must wear,
Though the style is enough to curl one's hair,
Or trouble dire to borrow.

BLAINE, BLAINE, JAMES G. BLAINE.

Up to the hour the JOURNAL goes to press no ballot has been taken and the prospects are that none will be taken before Saturday. The convention made its temporary organization on Tuesday at 12 o'clock with J. Sloat Fassett, of New York, as temporary chairman. After the appointment of the several committees and a few speeches from prominent men, like McKinley, Depew and the chairman, the convention was adjourned until 11 o'clock on Wednesday, when the committee on rules reported the program, the committee on permanent organizations reported, recommending that the Hon. Wm. McKinley, of Ohio, be the permanent chairman, and the temporary secretaries be made permanent, which was adopted. The committee on credentials asked for further time which was granted, also the committee on resolutions. After the appointment of members of the national committe by the states that were ready the convention adjourned until 11 o'clock Thursday.

Upon reaching the ground on Monday morning, the casual observer was at once impressed with the feeling that Harrison had the call, and had the vote been taken that day would no doubt been nominated on the first ballot. The Harrison men had been on the ground in force for several days; Depew, of New York, had had things all his own way with the New York delegation and as delegation after delegation arrived, practically solid for Harrison it looked very like very Harrassin' weather. The south, too, seemed solid for Harrison, and with the Indiana delegates behind him there didn't seem to be a chance for anybody else in the field. But the Blaine force were not idle. A few of them were on deck early, and by Monday night they were all pretty much on the ground. The arrival of the Fort Wayne Blaine club, with a fine band and four or five hundred Blaineites from all over the state, on Monday morning started the Blaine boom vigorously and all day Blaine clubs were parading the streets with their martial bands keeping time to the slogan "Blaine, Blaine, James G. Blaine." Although apparently quiet on the surface an immense amount of work was being done, and when the convention met it was seen that the Blaine forces were in the majority; they secured a majority of the committee on credentials and organized the convention. The Harrison forces have weakened very perceptibly and are now trying to work the dark horse racket, but it does not seem likely to win and every indication points to the nomination of the strongest mind of the age—the greatest statesman now living—JAMES G. BLAINE.

THE ONE-TERM IDEA.

Since the adjournment of the Polk county People's party convention, much adverse criticism has been indulged in by many of the members of that party against the resolution passed at that convention to the effect that no officer elected by the people should hold office more than one term. The more liberal members of the party acknowledge that the convention made a bad mistake in passing such a resolution. It is contrary to good government to be electing new men to office every two years. The one-term rule should not be applied unless the length of the term is increased. Especially is this so in regard to state legislatures and congress. It takes one term for a member to acquire a standing in a legislative body and become acquainted with the routine work and "learn the ropes." In the older states a congressman or a senator who can creditably represent his state is kept in office year after year. Why was Senator Edmunds re-elected so often? Simply because his years of experience, coupled with his ability, made him an able representative and an honor to his state. He had acquired an influence by which he could do more for his state than any new man that could be named. In the matter of county officers it is a wise policy to retain honest men, so they may become more efficient and serve the people better. If they become corrupt, remove them. It is such doings as the one-term resolution which is demonstrating to the people that the People's party is too prone to errors.

The only office which the one-term rule could be applied to with any advantage is the highest office in the land, the office of the chief executive. If the length of the presidential term was extended to six years instead of four and limited to one term, it would remove from the administration the strife and bitterness of a presidential campaign. To apply the one-term rule to the chief executive, four years is not a sufficient length of term. It takes a president about two years to get control of the office properly, then he commences to figure on a second term, and makes his appointments with that end in view, and hence the best qualified men for the positions are not always selected. It was thought that when the two-term limit was put on the president's term of office that it was a sufficient restriction, but there is a steadily growing sentiment in favor of limiting the office to one term of six years.

The JOURNAL wants to make another suggestion, and that is that the president's salary be increased. There are men in private life in the United States who receive a salary of $50,000, and the chief magistrate of a nation of 64,000,000 people should surely receive a salary in keeping with the dignity of the office. The niggardly salaries paid by the United States and the states individually is not commensurate with good government. A good business man or one who is getting a fair salary, cannot afford to accept a public office unless he can see some way to increase his stipend "on the side." Consequently we do not always find the smartest or most honorable men in office. If you want good men who will work for you faithfully and accomplish something, you must pay them in accordance with their merit.

A POOR POLICY.

The JOURNAL wishes to say a word about the habit which is indulged in to a considerable extent by many of the citizens of Crookston and surrounding country of sending to St. Paul or Chicago or some eastern city for their goods.

Few cities the size of Crookston can boast of as many and as good stores as tne Queen City. The stocks carried are large and well selected and embrace everything needed for man—and woman also—to wear, eat, drink, or make life happy. The merchants are accommodating and their prices are as reasonable as square dealing coupled with business principles will allow. And yet, despite all this, there is a large amount of money sent out of Crookston every year to help build up outside cities. Some of our merchants even do not patronize local dealers in other lines. This is all wrong. Every dollar spent in the city circulates among the citizens and helps to build up the city. Every additional business, or institution, or industry of any kind which can be supported in the city adds to the city's wealth. The business man pays taxes, rent, etc., helps to support schools, churches, newspapers and everything which goes to make up a city. On the other hand, the money sent to St. Paul, for instance, never returns, but goes to enrich and help build up that place, and it should require no argument to convince anyone that the policy of buying goods abroad is a ruinous one to the interests of Crookston. The JOURNAL is not making this complaint on its own account, but for the general welfare of the community.

There is still another peculiar feature about the habit of trading in other places. A man becomes hard up, his crops fail, or he gets out of work, and he goes to the local dealer who gives him credit for six months or a year. Finally through good fortune, or good luck, he becomes possessed of a little money. The probabilities are that he will take the money on hand and trade elsewhere and the merchant loses a customer and the amount of his bill; or perhaps he will pay the local merchant and then go some place else to trade.

For fifteen long summers—and as many hard winters—the JOURNAL has watched the development and growth of the Queen City of the North, from a little hamlet of a few wooden buildings set among the woods, till it is now a magnificent, prosperous and wealthy metropolis, with many manufacturing industries and fine brick blocks, a magnificent theatre—which a city of 20,000 people might be proud of—fine schools, churches and all the modern conveniences of a thoroughly American city. And no one is more pleased than the JOURNAL to note the prosperity of the place it located in so many years ago, and that it might continue to grow and build up more rapidly is the reason which calls for this admonition to everybody: PATRONIZE HOME INDUSTRIES.

FREE DELIVERY.

In the face of the almost unanimous demand of the people of this country for better postal facilities, the Democratic reform statesmen in congress recently attempted to cut down the postal appropriation by two and a half million dollars. The democrats see that the appropriations of the present congress are likely to exceed those of the "billion dollar congress" and are trying to retrench. But the people will not stand retrenchment in the postal department. A better and more complete service is wanted, and free delivery in country towns and rural districts is demanded, if feasible. Free delivery has been declared practical by Postmaster General Wanamaker, who strongly advocates the passage of a bill for that purpose which is now before congress. Millions of dollars are appropriated annually for the improvement of streams and fish ponds, where the number of people benefited is insignificant as compared to those who would be benefited by free delivery of mail. The farmers of our country—who are the backbone of the nation and pay two-thirds of the taxes of the United States—should receive some consideration at the hands of Uncle Sam. During seed time and harvest many farmers do not receive their mail once a week, or even once in two weeks, and yet these people have to pay for delivering the mail to thousands of people who never pay a cent of taxes. If it is possible to have free delivery throughout the country without entailing too much expense on the government, it would only be a simple act of justice to the producing class to enact a free delivery law.

MONEY MATTERS.

A Mississippi farmer writes the following on the money question: "I am a farmer and do not know much about politics, but I do see some serious flaws in the Bland bill. The aim of 'the friends of silver' is to raise the price of that metal by putting government credit behind it. Now, my country does not produce an ounce of silver nor an ounce of anything valuable in the mineral line. If the price of silver is advanced artificially, will it not take more of our timber, more pigs, more corn, more calves to get it? How? I know just one way to get dollars, and that is to find some man that has dollars and wants something he does not have, more than he wants his dollars, anh who will give me his dollars for something wnich I prize less than I do his dollars. In other words I trade my labor, my pigs, my cotton, my cows for the dollar of some man who needs labor, pigs, cotton or cows more than he needs dollars. If two employers are after one laborer, as in Montana, wages are high; if two laborers are after one 'boss' as in large cities, of the east, wages are low. If two pigs are after $1, pigs are low; if $2 are after one pig, pigs are high. If dollars, of whatever kind, get so abundant that three or four of them get after one pig, pigs will go very high; and if dollars reach the point where they are made by the million out of silver, and copper, and tin, and represent nothing but themselves pigs may be expected to hesitate before they will trade themselves off for something as common as leaves in October, and it will take a great many more 'dollars' to get one pig than it would take if the pig had no question of their value. But these extra 'dollars' will do the man who sells the pig no good, because the man who sells spools of thread and calico will want more of them for his goods. This happens, not because the pig and calico are worth more, but because the 'dollars' are worth less. I respectfully urge that a far more popular measure will be the passage of a law making nine eggs a dozen."

REPUBLICANS WELCOME CLEVELAND

New York Press:—The vociferous friends of Grover Cleveland are declaring that he will be surely named as the Democratic candidate for the presidency. The nomination of Cleveland will place the Democracy where it belongs—on a platform of free trade—without any misleading qualification. It will present squarely to the voters of the country the issue whether the principle of protection for American industry shall be maintained or cast aside; whether the American workingmen shall be safeguarded from the competition of European labor, earning from a tenth to a third of American wages; and whether the the United States shall become what English workingmen complain that England has become—a dumping ground for the refuse of European factories.

The Republican party would welcome another opportunity to defeat Grover Cleveland and the Democracy on the istes of 1888.

THE OUTLOOK.

Since the weather has become fairly well settled much land has been seeded and a very conservative estimate of the acreage sown this year as compared to last, is 60 per cent. Some who have been through the country pretty thoroughly claim that there is at least 75 per cent., and as everything is favorable for a large yield and good prices for cereals next fall, the outlook is certainly bright, and since the clouds have cleared away people are beginning to realize how fortunate this country is, with the prospect of a good crop staring us in the face, as compared to the people of other states whose crops have been completely drowned out. The large amount of grain yet unthreshed will swell the farmers' receipts for this year, and take it all in all, the amount paid for grain in the Red River valley in 1891 will not exceed very much, if any, what will be paid this year.

Business of all kinds is firm and rapidly increasing; business blocks are being pushed with vigor and a number of dwelling houses are in course of construction. Money is easy, enquirers from land seekers for locations, and capitalists for investments all tend to show that the era of prosperity for Crookston is only in its infancy; and that the progress of the next two years will exceed that of the last eight.

Grand Forks' Herald:—A matter of especial interest to Grand Army comrades and others, suggested by the recurrence of Decoration day, is the fact that the government furnishes headstones for all unmarked soldiers' graves. These headstones are supplied under the provisions ot the act of March 2, 1889. This law authorizes the furnishing of headstones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the army or navy of the United States, both rtgular and volunteer, whether they died in service or since their mustering out or discharge. The head stones are furnished, freight paid, at nearest railroad station, the government to be at no expense putting them up. G. A. R. posts, or friends of deceassd soldiers by applying to any member of the congressional delegation may be furnished with proper blanks for making applications for headstones.

Under this generous provision of the government no heroes of the war should sleep in unmarked graves.

THE "infamous McKinley bill" is still getting in its deadly work, says the Grand Forks Plaindealer. Within a month a Scotch Irish firm, employing from 1,000 to 1,500 hands, has arranged to transplant its factory to America and its new machinery is now being made at Patterson, N. J. During the same period an English firm of carpet manufacturers has moved to the United States because American flax produces the best material for the body of the carpet. During the same time a twine factory employing from 200 to 300 hands has been established in New York and will use American flax. Others will rapidly follow and thus an industry which pays the farmer a good price for straw formerly thrown away, that will cause the payment of $20,000,000 a year to American workmen, which sum has hitherto gone to Europe, and which will make a large demand for American machinery, is one of the effects of that "monstrous oppressive" piece of legislation, the McKinley bill.

THE special session of the North Dakota legislature adjourned June 3rd, after being in session three days and accomplishing the work which they were called together to perform, viz: The passage of a bill providing for the election of presidential electors and to make an additional appropriation for the World's Fair. A bill giving farmers the right to erect platforms alongside of railroad side tracks, was also passed. Previous to the calling of the legislature it was fully expected that $25,000 would be appropriated for World's Fair purposes, but it was a difficult matter to get an appropriation of $12,500 for a building. The senate by a vote of 22 to 8 passed a resolution endorsing J G Blaine for president.

A SYNDICATE of English capitalists, worth millions of dollars, has been formed to build McDougall whalebacks in Europe, and also to put on a line of steamers between Europe and America. The American Steel Barge company, of which McDougall is a member, is interested in the deal, and it is thought that the barge works may be removed from Superior, or at least run on a small scale after the immense works are established in Europe.

Grand Forks' Herald:—Tom Overland, who used to be editor of the Grand Forks Tidende during the Galbredson administration, and who has been living in Superior, championing the interest of laborers, for several years, sizes the situation up in the Superior Leader as follows: "The third party is a fake. I have no love for the Republican party but I can some reasons for a man being a Republican. The wage-workers put themselves at the mercy of the farmers' alliance, which is a worse friend to them than either the Republicans or Democrats. The farmers' alliance is composed of thirty-six-hour-a-day men who have no more sympathy with the ends sought to be obtained by wage-workers than the bloated capitalist. The workingmen will realize this before fall, and there will be a grand rush for the ranks of the old parties. Mark my words.

THERE is no lack of good republican presidential timber. Blaine, Harrison, Alger, Rusk, McKinley, Sherman or a score of others could carry the republican banners to victory, and the party would do honor to itself by nominating any of them.

HEREAFTER women married by Methodist Protestant ministers will not have to promise to obey their husbands, the word "obey" having been stricken out of the marriage service of that church.

More Taffy.

Joel P. Heatwole, the veteran Northfield editor, who is a strong gubernatorial possibility, and who knows a good thing when he sees it, says: THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has put on a new dress of type and is in every way a better paper. It deserves to succeed.

Grand Forks' Herald:—THE POLK COUNTY (Minn.) JOURNAL, with this week's issue dons a new dress of self-spacing body type and greets its readers with a bright, clean face.

And this is what George Winship of the Grand Forks Herald says. George knows good work when he sees it: "The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL has been improved materially since Mr. Hammond assumed charge of the mechanical department."

Fisher Bulletin:—The last issue of THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL came to hand with a brand-new dress, made up in the latest spring style (self-spacing bourgeois), and handsomely trimmed up with a fine selection of "ad" type. As now issued the JOURNAL is an 8 pager, and its make-up is a beauty to the eye printorial (is that good, Brother Cooke?) An entire renovation has been made in the JOURNL plant, whereby Messrs. Cooke & Hammond can justly boast of possessing the most complete printing plant in the west. A new addition to the building; a new Potter Cylinder press; a new gas engine; a new Sanborn paper cutter; a new partner, and a new outfit of job, advertising and body type, are a few of the new things which make the JOURNAL the leader in Northern Minnesota.

Printers Auxilliary:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, Crookston, Minn., recently celebrated its fifteenth anniversary by getting new presses. May its prosperity continue.

Warren Register:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL came out last week as a six column quarto. It is ably edited and presents a very fine appearance.

Crookston Times:—The JOURNAL looks very stylish and pretty in its new dress, which it donned for the first time yesterday. You have our congratulations neighbor.

Polk County Review:—Bros. Cooke and Hammond, of Crookston, are editing a very excellent "JOURNAL" and a beauty, too, in its new "dress." The new firm are evidently "hustlers," judging by the appearance of the "JOURNAL." Merit brings its own reward, and they will prosper.

McIntosh News:—The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, under its new management, has improved in appearance. All that is necessary for them to do now is to put it in line with the People's party movement and we will say the JOURNAL is a paper second to no paper in the county.

Lowry was for Blaine.

The greatest Blaine boomer of them all, says the St. Paul Dispatch of the 5th inst., is Tom Lowry, "Electric Tom," the New Yorkers call him. The Blaine men in the delegations can have his house and lot, horses and cows, railway systems, smiles, sighs, hopes, money, life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. There is nothing too good for them from soup to nuts. He has driven them, wined them, dined them, blessed and smiled upon them, and at this writing he is shaking hands with a dozen of them at a time, and prophesying the good time coming, when the cows come home with Jimmie Blaine behind them.

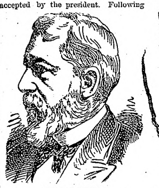
BLAINE STEPS OUT.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TENDERS HIS RESIGNATION.

And It Is at Once Accepted by the President—The News Causes a Sensation at Washington—Text of Correspondence Between the Secretary and President.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—Secretary Blaine has resigned the secretaryship of state and the resignation has been accepted by the president. Following are the letters of Secretary Blaine and the president:



JAMES G. BLAINE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, June 4.

To the President:

I respectfully beg leave to submit my resignation of the office of secretary of state of the United States, to which I was appointed by you on the 5th day of March, 1889. The condition of public business in the department of state justifies me in requesting that my resignation may be accepted immediately. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
JAMES G. BLAINE.

Accepted by Harrison.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, June 4.

To the Secretary of State:

Your letter of today, tendering your resignation of the office of secretary of state of the United States has been received. The terms in which you state your desires are such as to leave no choice but to accede to your wishes at once. Your resignation is therefore accepted. Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRISON,
To the Hon. James G. Blaine.

CAUSED SURPRISE.

Secretary Blaine's Resignation Created a Sensation at Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 4.—The news of the resignation of Secretary Blaine created a profound sensation at the capitol. The senate was not in session, but the house was in the throes of filibustering against the anti-option bill. The effect of the reception of the bulletin announcing the event was magical. The telegram was read by the speaker and Representative Dingley, and almost instantly the news spread over the house like a wave of sound. Within two minutes the space in front of the desk was filled by a throng of representatives struggling to get a glimpse of the bit of yellow paper which was snatched from one hand to another. The effect was very discouraging to pending business.

It did not take the Democrats very long to decide what view to take of the matter as to the initial stage. It means that Blaine is standing for the nomination, said one and all. But when it came to the secondary result—the effect on the Democratic convention, there was, of course, a division of opinion. Said Representative Dockery, of Missouri: "Fate is with us. It means that Blaine is the nominee; and Blaine can never be elected."

REFUSED TO BE INTERVIEWED.

The President and Mr. Blaine Decline to Talk.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—A reporter called at Mr. Blaine's residence shortly after the correspondence had been made public, and asked him if he would not supplement it with an explanation. Mr. Blaine smilingly but deliberately replied:

"The correspondence explains itself, and I have not a word to add to it."

The president was next called upon and asked if he was willing to say anything in regard to it. His response, though made with entire courtesy of tone and manner, was equally emphatic: "Nothing whatever."

The president and Mr. Blaine were seemingly in excellent spirits, and each ot them, after declining to say anything for publication about the great event of the day or its effect upon the convention at Minneapolis, turned the conversation to other topics with marked composure.

Mr. Blaine's appearance and manner and tone of voice, however, were especially noticeable as indicative of a feeling of relief and satisfaction which made him even buoyantly cheerful.

Wharton Will Also Resign.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Mr. Wharton, acting secretary of state, authorized the statement hat he will resign as assistant secretary of state July 1.

Rusk Says He's Not In It.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—In regard to the statement that an effort had been made to induce Secretary Rusk to accept second place on the presidential ticket, he gave the following explanatory card to the press:

"There is no truth in the statement whatever. My name cannot be used, either singly or in combination against the president, and no friend of mine will suggest it."

TOWN TALK.

Prof. Casad: You misquoted me last week. Our company does not start out till the 12th of November.

Ed. Martin: The C. O. D. base ball nine will play the Grand Forks team on the first day of the tournament in that place, June 21st.

Prof. Carruth: I have every reason to believe that at least 200 teachers will attend the teachers' training school here, which begins July 11th.

E. P, Pierce: I got home Tuesday morning from a trip to Ohio. I stopped over in Minneapolis a day. The excitement and intensity of feeling spoken of in the papers is not overdrawn. McKinley is a strong presidential possibility. In Ohio the seeding has been delayed by wet weather. Very little corn is planted yet, and much of the land is still unplowed.

Chas. Greenhalgh: If the people here would only advertise this country as Washington is advertised, this place would develop faster than the coast country. I was one of the pioneers of this country, coming here in 1872, and had I known what I do now I might have been worth thousands. But its not too late yet. There are more opportunities to make money right here in Crookston than any place I've been in. Looking at this place with the eyes of experience and travel I can see a great future before it.

Commencement Exercises

Every available seat in the opera house was filled Wednesday evening when the curtain rose for the high school commencement exercises. The three graduates, Jesse C. Childs, (valedictorian) Minnie E. Walker and Fred J. Tousley read highly creditable essays and acquitted themselves with honor to the school, the teachers and themselves. The declamations and selections were much appreciated by the audience, and before the close of the entertainment a little surprise was given Supt. Moore and Principal Chamberlain, who were presented by President Anglim on behalf of the pupils, with a couple of elegant gold-headed canes. The following is the

A Light Fingered Coon.

A gentleman of color who has been around the city for about a week succeeded last Saturday night in getting outside of a very large "jag," and by adding a little more enthusiasm on Sunday and Monday he managed to keep comfortably well filled up. But he seems to have run out of funds on Monday night and started out to replenish his exhausted exchequer by hook or by crook—principally by crook. He soon discovered that Al Vine's house door was unlocked, and going in he proceeded to put on Al's overcoat, and would probably have carried off more, but the noise made by the coon awoke the family and he made his escape. But Al gave chase and being something of a sprinter soon overtook the would-be thief near the Germania house, where he made him take off his overcoat. In the morning Mr. Vine had him arrested and on Wednesday he had sobered up sufficiently to tell Justice Spendley that he didn't know how he got into trouble. But the tender-hearted judge could not accept the explanation, and committed him to the district court. The fellow, who gives his name as Doc McDaniels, now languishes in the city bastile.

Gus. Williams Coming.

Crookston theatre-goers will be overjoyed to know that Columbus & Lent have secured Gus Williams for a one-night's engagement at the opera house on Monday, June 13th. Gus Williams is the king of German dialect comedians and German character impersonators. He is admitted by everybody to have no equal in this line, and those who delight to hear a legitimate comedy, with plenty of humor and a little sentiment, should not fail to see Gus Williams in "Keppler's Fortunes," which represents the rise of a simple butcher into temporary affluence and his fall into the hard-pressed state in which the rising curtain discovers him. Whether as the butcher just returning from the annual parade, or the rich and vulgar capitalist, whose family have "society" aspirations, Mr. Williams brings down the house with his horse sense remarks, while the topical songs and other specialties that Mr. Williams is famous for always send away a well pleased and a well satisfied audience. The cast is an excellent one, and the moral of the play that "contentment is better than riches" makes it a "home" play, and leaves a pleasant impression.

Next Sunday, June 12th, Rev. Jas. Moody will deliver his farewell sermon in the Swedish Lutheran church at 11 o'clock a. m. It is expected that Rev. S. G. Swenson of Moorhead will accept the call of this congregation and have charge of it in the future.

Kickapoo Indian Testimonials

BRAINERD, Minn., Jan. 25th, 1892.—Indian doctor: I want to tell you what the Kickapoo Cough Cure did for my baby, who was very ill with a cold which settled on her lungs. After using a great many remedies and poultices to no effect whatever, we finally heard of the cough cure, and bought a bottle. After the third dose we could see a decided change for the better, and she gained rapidly and is now entirely well. I would not be without it in the house for anything. Yours with respect,

MRS. ALICE BRITTON.

DELANO, Minn.—To Indian doctor: For twenty years I have never been well. One bottle of Indian Sagwa has done me more good than anything I ever took before in my life. Since taking the first three doses I have done more work than for the last four years prior to taking the medicine. I have only used one bottle of Sagwa. I intend to continue to take it until I am entirely well. It undoubtedly is the most valuable of any remedy known and I consicenciously recommend it to anybody. MRS. R. E. WILLFORD.

The King of Blood Tonics.

ROCHESTER, Minn., September 20th, 1890.—The Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co. Gentlemen: I suffered with that tormenting disease, dyspepsia, so badly that I could not retain my food. Was also suffering from impoverished blood and my body was covered with sores. I bought one bottle of Kickapoo Indian Sagwa and one box of the Indian Salve. In one week after using these remedies, I felt like a new man. I have bought more of the Sagwa and am going to stick to it until entirely cured. The salve has healed all the sores on my body. The Kickapoo Indian remedies have made remarkable cures in Rochester and I advise all suffering as I have to try Sagwa.

Yours truly,
H. J. MENGEDOTH.

FIRE AND FLOOD.

TITUSVILLE AND OIL CITY SCENES OF TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

A Swollen Creek, Argumented by burning Oil, Does the Awful Work—Human Beings Caged in Burning Dwellings by the Raging Waters—Number of Dead Estimated at nearly 200, but May Be Much Greater.

OIL CITY, Pa., June 5.—An appalling disaster has occurred here. Several tank cars of benzine were run on the Lake Shore bridge to hold it on account of Oil creek floods. The benzine became ignited from a spark from a locomotive and exploded, the burning fluid running down the creek. Many spectators were overtaken and burned to death. A large portion of the Second and Third wards were destroyed. A fearful loss of life is effected, one report being that 190 bodies have been recovered. A territory of forty acres, being a narrow strip along Oil creek, is burned or flooded, or both.

In addition to those dead a large number are injured and probably a thousand are made homeless.

AT TITUSVILLE.

Big Loss of Life and Destruction of Property.

PITTSBURG, June 5.—A Titusville special to The Times says: Titusville has been visited by one of the most overwhelming floods in the history of this county. A conservative estimate places the number of lives lost at fully twenty-five from fire and drowning. As near as can be gathered from reports as they come in the loss by destruction of property will aggregate fully $1,500,000. All this loss is in the city, with the surrounding country yet to be heard from. A large number of the most extensive and prosperous manufacturing establishments now lay in ashes and hundreds of homes and business places are utterly wiped out, while the street is filled with a crowd of hungry, homeless, weeping and distracted people mourning the loss of loved ones who have perished in the of flame which engulfed them almost in the twinkling of an eye as they were struggling in the vain endeavor to save their homes.

Rush of Waters or Fiery Billows

How It Occurred.

About midnight Saturday historical Oil creek began suddenly to rise. Heavy and almost incessant rains have been prevalent throughout this entire section for the past six weeks. This, however, does not seem to have been the cause. Late reports say that the huge mill dam owned by Thompson & Eldred and located at the little town of Spartansburg, seven miles above, suddenly burst. The wave was one and one-half miles in length and a quarter of a mile wide and many feet deep. This great body suddenly let loose made of the valley in the course of a few brief moments a regular inland sea. This sudden avalanche of water, descending when most of the inhabitants were sleeping, completely and at once shut them off from the higher portions of the city. Notwithstanding this state of affairs the danger to the city was underated, no one having the slightest idea that the flood, dangerous as it was, was to be

Soon Augmented by Fire.

This, however, was true, for at 2 a. m., immediately following three terrific explosions which shook the city to the centre, a great flame went up from the Crescent foundry. A second look showed the entire plant to be one vast sheet of solid flame, the light from which illuminated a full half mile of surrounding blackness and showed to the assembled and horrified spectators the full extent of the great calamity that had befallen their beautiful city.

Oil creek was now swollen to 500 times its natural size and reaching from one hillside to the other presented an appalling picture. Floating swiftly by on its bosom were all sorts, manners and kinds of animals and inanimate objects. One hour after the Crescent works caught another alarm was turned in and it was found the oil-running flames had scattered over the valley and the creek was one vast sea of flame. This blaze soon spread to the International works owned by J. P. Thomas & Co., and they were soon ablaze. In the course of the fire it has destroyed the large furniture factory, store and store room of Casperson & Rowe, the Cullen hotel, the Western New York and Pennsylvania passenger depot, the Western New York and Pennsylvania freight depot and about seventy-five dwellings.

It is impossible to give an estimate as to the number missing. It runs into the hundreds and without doubt fully seventy-five will be found dead. It is dark and rainy yet.

OIL CREEK DISASTER.

The Loss of Life Not Changed from the First Estimate.

OIL CITY, Pa., June 6.—The day after the disaster at Oil City is drawing to a close and but little is known of how many bodies are in the fields of smouldering debris which were blocks of dwellings two days ago. There is little reason to change the estimates given that 100 are dead. General Wiley said during the evening that seventy-eight bodies had been recovered. It is impossible to discover just who are missing, as the people are widely scattered. At least 100 are injured, many of them fatally.

Sixty-One Bodies Recovered.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 8.—Two bodies were recovered during the day and were identified as Mrs. John Linner and Mrs. Johanna Canty. This swells the list of recovered to sixty-one, all but two identified, and twenty-five still missing.

Will Sell the Plant.

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

[First publication Thursday, June 2d, 1892.]
[Last publication Thursday, July 14th, 1892.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Isaac W. Webb and Edna P Webb, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, mortgagee, bearing date the 6th day of December, A. D. 1888, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of December, A. D. 1888, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., in book 43 of mortgages, on page 417.

Whereas, such default consists of the failure to pay the following installments of interest, to-wit: $70 that became due December 6th, 1889; $70 that became due June 6th, 1890; $70 that became due December 6th, 1890; $70 that became due June 6th, 1891, and $70 that became due December 6th, 1891.

And whereas the said Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, the holder of said mortgage has elected to declare, and hereby does declare, the whole principal sums in said mortgage set forth due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said mortgage and the power of sale therein contained.

And whereas there is actually due and payable at the date hereof upon the premises in said mortgage described, upon which there is default, the following sum, to-wit: Twenty-four hundred fifty-four and 70-100 ($2,454.70-100) dollars; and whereas the said power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section twenty-eight, (28) Township one hundred and forty-seven, (147) Range forty-six, (46) containing 160 acres more or less according to the government survey thereof, all of said premises situate and being in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and seventy-five (75) dollars attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on

MONDAY, THE 18TH DAY OF JULY,

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XVI.

I was told at the Sacramento depot that the Golden State Hotel was on the third block up the grade. In ascending the hill, I caught sight of Brace and Lola walking in advance a hundred yards or so, yet so changed that it took me some minutes to identify them.

Swinging along at a good four miles an hour, and dragging the Kid along by the wrist, or letting her trot on behind, I should have recognized the Judge immediately at a quarter of a mile off. But, walking at an old man's pace, with his daughter leaning on his arm, he was not easily recognizable.

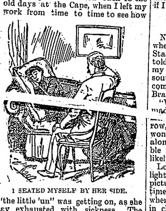
But in Lola the change was still greater. She was no longer a barefooted, ragged little savage, but a young lady with some pretensions to elegance in her dress; and thus altered, she looked a woman rather than a child.

Her head was bent, she leaned for support on her father's arm. She walked slowly, and with an air of fatigue; and, remembering the buoyant elasticity of her gait, the rebellious independence of her spirit, I asked myself with doubt if this could indeed be Lola.

I followed them into the hotel; from the vestibule I saw them enter a room upon the first floor. I ran up and stopped at the open door. Lola had seated herself on a couch, her face rested on the pillow, her eyes were closed.

It was the pretty little face I knew so well, but oh, so changed! Her cheeks were no longer round; the russet bloom had gone from her complexion; the vermilion of her lips was unnaturally bright. I was struck by the delicate beauty of her face, but it was a beauty that filled one's heart with sorrow, like the fading away of a divine melody.

I entered the room noiselessly, and seated myself in a chair by her side. I heard Brace moving about in the adjoining room. She was unconscious of my presence, and, as I sat with my eyes dwelling upon her beautiful face, my thoughts wandered back to the old days at the Cape, when I left my work from time to time to see how "the little 'un" was getting on, as she lay exhausted with sickness. The gleam of the white teeth between the parted lips, the curl of the long lashes that swept her cheek, the crisp little lock above her ear,—these were all the same, yet, with the undefinable trait of womanhood, so different. The bud had opened,—only to die? I had asked myself before if she would live. It was doubtful then, but the hope was fainter now.



I SEATED MYSELF BY HER SIDE.

She opened her eyes, and, seeing me, sprang up with a cry of joy, and threw her arms round my neck and kissed me, for she was, indeed, still a child at heart.

"Oh, it is true!" she cried, between her kisses; "I was asleep, and I saw you come to me, and—" she stopped abruptly, and, drawing back, said in wonder, as she looked in my face, "Why, are you crying!"

Hearing her voice, Brace came in from the next room.

"Say, now, what did I tell you?" he exclaimed. "The Kid's taken into her silly little head that she wouldn't see you no more, sir."

"She will see a good deal of me, if I have my way," I said, holding out my hand to Brace.

His countenance changed; he dragged his chin tuft thoughtfully for a minute, then turning to his daughter, he said:

"Lola, my gel, we must have it out now straight off. Here's Gentleman Thorne holdin' out his hand to me, and I ain't no right to take it till you let on what's come of the big diamond."

"Not now,—not now," she said, beseechingly; "in a little while,—a week,—no more.

"No, my gel; 'tain't to be put off like it was a dose of physic. See here,—see here. When we parted, Gentleman Thorne refused to give me his hand,—for why; he knew we wasn't playin' square; and, turning to me, he said: "You knew we'd got the stone, didn't you, sir?"

"I saw you hide the case," I replied.

"Consequently you knew we'd got the thing among us somewheres. Come, my gel, think how Gentleman Thorne nussed you out there in the hot sun; 'member how he stood by you and pulled you through. Don't let the best friend you ever had think you ain't got nothin' but greaser blood in yer; don't let him think you ain't got no kinder gratitude or 'fection in yer."

"Oh, you should not think that," she cried, starting to her feet. "I'll take you there,—not to-day, it is too far; but to-morrow I'll show you where it is, and you shall take it to her, and never see me again."

"I will take you with me if I go, Lola," I said.

She shook her head, and covered her face with her hands.

"No, no, you will never see me again," she said, and then a violent fit of coughing attacked her, and she left the room, closing the door after her.

Brace looked at me significantly, and in a low voice, that faltered a little, said:

"It ain't nat'ral for her to give in like that; it ain't like the Kid, not a bit. Her contrariness and obstinacy used to make me wild, but it didn't make my heart ache like this."

Lola came back in a little while, weak and exhausted, but with a smile upon her poor face. She sat close to me, slipping her hand under my arm, and resting her cheek against my shoulder. Her love was too innocent, or she was too ignorant of social usages, to know restraint.

"I don't want to talk; it hurts me," she said. "I just want to sit here quiet," and she closed her eyes, nestling still closer.

"You've come to a ruined and an onhallowed country, sir," said the Judge; "durned if I skercely knowed it again,—nothing but machinery and Chinese,—not a decent white placer in all Nevada,—them yaller varmint ain't left anythin' worth lookin' for, not in the or'nary way. It's got to be looked for in onor'nary places, and fetched out in onor'nary ways as I've said more'n once before to you; and my meanin' is that I could do the same if I had the means, and if so be the Kid keeps her promise,—as I do believe she will."

Lola nodded without taking her head from my shoulder, or opening her eyes, and the little sigh fluttered up from her heart. "As I know she will,—I'll do it; not for the sake of the gold, 'cause that won't be needed when we've got the diamond, but just to prove the prenciple of the thing. It's down an almighty hole up the Sierra, nearly up to the snow-line, and I've been there prospectin' it day after day, and studyin' the thing out, an' I didn't leave it till the snow forced us to come down, and now the hole is blocked up for months."

Suddenly raising her head, and turning to her father with eager eyes, Lola exclaimed:

'Blocked!"

"Ah, blocked for full three months by the snow, and for another by the swelled fall; it'll be pretty well June afore I kin get down it."

Lola burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, and clapping her hands with joy, cried:

"It is down there,—the diamond! You must wait—months,—almost till June," Then growing suddenly grave, she looked wistfully at me as if to see if I were angry with her.

CHAPTER XVII.

Naturally they were astonished when they heard I had been in the State a couple of months. When I told them I had come there to seek my fortune, and was farming in the south, where I hoped they would come and stay during the winter, Brace said:

"Well, I hear there's a livin' to be made ranchin', but it's a plaguey long row, they do say. Hows'ever, it won't be none too long for me to hoe along of you, and so be you're agreeable to havin' our company, it ain't likely I'll hold off."

Lola's eyes dilated with eager delight. I fancy her imagination pictured a return of the Transvaal times, the happiest she had known, when rude necessity knit us together in close companionship. I did not think it necessary to undeceive them then, and the next day I took them with me to San Diego. The sun was shining when we got there, and the air was soft and warm; it was like an early day of English summer.

The effect on Lola was miraculous: she seemed inspired with new life. I had never seen her so animated and gay.

Her countenance fell as we passed through the beautiful plantations, and entered the richly furnished house. It was an unhappy disillusion for her. Brace, who never let anything in the world surprise him, stroked his chin reflectively as he looked around him, and said:

"This is your lot, is it, Gentleman Thorne?"

"I shall be better able to call it mine when I have paid up the capital invested in it. As you know I had no money of my own. I have borrowed heavily, and until the loan is paid—"

I shrugged my shoulders.

"Until it's paid," said Brace, continuing my sentence "you've got to go to bed late, and get up airly, and be thankful hef you kin sleep sound in betwixt. I reckon it'll take you a pretty considerable long time afore you feel you don't know what to do with yourself."

"A long while!" I said gravely.

"How long?" asked Lola quickly, under her breath.

"Oh, many, many years, perhaps," I replied. She did not attempt to conceal her satisfaction.

. . . .

I gave the girl a wiry little horse; she sat it for the first time with the grace and mastery of a trained horsewoman.

Every morning I rode 'round the plantation; sometimes business took me to the city,—she never failed to be by my side on these occasions. But when I had work to do, it was another thing. She hated work, and dreaded tranquillity; she found an escape from both in a wild gallop among the foothills. She became coquettish with regard to her appearance. When she could coax a dollar out of her father, she would gallop off to San Diego to buy some trifle for the adornment of her pretty little person. If, by my manner, she fancied I approved the new addition, she wore it till she could replace it with something else; but, if I failed to notice it, or she thought it was not to my taste, she would fling it away before it was a day old. She abandoned herself to the enjoyment of the new life that came to her, and for some time she seemed neither to remember the past not think of the future.

Under these conditions, all trace of illness disappeared, and with health returned something of her old mutinous independence; paternal authority once more sank into insignificance.

Brace quickly found occupation, and, after a time, rendered me invaluable assistance in the management of the business. One day, as we were returning from the packing sheds, he said:

"I've looked round this consarn pretty careful, and I see, sir, that you're goin' to do a great big thing here. You've found out jest where the real grit o' this country lays, and you're goin' to work it up into an almighty pile. That's what you're goin' to do, and I'm everlastin' glad of it, for more reasons than one. And one reason is this,—I'm gettin more duberous every day whether we shall ever get the Great Hesper. For, fustly, when the frost breaks up, the great hole where the gel hes hid the stone, may be swep out as clean as a gun baril by the torrent of melted snow, or it may be blocked up for everlastin' by the mast of rock that comes rollin' down from the mountain sides every spring; and, secondly the Kid may change her mind. She may back out of the promise she gave us when she was sick. Rec'lect her mother were a greaser, and consiquently it's nat'ral to her to tell lies when they'll serve her purpose; and bear in mind it would serve her purpose to make out the diamond ain't no longer where she put it. Bear in mind, also, sir, as she warn't herself when she made the promise, and that she's been gettin' more herself since. Her obs'nacy and deviltry's comin' back more and more every day, and she's now almost the obs'nate, contrary little cuss she was. Keep on bearin' in mind that she stole the diamond purposely to separate you from Miss Lascelles, and to bring you down to a or'nary workin' man again. I see her game the day we lost the diamond; I see it clearer 'an ever when we got up to Petersville,—she was that angry when I told her there was no good to be done minin' in the or'nary way, so eager for me to write and tell you there was a going for the stuff down the big hole. Now, fortune to be made soon as I hit on the idea of what's she to git by givin' up the diamond,—a little wuss than noth'in. Which is why I rejice in the prospect of your making a big thing of this ere orangegrowin'. Still, sir, we ain't goin' to lose that diamond, if we can help it, and we've got two things to do. We've got to keep our eyes on the snow, and get down the great hole afore the wust of the slush and rock comes tumblin' down, and we've got to make the Kid believe as things down here is so jolly flourishin' as we don't kere two straws whether we find the thing or not. You'll leave that to me. I'll pitch it in strong to her!"

And he kept his word. Every day he exhausted his stock of adjectives in glorifying the estate and dilating upon the marvelous results to be obtained from fruit culture, and occasionally he referred to the Great Hesper with such contempt that one would have thought it was hardly worth stretching out one's hand to take:

This had the effect that Brace desired. She listened in moody silence, and, after I had turned the subject, she would sit with her chin in her hands, her elbow on her knees, and her great sad eyes fixed upon some distant object, wrapped in dreamy meditation. But Brace was not content with this.

One day I overheard him speaking to Lola when they were alone.

"I reckon we shall have to show off our good pints, my gel, before the squire and his daughter come here, or we shall look pretty mean by comparison, and Gentleman Thorne will sorter feel sick seein' us hangin' around. He'll say to his-self, nat'ral like, 'Well, here is this squire and his daughter, as I've never done nothin' in partickler for, has set me up in a business as is goin' to make me the most eternal all-fired millionaire that ever lived; and, on the other hand, here's this derned old Judge, as skercely earns his salt, and the Kid, as I've nussed and saved twice from dying right out, and all they've ever done for me is ter rob me of all I hed, and do their level best to clean me out and ruin me.' "

He might have continued, being of a persevering sort, but that Lola ran away to her room, slammed the door, and burst into a fit of crying, that could be heard where I sat on the terrace.

Fun With a Newly Married Man.

A Solicitor—"For a good many years my numerous friends annoyed me with the inquiry as to why I did not marry. But for the well known friendship of these inquiries I might have thought that their interest in my welfare was impertinent. Finally I found the girl who would have me and I married her. I did not think it necessary to hire a brass band to travel about town announcing the fact that I had found bliss. Neither did I hide my new life under a bushel. A few days after the news got out among my solicitous friends I was called on by several of them who proceeded to congratulate me. Then they took a rope and tied around my waist, pinioned my arms and marched me down to a cafe and there informed me that the dinner was on me. I yielded, and had a good time. set up everything there was in the house. Then they tied me again, trotted me around to their friends, kept me out until morning and then left me on my doorstep, still bound hand and foot, where I remained until a policeman came along, and he rang my bell. My wife came down, released me and took me in. I explained to her how the boys had been having fun with me, and as she seemed to enjoy the joke I fell to laughing about it myself, and I now tell it to you with the understanding that my name does not go."—Chicago Tribune.

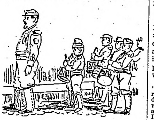
LAST FIELD DAY.

Associated Press Gossip on the Day Preceding the Big Convention.

Harrison Managers Succeed in Holding Their Delegates Well in Hand.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 7.—The sun goes down without any decisive gain by either faction. The Harrison managers have succeeded in holding their delegates well in hand without a break, while on the other hand the Blaine side has been reinforced by outside influence. Henceforth the shouting for the Plumed Knight is likely to become more and more vociferous, and is expected to give tone to the crowd in the hall. The Blaine managers hope this popular demand will serve as an excuse for some of the delegates instructed for Harrison to break away and vote for Blaine. There is no doubt that the president has an advantage in the instructions which bind many whose first choice would be the statesman from Maine. The situation is an embarrassing one to all such. Take the delegation from Iowa as an example. The state is a a Blaine state, and yet a majority of the delegation will vote for Harrison. This is explained by Mr. Wheeler, who headed the ticket for governor, to be due to the supposition that Mr. Blaine would not be a candidate, and the management being left to those not heretofore active, care was taken to select those friendly to the administration. This has been interpreted to mean a rebuke to Mr. Clarkson—a mistake which was emphatically corrected to-day in the



THE DENVER DRUM CORPS.

UNANIMOUS RE-ELECTION OF MR. CLARKSON

to represent the state on the national committee. Then there is the Illinois delgation, which is understood to stand thirty-two for Harrison to sixteen for Blaine—a larger number for the latter than was at first supposed. Mr. Raymond and two district delegates refuse to be bound by instructions, which they claim were given when the conditions were different, and when it was supposed Mr. Blaine would not allow his name to be used. They feel absolved by the change, and claim that they have a right to judge of their duty in their relations to their constituents. George B. Swift, another Blaine friend in the Illinois delegation, construes his obligation differently. He will follow his instructions and vote for Harrison, although he would prefer to vote for Blaine. Sheriff James H. Gilbert will do the same; but if the president should fail of a nomination on the first ballot, Mr. Gilbert would be likely to change to Blaine. There are others in other delegations who would also change after a first ballot.

The Harrison managers are displaying first class generalship in keeping their forces pledged to vote for the president first. They confidently count on a nomination on the first ballot, and the figures they exhibit are confirmed from information from other sources. There is not a doubt that if the convention were to reach a vote to-morrow

MR. HARRISON WOULD WIN.

From the ranks of the great multitude of uncommitted harmony-seeking Republicans, there has suddenly sprung up a strong movement for McKinley as a compromise candidate. In Ohio alone does this movement fail to evoke the enthusiasm that is requisite to success. The Foraker and Sherman factional contests have long divided the Republicans of that state, and the fact that McKinley has recently been accused of favoring the Sherman element has provoked unfeigned hostility from certain of the Foraker delegates. Foraker states his belief that Sherman could receive the solid support o. Ohio should the other states turn to the Buckeye delegation for a candidate, but he has made no public declaration as to the availability of McKinley. Should Sherman be elevated to the presidency, the Foraker men would almost certainly triumph in the election of their chief to the senate as his successor, while no special benefit would result from the elevation of McKinley. Despite the coldness with which the McKinley movement is received by certain of the Ohio delegates, however, there is no doubt the prevailing sentiment to-day is for the Buckeye governor, if the acrimony of the contest should demand a compromise candidate to save the party.

Of the midnight rumors one of the most interesting is that some of the delegates from the South which have been claimed for Harrison will record their votes for McKinley after the second ballot, as something in the nature of a feeler. This would be a repetition of history of the Chicago convention of four years ago.

Gov. McKinley said to-night, speaking of the reported defection of Southern delegates: "Yes, they will keep on getting votes from the South until the balloting begins."

A careful canvass made by Mr. Harrison's people this evening shows that he can lose fifty Southern votes and still be nominated on the first ballot.

RUSK NOT IN IT.

His Name Must Not Be Used Against President Harrison.

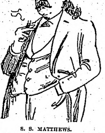
WASHINGTON, June 7.—In regard to the statement that an effort had been made to induce Secretary Rusk to accept second place on the presidential ticket, he gave the following explanatory card to the press to-day:

There is no truth in the statement whatever. My name cannot be used, either singly or in combination against the president, and no friend of mine will suggest it.

MORE THAN CONFIDENT.

After the Hubbub the Harrison Leaders Feel Assured of Victory.

Late last night, with the heavy work of the day finished, although the crowds were still making Rome howl with their music and cheers, the Harrison managers expressed the same unbounded confidence in the renomination of the president that has marked all their utterances since the campaign opened in dead earnest.



S. S. MATTHEWS.

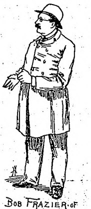
NOT A CANDIDATE.

McKinley Says That There Are but Two Men in the Field.

The arrival this morning of Maj. McKinley was a source of considerable satisfaction to the other leaders of the president's cause, who have been awaiting his advice and counsel with some degree of impatience, and who expect to profit by his personal popularity and influence and his wide acquaintance among the delegates.

"I am for Harrison," said Gov. McKinley, "and I think he will be nominated. Mr. Blaine's resignation has placed him in the field as a candidate. I think it will strengthen rather than weaken Harrison's chances. He has lost that attractiveness which accompanies uncertainty. I think Blaine's resignation at this time was a mistake. I think it has hurt him with the delegates and with the people. We could feel the effect of it as we came through the country. The announcement would daze a big crowd such as you have here, but where one man heard it he had an opportunity to think quietly, and I believe the general judgment of the people is that Mr. Blaine has made a mistake."

Gov. McKinley said he did not know enough to form a judgment of Harrison's strength. He did not know how the Obio delegation was divided. Concerning the permanent chairmanship he said: "I am not a candidate for the place. If I should be asked to serve I should do so."



BOB FRAZIER OF DETROIT.

The reporter asked the governor if there was any possibility that his name would come before the convention.

"I am not in any sense a candidate," he said. "I will not even discuss it. I take it that only two names are before the convention and that the nomination will be made on the first ballot."

McKinley was accompanied to Chicago by Delegate at Large William H. Hahn, nearly all the state officers and five car loads of prominent Buckeye Republicans.

MORE BLAINEITES.

The Young Men's Republican Blaine Club of Cincinnati Arrives.

The Young Men's Republican Blaine club of Cincinnati arrived in the city this forenoon and with it came another blaze of Blaine enthusiasm. The famous Cincinnati band, said to be one of the finest bands in America, accompanied the club, and as ex-Gov. Foraker met the club at the depot there were hilarious cheers for the fiery orator of the Buckeye state and the band struck up an air of welcome. The march from the depot to the West was a triumphant one. Ex-Gov. Foraker in a carriage led the column, and as the white hatted young Republicans, several hundred strong, followed in majestic tread they were loudly cheered at every corner. At the head was a magnificent silk banner, emblazoned in gilt, bearing the portrait of James G. Blaine and containing loyal allusions to his eminent qualities of leadership. No less than 5,000 people were assembled at the West hotel when the column reached its destination, and the scene was one of grandeur as the club passed in front of the hotel, hoisted its banners and gave alternate cheers for Blaine and Foraker.

TWO FAKES.

Wild Stories About Both Harrison and Blaine Denied.

The following letter was made public here to-day on authority of B. C. Marsh of East St. Louis, a relative of Senator Cullom:

Shelby M. Cullom, Grand Pacific hotel, Chicago—Dear Sir: In case I am not nominated on the first ballot, you will please withdraw my name from the convention. Yours truly,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Senator Cullom made the following statement in regard to the above:

I never heard of B. C. Marsh before. His statement is positively and absolutely without foundation—not the slightest foundation for it on earth. I have not received any letter or telegram from Harrison in six months. He has never communicated to me anything in regard to his desires in this matter. The whole thing is a sure fabrication. B. C. Marsh is no relative of mine—I never heard of him.

Swept Over the Falls.

MILWAUKEE, June 7.—John G. Loewe and his two sons, aged eight and ten years, were drowned yesterday at the Silver Creek dam, about three miles north of this city, on the Milwaukee river. Mr. Loewe, his two sons and Michael Schwartz, a market gardener, started out in a small boat on a fishing trip. There was a strong current in the river and before either was aware of the danger Loewe lost control of the boat. The party was swept over the falls and father and sons perished. Schwartz was hurled beyond the falls and succeeded in swimming ashore. Mr. Loewe was a miller, and was half owner of the flour mill which gets its power from the falls where he lost his life.

A. G. Gallasch was in the city last week.

I. Messelt was in from Winger last week.

Hats from 20 cents up, at Mrs. E. E. Bangs'.

Mrs. Newland has been very ill with asthma the past week.

Miss Susie Schouweiller is visiting with relatives in Barnesville for a month.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Morris take possession of their elegant cottage this week.

Comrade Kistenmacher, who has been on the sick list for a few days is convalescent.

Adolph Rauch is tapping the mains to put water into the old Hack and Gallasch building.

Mrs. C. P. Hathaway was so ill last week as to require constant attention both day and night.

Engineer Bunnell's family have moved into the Anderson building, next to the Methodist church.

Geo. M. Swift and Elling Knudson were mustered in as comrades of Col. Cobham post on Decoration day.

Try our new job department for fine printing. Any kind of work promptly and well done. Give us a call.

Court closed Tuesday morning, and Judge Mills and Stenographer Bornsteadt left for Moorhead on the evening train.

Mrs W. E. Walker and her sister, Mrs. Leslie McDonald have gone to St. Paul and Minneapolis for a visit with relatives and friends.

R. G. Marlette came over to see our little gasoline engine last Saturday with a view to getting one of his own. Thinks it is a daisy.

Hon. Knute Nelson signifies his intention to be in attendance at the reunion in July. Dan Lawlor, of St. Paul, is also expected.

C. O. Christianson spent last week in Fargo, and went to the great convention at Minneapolis this week, where he was appointed assistant sergeant-at-arms.

Doc Warninger says the trotting association now has the finest half-mile track in the state. Notwithstanding the rainy weather they have been able to get it in elegant shape.

Wm. Skinner, of Fisher, dropped in to see us on Saturday, and ordered his subscription set ahead a peg. Mr. S. says he has his seeding nearly completed and when through he will have 400 acres in grain. A pretty good showing for this year.

Rev. S. Currie was in from Euclid on Saturday evening and gave us a pleasant call. He has ordered a gasoline engine and expects to set it to work threshing this fall. If this power is practical for threshing it will be far cheaper than wood or coal or even straw.

If it isn't a zoo it would be if those critters were alive that Earnest Rolsch has on exhibition at his place. There you can see a fox, a mink, a badger, a woodchuck, a weasel asleep, ducks, geese, cranes, owls, prarie chickens, grouse and an eagle, but they are all stuffed.

The mean temperature for Polk county as deduced from reports of Voluntary Observer John Ross at Crookston for May was 48 degrees. Maxium temperature 77° date 23rd, minimum and date 20° on 27th. Total precipitation 3.51 inches. Greatest daily precipitation 1.53 occurred May 17th. Prevailing direction of wind N. W. Number of rainy days, 10.

Commander Mix informed the JOURNAL that letters from Mankato and other points give assurance of a large attendance from southern and central Minnesota at the re-union in July. Our citizens have manifested commendible interest in this re-union and it is bound to be a big success. Everything indicates that an immense crowd will be here to be entertained and provided for and the provisions therefor should be on the largest scale. That this will be done is evident.

Saturday was a notable day in one particular—the absence of dogs upon the streets. East and west, north and south upon every street as far as the eye could reach hardly a dog could be seen, and the grocers and the fruit stand proprietors breathed freer, and the family circle enjoyed fresh fruits and vegetables to a remarkably pleasant extent, and all this because the dog-catcher was abroad in the land taking in every dog that was unfortunate enough to be caught without a neck-tie. Many a funny and many a pathetic scene was witnessed as the unfortunate dogs were impounded, and there were curs of high and low degree all herded together, but the city breathed freer for the nonce.

Mayor Ostrom of Warren was in the city Friday night.

Mrs. L. D. Marshall and family left Tuesday night for an extended eastern trip.

Editors Stevens and Mattson of Warren went down to the convention Monday night.

Mrs E. E. Bangs is receiving her new summer goods, consisting of hats, flowers etc. The ladies are invited to call.

The only and original Gus Williams appears at the opera house on the 13th inst in "Keppler's Fortunes." Don't miss it.

Chief of Police Gonyea couldn't resist the temptation to go to the convention, so he packed his grip and started for Minneapolis Monday night.

Mr. A. M. Silver, the American Express Co's agent here, received a very choice package Tuesday morning, his wife having presented him with a little daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Stephens have gone east on a three weeks trip. They will stop in Minneapolis long enough for A. D. to see the next president nominated.

A jolly trio of Crookstonites composed of Messrs Norrie, Hoch and Tellada left for the Red Lake reservation Tuesday morning on a two weeks hunting and fishing trip.

A. E. Brush, a well-to-do farmer from Angus, dropped in Wednesday to look at the JOURNAL's engine. If practical for running a thresher he will probobly purchase a gasoline engine.

A great deal of wheat was sown last week, practically finishing wheat sowing for this season though a few will continue through part of next week. Considerable barley will yet be sown and some oats.

A call at Dr. Henault's dental parlors last week showed that gentleman nicely fixed for business. He has added another room and fixed up both in elegant shape and is now ready to atend to everything in his line with neatness and dispatch.

The services at the M. E. church next Sunday are as follows: In the morning the pastor, Rev. J. J. Edwards, will preach a sermon to the children. In the evening an interesting children's day service will be given by the Sabbath school. Everybody cordially welcomed.

M. R. Brown's new barn is a model of neatness and convenience containing 40 good roomy stalls and plenty of room overhead for hay. It is also so arranged that each stall can have a plentiful supply of fresh air, or can be ventilated at the same time at will. A neat and pleasant office is done off in one corner of the barn.

The Lutteman Swedish Sextette gave one of their inimitable concerts at the Opera House Tuesday night to a small but appreciative audience. This company is deserving of all the good things which have been said about them. Their voices harmonize as perfectly as though each part was arranged and played on a pipe organ, and each note is given clear and distinct without any effort.

Alderman I. U. Jennings had quite an adventure with his dog Max last Friday evening. Just as he was about to start for the post rooms word was brought him that Max had fallen into the clutches of the dog-catcher so he went to the pound and explained why it was that Max did not have the talisman—a collar. He managed to get matters satisfactorily arranged but kept the post waiting 20 minutes for the appearance of a commander.

The next attraction at the opera house will be Orson Clifford in the sensational drama "Avenged." The scenes are laid in the west and are full of stirring incidents, portraying in a life-like manner the hardships, mishaps, loves and crosses of life on the western plains. Horses, dogs, etc. are used on the stage, leaving nothing out of the play to draw on the imagination for. Reduced prices will be given, viz: 15c, 25c, 35c, 50c and 75c.

Henry Bradshaw informs the JOURNAL that he was not the man who so brutally killed Sture's cow by dragging her across the bridge by a log chain hitched about her neck. While it was his team that his boys were driving, he says it was James Simpson who was responsible, as his boys only consented at the request of said Simpson. This relieves Mr. B. but we should have thought the boys would have had sense enough not to consent to such a brutal arrangement.

On Friday night, as we sat in our den figuring out the nomination and election of James G. Blaine, suddenly there came to our ears, borne on the soft summer evening breezes the dulcet strains of sweet music. Slipping outside we beheld the Crookston string band, Dr. W. A. Robertson and Prof. H. N. Casad just everlastingly picking music out of stringed instruments. After a very pleasant half-hour the band left to serenade others while we returned to dream it all o'er again.

Ladies do not fail to see Mrs. E. E. Bangs' new summer millinery if you would obtain bargains.

Charlie Vine is not doing any bragging but he is just simply selling the choicest cuts in the market. Try him.

The delegates to the firemen's state convention—Chief McKinnon, Fred Rauch and Henry Peterson—will leave for Rochester next Sunday evening.

W. E. Slocum is enjoing a visit with his father, mother and sister who arrived from Charles City, Iowa, on Thursday morning for a short visit.

The County Sunday School convention will be held at Fosston next Tuesday and Wednesday, June 14th and 15th. Every Sunday school in Polk county should be represented.

The Queen City Band and C. O. D. base ball team will go to Grand Forks June 21st, the first day of the tournament, where the C. O. D's will cross bats with the Grand Forks nine.

Next Sunday, June 12th, Rev. Jas. Moody will deliver his farewell sermon in the Swedish Lutheran church at 11 o'clock a. m. It is expected that Rev. S. G. Swenson, of Moorhead, will accept the call of this congregation and have charge of it in the future.

Miss Jennie Patridge of St. Paul has been in the city for a few days in the interest of the Behr Bros. pianos. She kindly loaned an instrument for the commencement exercises in the opera house. They are a very fine toned piano and take rank with the Steinway.

The "experience social," under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid society, has been almost forgotten by many for a time. But it's alive just the same. It will come off Friday evening, June 24th. Look out for further notice next week. Get your "experience" ready.

Mrs. L. D. Marshall has gone for a visit with friends in the twin cities for a month. The JOURNAL is informed that it is by no means certain that Mr. M. will decide to remove to Minneapolis as he had thought of doing and we trust that this rumor is well founded.

At the Congregational church next Sunday, June 12th, there will be a special program morning and evening. There will be exercises by the children and an address by the pastor at 11:30 a. m. At 8 p. m. the new children's day concert, entitled "Flora," will be given. Everybody, old and young, invited to the exercises. Children's day is but once a year.

Among those who went from Crookston to the Minneapolis convention are, Hugh Thompson, C. O. Christianson, Louis Gonyea, A. D. Stephens, J. W. Wheeler, Will Lanctot, A. C. Rhinehart, Editors McKenzie, Bydall, Ware and Cooke, E. D. Childs, W. B. Dawley, N. P. Stone, Wm. Watts, Thos. Harris, Mat Cornelius, Geo. J. McManus, W. E. Kelsey, J. R. Clements, A. C. Wilkinson, Max Ericsson.

The Northern Pacific Railroad, in connection with any line between St. Paul and Chicago will make a rate of one fare for the round trip for the National Democratic convention to be held at Chicago June 21st. Tickets sold June 16th to 20th inclusive, good to return until July 6th. All who wish to see the World's Fair city should take advantage of this low rate. For further information call on J. E. Liebe, Agent.

Chas. Greenhalgh, who left Crookston about four years ago for the west, returned Wednesday with his family and is now convinced that there is no better place than Crookston and the Red River valley, and will cast his lot with us again and remain indefinitely. Mr. Greenhalgh has worked principally in Nevada and Washington and now owns property at Puget City, near Olympia, the capital of Washington. Mr. Greenhalgh, like every one else who has been out to the coast, says that country is still overdone in every line of business and industry.

Our Country's Flag.

June 14th, 1777, the stars and stripes were adopted officially as the ensign of the United States. Its stripes are the number of the original colonies which separated from the mother country in 1776. Its stars have increased in number until they crowd the blue field. The territory over which it waves in triumph has widened from year to year until it stretches from ocean to ocean. The three millions who hailed its birth with cheers have grown to sixty. And almost all this increase has been peacefully gained. Texas is our only trophy of conquest by war. Wide and fair as is our land, it never could have been filled with its wonderful people, unless enterprising men had harnessed steam to the work. Of this great Republic the central portion is the heart, and in 10 of its best states the Burlington is the main railroad artery. If you want to travel anywhere in the west write first to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul Minn, for information, stating what trip you wish to make.

COURT ADJOURNS.

The May Term of the District Court Closed Wednesday and Court Adjourns sine die.

A Resume of the Cases Disposed of Since Our Last Issue, June 2nd.

James McGregor Gets four Years at Stillwater for Robbery at East Grand Forks.

Close of a Short Term.

The May term of the District Court for Polk county which closed last Wednesday night was one of the shortest held here for several years, one reason for this being the fact that the December term was partly adjourned until last February and the docket then well cleared up. The routine since our last issue is as follows:

THURSDAY, June 2. Case No. 49. Marin vs. town of Sletten on trial since Wednesday; defendant's motion to amend the answer and for a continuation until next term was granted by the court. Case No. 36. Valerius vs. Tedy Richards et al, (better known as the "stallion case,") the jury in which retired Wednesday forenoon, was disposed of by a verdict in favor of the defendants; stay of proceedings for 60 days. No. 64. Singer Sewing Machine Co. vs. Odell. Appeal dismissed on motion of plaintiff. No. 18 of the criminal docket. State of Minnesota vs. James McGregor charged with robbing one Wm. Steele at East Grand Forks brought out the usual features in such cases—one man with money another with experience; misplaced confidence; too much whiskey; presto change; monied man has experience; experienced man has money. This case was tried all day and FRIDAY, June 3d, was resumed. The jury went out shortly after noon, stayed out all night and finally came into court on the morning of the 4th stating that they could not agree, whereupon they were discharged. It is understood the jury was 11 to 1 in favor of the state all night. It may here be stated that McGregor afterwards pleaded guilty to robbery in the second degree, withdrawing his plea of not guilty and was sentenced to four years hard labor in Stillwater. No. 21 on the criminal docket. State vs. Harry Neilly; defendant was charged with being implicated in the same robbery as McGregor, he being one of the trio that went to East Grand Forks "to see the town;" as he had neither money nor experience, was young, blear-eyed and somewhat innocent, the jury promptly acquitted him; not much of a case was made against him and the verdict was generally approved.

SATURDAY, June 4th. No. 58. St. George vs. Bailey. A jury was called in this case and some testimony taken, but before it was closed the parties stipulated that plaintiff take judgment for the amount demanded in the complaint. No. 38. Putney vs. Grundyson. Tried to the court and submitted. The testimony in this case was by stipulation made applicable to No. 39, First National Bank of Duluth vs. same, and No. 37, German American National Bank of St. Cloud vs. same. By stipulation it was agreed that judgment without costs, except clerk and jury fees, be entered in the following cases: No. 59, Sampson vs. Bagley; No. 60, Louis St. George vs. same; No. 61, Clement St. George vs. same; No. 62, Durand vs. same. In No. 19 criminal docket, State vs. Wm. Moore, the county attorney dismissed the case on the ground that not sufficient evidence existed to convict. The defendant had been in jail quite a long time, and was also charged with having had a hand in the McGregor robbery, but the only evidence against him was that he had not gone to bed at a proper hour. He is now breathing the air of liberty and driving a beer wagon. No. 18 criminal docket, state vs. Ole Gruvom was continued until next term; the defendant pleaded "not guilty," and was released on $200 bail; the charge is assault in second degree. No. 31, Nelson vs. Guaranty Loan Co., action to set aside a mortgage on the ground of usury; jury found a verdict for defendant.

MONDAY, June 6th. State of Minnesota vs. Hans Quam; defendant, convicted at last term with selling liquor to an habitual drunkard, was sentenced to pay a fine of $75.00 and $30.35 costs, or be imprisoned for 30 days. Got his freedom C. O. D. No. 51, Whipple vs. Jacobsen, judgment of justice of the peace reversed. No. 63, Moline, Milburn & Hubbard Co. vs. Wyand; tried to court and submitted. No. 48, Helga Thomas vs. Olaf Thomas; tried and submitted; plaintiff charges her husband, the defendant, with cruelty and drunkeness and prays for a divorce and custody of their two children; the parties are well known in Fosston circles. No. 41, Larsen vs. Steege et al. Tried to the court and submitted. Action to determine title to real estate. No. 50, Ida Knutson vs. Christian Knutson, action for divorce; tried and submitted.

TUESDAY, 7th, The remaining jurors were discharged as were also the jurors on the special venire summoned to try the McGregor case. McGregor plead guilty as before stated. The rest of the day was spent in cleaning up a lot of legal odds and ends, hearing motions, etc. Towards 6 o'clock in the afternoon court was adjourned sine die.

NOTES.

Judge Mills, at the commencement of the term, excused all jurors who were busy seeding and desired to go to their farms.

Deputy Clerk of Court Sortedahl is fast becoming an expert in court routine work; he is an efficient and courteous officer.

The panel of jurors at this term was one of the best ever had in this county.

Juror to witness: Speak louder, please. Witness says all right and lowers his voice still more. Court reporter contemplates suicide.

Capt. Bornstedt is conceded to be one of the most efficient and obliging stenographers the court has ever had—the right man in the right place.

Clerk of Court Muus should be highly commended for the perfect order of everything in his charge. It is a gratification to his many friends to hear him praised by those having business with his department.

Little boy, looking into attorneys' room: "Is this the pr-risoners?"

RINGLING DAY.

A Visit of the World's Greatest Shows Rapidly Approaching.

Ringling day is almost here. Nothing is talked of but the Ringling Brother's World's Greatest Shows, and next Thursday, June 16th, will be a gala day in Crookston. This biggest of big shows has everywhere met with the most enthusiastic reception, and the press of other cities unhesitatingly proclaim it the greatest exhibition ever seen under canvas. In point of novelty or in the number of great features no other show can approach it. The mammoth highway locomotive, "Hercules," which draws one section of the grand procession through the streets, the beautiful tableau of Moscow's Kremlin Tower with its sweet-toned cathedral bells, the almost priceless zoologic collection, the spectacle of the victorious Cæsar's entry into Rome, the thrilling sports of the Roman arena, the exciting four-horse chariot races, the marvelous performances by hundreds of famous ærialists, gymnasts and riders, and finally the wonderful horse fair containing over 350 high-bred equines, are only a few of the many amazing features that make the Ringling Brothers' World's Greatest Shows the most stupendous aggregation of wonders that old earth ever saw.

A Romance in Real Life.

In the fairy tales of the latter day novel, you read of cases of love at first sight, but in this work-a-day age of the world such cases are few and far between, but Crookston furnishes a case in point. Last week a man arrived in the city from Inkster, N. D., to find employment as a brick mason, and put up at the Cleveland house. There he found a fairy maiden, and two days after his arrival the twain were made one by the Rev. Father Becker.

DON'T READ THIS!

This is only of interest to farmers and others who have growing grain this season. Everything indicates that during the present summer there will be constant rain and thunder storms. Any person who has observed the different seasons in this or any other state knows that during a rainy summer hail storms are of frequent occurrence. Much damage is done to growing grain every year by hail. No locality is entirely exempt from this disastrous element. You may escape for a year or two, but you are sure to have a hail storm sooner or later.

The only way to protect yourself from loss by hail is to insure your crop. But the rates are so high with most of the hail companies doing business in this state that the farmers cannot afford to insure their crops. The only way to get cheap and reliable hail insurance is through a mutual concern—a company which covers the entire state and is not confined to one county. The risks must be distributed over a large area, so that if one county should be hailed there will still be plenty of uninjured grain to pay the losses.

The Minnesota Hail Association of Crookston covers the entire state. It is a mutual concern, with but few officers and each one working on a commission. This company can give you cheap and safe protection.

For further particulars see by-laws or talk with any of the company's agents. It will pay you to investigate this matter.

TOWN TALK.

L. D. Marshall: I expect to purchase some property in Sampson's addition, in which case I will build a house and remain in Crookston. Since selling my house and lot I have made arrangements which will keep me in Crookston most of the time.

Chief Gonyea: Everybody was royally entertained in Minneapolis. At the home of T. B. Walker I met scores of prominent men, and everybody seemed on a footing of equality. As much attention was paid to the humblest citizen as to the most prominent politician.

Manager Lent: I cancelled the date of the Olson Clifford company, which was billed for the 10th. I learned that the show was not up to the standard, and I am determined to put on nothing but first-class attractions hereafter, if we don't make a cent. I have already made dates with some of the best and highest priced companies on the road.

Mayor Anglim: The prospects are that Crookston will see an immense turnout during encampment week, and I am confident that every loyal citizen will do his best to provide for the comfort of our guests. Crookston will have an opportunity to do herself proud on this occasion and I fully expect she will nobly discharge her whole duty, but it will require the united, hearty co-operation of each and every one in whatever capacity he is called upon to act.

Tom Young: Say, you heard 'bout that row in front of the new restaurant on Main street—where Adolph Rauch kep' grocery store? Well, I just want to say that Frank was not to blame for that affair. You see it was this way: The fellow tackled Frank once afore, red-hot to fight, but Frank got away from him and was standing in front of that restaurant talking when up comes the fellow again and began to abuse Frank and 'lowed Frank had to fight him anyhow and commenced to bruise 'round rather fresh; at that Frank jist nachelly turned loose on the fellow and let him alone plenty right under the nose, whereupon the chap wilted to the sidewalk and lost all interest in subsequent proceedings, so I jist said says I: Frank aint to blame for that not a little bit, an' I wanted you fellows to get the rights of it.

That Boat Ride.

The JOURNAL editorial family, consisting of our fashion editress, our society editress, our sporting editor and our local scribe were treated to a voyage on the elegant little steam yacht, the Water Witch, on Tuesday evening, upon invitation of Hon. Hugh Thompson, Register of U. S. Land Office. Arrived at the docks at 7:30 we found a jolly party of twenty-five ladies and gentlemen chatting cosily in the cabin, while the officers and crew were busily engaged in preparations for the trip, and the admiring thousands upon the banks were rending the air with their plaudits. One pathetic scene took place ere the gang-plank was hauled in—the parting of a husband and wife—the man anxious to embark and the woman fearing to do so—but we draw the veil—and the gang plank—and at 7:45 the little Water Witch answers to the helm and gracefully turns her prow down stream. In 15 minutes she had reached a point four miles down the river, and turned to make the home run. This occupied 30 minutes and was safely accomplished, and our little party landed, thanking Mr. T. and Capt. White for the very enjoyable treat. Mr. Thompson occupied the pilot house, and demonstrated his ability as a pilot to a dot. On the banks along the route the voyageur observes snug little cottages nestling mid luxuriant shade trees and surrounded by elegant lawns and flourishing gardens within the city limits, and outside of it comfortable farm houses may be seen. The Water Witch will be at the disposal of pleasure seekers for the balance of the week, also during encampment week, and if our people appreciate a good thing she will be patronized to the extent of her capacity, for a more enjoyable outing cannot be had than is offered by a voyage on the Water Witch.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Editor Rutledge of the Fisher Bulletin Has a Terrible Experience.

There is one item that probably will not appear in the Fisher Bulletin this week, though the boys are getting great fun out of it, and Doc is generally quick to catch on to choice bits of news, but in this case the joke is rather on Doc. As we have the story it runs thusly: As the genial editor of the Bulletin was meandering slowly adown the banks of the winding Red Lake river one evening, mentally calculating how he should invest the proceeds arising from the publication of his lively paper, and quietly enjoying the beautiful scenery resplendent in the gloaming of a lovely summer evening, his attention was suddenly arrested by the animated chatter of some boys on the river bank, apparently discussing some weighty matter. Approaching the spot he soon discovered that the boys had caught a large cat-fish in a net, but the net was also caught fast to some obstruction in the river and could not be released. Grasping the situation with all the power of his fertile imagination, Doc volunteered to release the net, and laying off his coat and vest he then took off his suspenders (with all the responsibilities thereunto attached) and boldly waded in to release the net, but—alas for the gratitude of the average youth of the present day, Doc found on reaching the bank that one of the lads had made off with the suspenders; no sooner had he made this discovery than another, in the form of a female out for an evening walk hove in view, whereupon Doc immediately took water, hoping this new danger would pass by on the other side. It did not, however, and in a few seconds a terrified female stood upon the bank gazing on what she supposed to be a deliberate attempt at suicide. Catching a convenient fish-pole she reached it out for him to grasp and be saved, but for some reason Doc did not seem to wish to be saved just then, so she saw that she would be obliged to resort to strategy and unfurling the line she began to fish for him. Directly she succeeded in catching the hook in Doc's left ear and hauled him up to the water's edge, when, for some reason she lost all interest in the fish, dropped the pole and took a bee line for town. Doc crawled out and thanking his lucky stars that night was charitably drawing a veil over the situation made a sneak for his office to obtain another pair of suspenders. Doc is not saying much about it, but they do say that he is doing lots of solid thinking.

Miss Todd's Lecture.

Miss Marion Todd, of Ohio, addressed a large audience at the Grand opera house, in this city, on Tuesday evening. During the course of her remarks, she took occasion to score Judge Mills, charging him with "the crime" of "delaying the court business for fifteen minutes, until a juror, who was on the regular panel, could be brought into the court room." The criminal part of the business seems to be in the fact that the said juror was connected with a bank. The facts in the case, as the JOURNAL learns them, are that when the name was called and no response made, the judge ordered the clerk to proceed with the rest of the panel, but the attorney for the defense objected, and demanded that the man be brought in, which left the judge no alternative but to bring him in. To a man up a tree, it would seem that some rival aspirant for the judge's shoes had misrepresented the facts in the case to the lady, for the purpose of booming himself for the position, but we have known Judge Ives for several years, and we do not believe that HE would stoop to such a petty trick. Mrs. Todd is a very earnest, spirited speaker, and is very evidently convinced that she has the right views on all political questions. At the end of the free lecture, a contribution was taken up to defray the expenses of the local committee.

Board Wanted.

A young lady attending Business College, would like board and room in private family. Address, N. J., City.

Pat Martin has returned from the west well satisfied that the glowing accounts he has heard of that country are largely overdrawn. He says that the idea that that country is the poor man's paradise is a myth—a mistake by a large majority because a poor man can do far better here than there. He went intending to stay a year or so but came back right away quick.

THE GREAT HESPER.

TALE OF A BIG DIAMOND

How an Immense Gem Was Lost, Recovered, and Lost Again.

CHAPTER XVIII.

I had written a few hurried lines from Sacramento, telling Sir. Edmund that Lola had taken the Great Hesper, and intended to restore it as soon as the snow had melted, and allowed us to reach the cavern in which it was concealed. In answering this letter, he wrote:

"After reading your good news, Edith and I went for a stroll through the park, where we encountered poor Van Hoeck, whose woe-begone appearance appealed once more to Edith's heart, and mine also. 'Why,' she asked, 'should we any longer treat him as a possible scoundrel, now that the Braces admit having taken the diamond?' We turned back, overtook Van Hoeck, and told him what had happened. The poor wretch was overcome with emotion, not because of the possible recovery of the lost diamond—of which he entertains strong doubt,—but in being once more treated as an honest man."

Now, did Van Hoeck deserve to be treated as an honest man? That was the question. I will give here Brace's account of what occurred in the woods, and, as near as I can, in his words:

"When we parted company in the woods," he said, "I hunted around for Israel, as was my intention, you will remember. I found him crawlin' like a varmint of a reptile through the ferns. I fetched him into a convenient spot, and, says I, 'Israel,' I ses, 'you air goin' to prophesy what has gone of the Great Hesper. It's not a hard job, if you give yer mind to it. Tain't nothin' near so hard as prophesying what's goin' to be.'

"I had hold on him by the arm. All of a suddent, he flings himself round grapples on to me, and 'fore I'm aware of anythin' I'm on my back, and his two thumbs is inter my windpipe. I never thought he'd got it inter him. — such strength and agility,—and I'll allow he would have strangled me hef the Kid hadn't come up in the nick and frightened him by singing out for you. I did not lose any time, and when I had shown I was as strong as him, with a little bit to spare, I got him to prophesy. He wanted a plaguey lot of perswadin,' and he got it; but when he couldn't stand no more on it, he let on that it was inside of a rotten willer, alongside a pond in the holler. I didn't know no pond, but I ketched sight of the Kid sneakin' off, end I jest sneaked after her, takin' Israel along, case he mighter made a mistake in his jography. There was no walking fast with Israel over the brambles, end I lost sight of the Kid; but it stood to reason that the holler was downhill, so down I went the way the Kid had gone, near as I could reckon, and there was the pond, and the rotten willer, all he had prophesied, and there at the foot of the willer was the empty case but nairy diamond. I cocked my eye around end once more I ketched sight of the kid sneakin' off I went for her, nat'rally, but I might jest as well have went from a tom-tit. She got clean outer sight about the same time's I got outer wind, but Israel wouldn't give up end so we hunted about for the Kid until we couldn't neither of us hunt any more; then we sit down in committee, and, arter pretty warm discussion, we came to the unanimous conclusion thet, fur the sake of every one consarned, we hed better get rid of the leather case and say nothin' about it. I laid it down that the Kid had not took the diamond for mere mischief. She knew, in her own greaser way, that the thing had a power in it to bring happiness to the owner,—like a charm. She see that it clothed us decent and lodged us comfortable, and that, while it separated you and her, it brought you and squire's daughter together. And we laid it mutual that the Kid hed too much gumption to pitch the thing away, but would hide it somewhere where she could fetch it bimeby. Now, hef we'd done otherways, what would have happened? Van Hoeck ud have declared it was all a lie, and wild horses wouldn't er dragged the secret outer the Kid. The only hope of gettin' back the Hesper was ter let her play her game and watch her close."

A copy of this statement I sent to Sir Edmund, and I added:

"Either Van Hoeck is possessed of supernatural clairvoyance, or he must have been in complicity with the man who took the diamond from me."

"Can that man have been the 'Furnival' who obtained the address of Brace and myself from you?"

For my own part, I doubted Van Hoeck's innocence. Perhaps I may have been biased in forming an opinion of him by my jealous dislike of the relation he had formed with Edith. She was the only living creature Van Hoeck had spoken well of in my hearing; and I fancied he was playing a hypocritical part to obtain the pleasure of her society and friendship.

By the return mail, Sir Edmund wrote:

"I felt it right to read that part of your letter referring to the robbery to Van Hoeck, who for the last week has been an accepted visitor here, and, I may add, the object of Edith's sympathetic commiseration. He declared upon his oath that there had been no struggle between himself and Brace, and that no statement had been extorted from him by the violent means indicated; that when you left, he felt his his way to the road, and waited there. Brace came and undertook to lead him home. He remembers stopping on the way while Brace asked him if he thought you had really been robbed of the diamond. He knew nothing of the leather case, which Brace might have concealed in the manner you describe, without his perception. After this explanation, he said that he must once more relinquish our friendship until all doubt is cleared up. 'But,' he added emphatically, as he was about to leave us, 'If only a part of this story is true,—if the girl got possession of the diamond, hid it, and should restore it to Brace and Thorne, they will make away with it and you will never see any one of them again.' "

"If Van Hoeck is not the very old' un himself,' said the Judge, when I showed him this letter, "he's hand in hand with him."

We asked Lola if she had recognized the man who dropped from the oriel window.

"No," she replied, "the night was too thick; but he was about the size of the man I saw the night before going from one window to the other in the left-hand side of the house."

One morning Brace said to me:

"I've had my suspicions on it for some time; but now I'm sure on it. We're being watched."

I asked him what reason he had for this belief.

"My reason is this," he replied. "The one-legged nigger as comes here for scraps give one of the house-helps harf-a-dollar this morning. It looked like he'd been buying up your silver spoons, so I jest had the rascal searched; but there warn't nairy thing on him but varmin. Lay your life, sir, that nigger didn't give half-a-dollar for nothing. We've got to keep our eyes open!"

"You think he is a spy, paying the helps for information with respect to our movements?" I said.

"I do,—jest that."

"Why?"

"Why?" echoed Brace, drawing a long breath, "because it is jest three weeks since Van Hoeck learnt that we are going to get back the Great Hesper, and he found an excuse for quittin' the locality of Monken Abbey."

CHAPTER XIX.

As the spring advanced, Brace turned his eyes daily to the mountain tops. On the first of May he said he would have a day or two off, and "jest have a look round at things.".

On the seventh he returned.

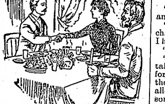
"The time's come," he said; "the snow's going away sharp, and the rocks is already squittering down, but, glory be, the hole's open. All we've got to pray for now is that the Kid'll listen to the v'ice of reason. Leave her to me!"

As we were sitting at table he said, in a casual way:

"I was up to my old lot in Petersville for a bit of a refresher during my holiday, sir; and you've no idea how nice the old place do look. Now, supposin', as we ain't got nairy blessed thing to do for the next week, we kinder take a look around arter that stone we used to think such a lot of,—jest for curiosity like,—hey? The Kid used ter make a fine to do about bein' good when she was sick; do you feel like it now, my gel?"

Lola turned deadly pale, and was silent for a moment, then, lifting her eyes to mine, she stretched her hand out, and, as I took it, said:

"I am ready."



"I AM READY."

. . . .

We made our preparations that afternoon, and took the night train from San Diego to Canon River, where we put up for the night. In the morning we took the stage to Great Canon City,—a deserted mining town at the foot of the Sierra. After lunching at the only hotel, we hired mules, and, leaving the valley, ascended the mountain path.

Water streamed freely down the mountain path upon the lower slopes; but our difficulties only commenced when we reached the line where the half-melted snow made the rocks treacherous even to the feet of the sure mules. We had four hours of terribly rough and dangerous traveling before we reached Petersville,—the most wretched collection of rotten shanties I ever saw.

Not a living creature was to be seen. there was not a foot mark in the slushy snow which still lay upon the ground; it seemed completely abandoned, But the Judge led the way through the deserted rows of tumble-down huts, and presently pointed to one from which a column of blue smoke was ascending through the clear air.

We were on a plateau in the very heart of the mountains. All around the rugged peaks rose high into the still air, tinted with deep purple in the shadow, and the loveliest rose pink where the sunlight fell upon the snow. Where the snow had slid away from the precipitous sides, the granite, streaming with water, glittered in the bright rays as if it were encrusted with jewels.

As we came to a halt, waiting for a response to Brace's call, the silence was broken by a prolonged roar like that of distant thunder, as some rock, loosened by the frost, broke away and hurtled down the unfathomed canon.

A man came from the building, which still bore faint trace of the word "Hotel" on its facade, and, greeting Brace with the air of an old acquaintance, said he had got everything aired, and a supper all ready to put down to the fire. Brace had seen the necessity of preparing him for our reception: A couple of rooms had been made as decently comfortable as might be expected. We left Lola there, and strolled out while the dinner was preparing.

The end of the town abutted upon a wide stream, that was tearing and whirling along among the gigantic boulders that marked its course, toward a black cleft which divided a towering mountain in two. Fantastic as are the effects which characterize the heights of the Sierra, I had seen nothing comparable to this. It was as if some mighty hand had split the mountain in half.

"I have know'd the time," said the Judge impressively, "when both sides of this river was lined with miners, and every one on 'em worth his thousands of dollars!"

I had no sympathies with the past glories of the stream. My mind was filled with admiration of the savage beauty of the scenery around.

"Thar," said the Judge, flinging a piece of wood, part of an appliance which might have washed gold untold, into the turbid and rushing waters; "thar, bar stoppages, that'll pass the Great Hesper in less time than it will take us to get back to the hotel."

"Is it through that cleft we have to go?"

"Ah, sir, and down to the very innards of it."

I was looking toward the dark chasm with a feeling of awe, when Brace touched my elbow.

He was dragging at his chin tuft, his lower lip protruding, his heavy brows bent. He pointed slowly to a trace in the snow.

"The man from the hotel been down here,—is that what you mean?" I asked.

"It ain't him, sir, that mark. Look at it,—it's a one-footed man! end!" he added, striding forward and looking closer.—"end it's a left-footed man! end it's a one wooden-legged man! and then, with conviction, "It's the durned nigger that's been spyin' after us. Leave him to me. He ain't goin' to spy us to-morrow not hef I knows it.

I approached the marks, and perceived that beside the foot was the round hole made by a wooden stump.

After dinner, Brace looked to the pine torches he had brought up, and spent the evening in drying them carefully, whilst chatting with the man of the hotel. He said not a word about our discovery, nor did the man speak of any visitor being in the house. This with a certain cunning look in his red eyes, alarmed me.

We were called at four o'clock the next morning, Brace saying that we must start early, in order to get our job done in time to get back to a comfortable dinner, but in reality, I believe, to preclude the possibility of being followed. When we had finished our breakfast, Brace, taking the hotel man by the button, said:

"Old pal, you hev got a stranger staying in this house, I reckon."

The man scratched his ear, looked up and looked down, and then at a jerk of his button blinked up at Brace, and said:

"Wal, I allow I hev."

"A wooden-legged stranger, I think?"

The same shuffling, and then:

"Wal, I allow he hev got a wooden leg."

"A nigger. I believe."

"Wal, a nigger accordin' to appearances."

"I kinder fancy he's in the little chamber over there. 'Twarn't a swine I heard gruntin', were it?"

"You kin inspect him, if you like."

"I will, after which hef I take a fancy to nailin' of him up for four and twenty hours for the same number of dollars, you will allow me the use of a hammer and some three-inch pints?"

"I will do that," said the man; and, the two having shaken hands on the bargain, he went off to get the articles required, while Brace looked into the room.

"It's the same," said Brace, and turning up his sleeves, he proceeded to nail up the door in a business-like manner.

"I don't think he will trouble us unless he kin afford to make it worth the old pal's while to let him out," said Brace, as we started from the house, "end even then he won't get much of a chance, seein' as no mortal man can get down that hole without a light, and we've got eyes or to see hef a light is follerin' on us."

TO BE CONTINUED.

How the Nations Laugh.

All the world laughs, though the nations have different ways of showing mirth. The Chinese can't laugh as hearty or as expressive as the European or American. It is oftener a titter than a genuine outburst of merriment. There is little character or force in it. As for the Arabian laugh, we hear little of its hilarious ring through the ages of mirth in the old world. The Arab is generally a stolid fellow, who must either see good reason for a laugh, or be surprised into it. In Persia a man who laughs is considered effeminate, but a free license is given to female merriment.

One reads of the "grave Turk" and the "Sober Egyptain," but it is not recorded that they have never moments of mirth, when the fez bobs or the veil shakes under pressure of some particularly "good thing." In Mahomet himself, Christian writers have noted cordiality and jocoseness, and they say there is a good ringing laugh in the prophet with all his seriousness.

An American traveler in Europe remarks the Italian laugh as languid, but musical; the German as deliberate, the French as spasmodic and uncertain, the upper class English as guarded and not always genuine, the lower class English as explosive, the Scotch of all classes as hearty, and the Irish as rollicking.—From the Detroit Free Press.

SMUGGLED BRANDY.

The Ingenious Device Discovered by French Custom Officers.

The French custom officers who are stationed at the gates of Paris to guard against exciseable goods entering without paying the duty have occasionally to deal with ingenious attempts at smuggling. Last week, for instance, an attempted fraud was laid bare which goes to show how fertile the contrabandists are in expedients. At the Menilmontant gate a man in charge of a pony cart, in which were three large wooden boxes, attempted to pass the barriers. "Have you anything to declare?" asked one of the officials.

"Nothing," said the man, "unless government has put a tax on cemetery wreathes," and as he spoke he drew the lid off one of the boxes, revealing a number of the wreathes and crosses of artificial flowers so common in French burying grounds. The man was about to pass on when something about him aroused the suspicions of the chief official. He took the cover off one of the boxes and admired the beauty of the flowers and their remarkable fidelity to nature. Lifting one casually in his hand, he found it was remarkably heavy, and closer examination showed that when stripped of flowers and moss it was a zinc case filled with the finest brandy. The rest of the contents of the boxes were of the same nature and were at once confiscated. As frauds of the kind are severely punished by the Parisian authorities, the ingenious inventor of the trick will probably be allowed leisure enough in Mazas to design something novel.

KIDNAPED BY A BEAR.

Seeking to Replace Her Lost Cub, and the Child Was Uninjured.

A little three-year-old, named Fleming, whose parents live in northern Michigan, being missed one afternoon, her parents tracked her to some bushes in the field about forty rods from the house, at which point the child's tracks disappeared and those of a large bear were found leading into the woods. The horrified father, aided by neighbors, followed up the bear, which had carried off the child as fast as possible; but night set in, and they were obliged to wait till morning, when the pursuit were recommenced.

In a short time, as the pursuers were passing a swampy spot, they heard the child's voice calling aloud. They rushed forward, heard a splash in the water and soon saw the child standing on a log stretching over a pond. The bear, the child said, was carrying her across the log and had just jumped into the water and swam away. The bear had not hurt the child in the least, but had been caressing in its manner and had laid down at night with its arms around the little one as if to shield her from harm. The bear had just lost her cub and seemed to wish to adopt the child in its place.

The Grip in 1563.

According to the following extract, from an old historical work, not only was Edinburgh afflicted with the influenza in 1563 but the queen of Scots herself had the disease: "In November Edinburgh was visited with a 'new disease' called the 'new acquaintance,' which passed through the whole courte, neither sparing lorde, ladye nor damoysell. Yt ys a pain in their heades that have yt, and a soreness in their stomacks with a greate coughe. The queene keapte her bedde vi dayes. Ther was no appearance of danger, nor manie that died of the dysease, except some olde folks."

Horse Running Forty Miles an Hour.

Few horses have made a mile dash in less than 1:40; Salvator, in 1890, I believe, made it in 1:35½, which is something truly wonderful. Let us analyze these figures: To begin with, it is nearly forty miles an hour—a speed averaged by few railway trains. There are 5,280 feet in a mile, so that for every one of the ninety-five seconds he was in making that mile he had to get over fifty-five and three-tenths feet of ground. Just think of the wonderful speed he was moving at—a half a hundred feet for each beat of a man's pulse!

Her Cobblestone Mantel.

A woman who is building a home on a bluff of the Mississippi river will have the big chimney piece in the hall constructed of stones from every state in the union. Each has been contributed by a friend, and, as in asking, the size has been designated about that of a medium cobblestone, symmetry is preserved. She already has one from Alaska, and also several washed by the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. The house itself is built of stone, "but my cobblestone mantel," writes the woman, "will be the pride of the place."

A Big Setting of Eggs.

Perhaps the biggest setting of eggs on record was made in California recently. An ingenious hop-grower put his hop-drying kiln to a novel use while waiting for the fall curing of his hop crop. He fired up the great furnace, carefully gauged the temperature with a thermometer, then spread out upon the screen 6,500 freshly laid eggs It is reported that at one time there were exposed on the raised platform of the kiln 2,500 downy, infantile chicks of every conceivable shade of color.

Larger Than the Sun.

There are doubtless scores and hundreds of bodies that are larger than the sun among the so-called fixed stars visible to the naked eye. Certainly Capella, Arcturus, Sirius, Vega and Aldebaran are each immensely larger than the sun.

The Poet.

It is said to be an Asiatic myth that the soul of a poet passes into the body of a grasshopper at death, from the fact of the latter singing until it starves.

LIVE STOCK

MIXED FEEDING.

How to Mix Various Foods to the Best Advantage.

Wheat bran is one of the few materials that can be purchased and fed out to the stock on the farm. It is one of the few materials that can be fed to stock and yet return nearly its full value in the manure. It will help to make bone and muscle in your growing stock, and hence can be fed to an advantage to them. With all the classes of stock—sheep, cattle, horses and hogs—it can be used to a good advantage in making up a good variety.

Combined with sheaf oats it makes a good ration for sheep, horses or cattle. With oil or cornmeal, or either hay or good corn fodder, it makes one of the best rations for milk cows during the winter. With corn and oil meal it makes a good feed for the brood sows and the growing pigs. Combined with oil meal it makes a good feed with hay, wheat or oat straw or corn fodder, lessening very materially the amount of grain necessary to keep in a good, thrifty condition, with the advantage that in feeding the quality of the manure will be improved.

With the rough foods, such as corn, fodder, straw and hay, the best results can be secured if these are first run through a feed cutter. They can be more thoroughly mixed together than if the roughness is fed whole, while there will be less waste in feeding the roughness. It can be purchased in considerable quantities and if stored in a dry place will keep without damage. It is very important, however, to keep it dry, or it will mold and spoil. Where there is considerable roughness and but little grain, bran can be used to an advantage in feeding and often this class of foods can be used when of others more or less would be wasted, while a better variety can be supplied to the stock, and this will help to keep in a good condition, especially in the winter.—Farmer's Home Journal.

Austrian Horse Breeding.

The stud at Mezohegyes has been established for more than 100 years, and breeding is carefully restricted. Pedigrees are kept for generations and the breeds are established, and there are as numerous divisions as in the trotting families of America. At Mezohegyes the stallions are divided into four classes, those in the first division, some nineteen in number, being used for stud purposes at the parent farm. Of this lot nine are English thoroughbreds and ten half bred—that is, the progeny of English or French thoroughbred stallions and the native Hungarian mares. The thoroughbred stallions were selected because of their breeding, racing performances, soundness and individuality, and none but sound mares are ever mated with them, it being the policy of the government to breed horses without a blemish of any kind. All these stallions are exercised daily for two hours.

The stallions in the second division are let out to private breeders, who pay from 300 to 800 florins a season for them. In the third division are to be found those that are kept at the military stations scattered all over the country, and are let at fees varying from two to five florins. Those in the fourth division are the stallions that are sold to the communes or divisions into which Austria and France are split up. Of the second class some 2,700 Mezohegyes stallions are standing at the low fees named, and oftener two florins is paid than the larger sum. The Austrian horses have wonderfully kind dispositions, 100 stallions frequently standing side by side at Mezohegyes with nothing but swinging poles between them.

The horses sold to the communes are disposed of at much below their real value, the prices being set by the minister of agriculture, it being the one object to encourage the Austrians to improve the breed of the horse. Representatives from the communes inspect the horses, make their choice, and pay down one-quarter of the price, which is never altered, before taking the horse away, and the balance is paid in three annual installments. This privilege is very much valued by the communes, who invariably buy up all the horses. Several horses are purchased by one commune, and as one district near Mezohegyes consists of 40,000 inhabitants, who own some 27,000 horses, the necessity of such extensive buying is apparent.

The mares are generally kept in groups, or what is termed a haras, of about 100 mares each, guarded by mounted soldier chicos when turned out on the plains. The mares are in three divisions, the first being the Gidrans, so called from the founder of their race, a pure bred Arab, his progeny again being crossed with English thoroughbreds. They are usually about 15.3 hands high and handsomely turned, are easily matched, and are generally a dark chestnut in color. They have great bone and substance, and to an English or American eye should be useful in the hunting field. They are said to produce excellent chargers, with the best of tempers.

The second division of brood mares contains Anglo-Norman mares descended from a stallion named Nonius, imported from France in 1815, his progeny being crossed with English stallions. These mares are from sixteen to seventeen hands high, chiefly browns and bays, and they produce superb carriage horses to the cover of thoroughbred stallions. Another division contained smaller mares descended from Nonius, and the last is composed of the descendants of a Hungarian horse called Furioso, his progeny being crossed with half bred and thoroughbred English stallions.

It is perfectly safe for a stranger to go among the horses in the field, and they submit to having their feet handled, showing no signs of viciousness.—Nineteenth Century.

FEED FOR A DRIVING HORSE.

The Best Ration for a Horse That Makes Heavy Journeys.

A gentleman in Flagstaff, A. T., writes to The Breeder's Gazette asking information on the above subject, and Professor W. A. Henry, of the Wisconsin agricultural experiment station, replies. We give below both question and answer:

"What kind of grain and amount per day should be given a driving horse weighing 1,150 pounds and a good eater? At times his load is somewhat heavy and one of his frequent trips is a distance of thirty miles, which he makes in about seven hours. Can oilcake be used to advantage, and in what proportion?"

As I recollect there is very little farming in the vicinity of Flagstaff, and the grain at least, and probably during much of the season hay also, must be brought from long distances, either the Pacific coast or Kansas, though no doubt points nearer furnish alfalfa hay, which, however, is not a very satisfactory feed for horses. Oats are at all times the best single grain for horses, and eight to ten pounds a day may be fed. If they are expensive and bran and corn not so dear, feed three or four pounds of these in place of the same weight of oats. If rolled barley can be obtained at reasonable figures, eight to ten pounds of that may be substituted for the oats with satisfactory results.

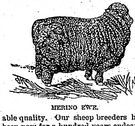
Some oilmeal is an excellent food for a horse, but too much should not be fed. Two or three pounds a day may be given, at the same time withdrawing that amount of grain from the ration. If hard worked the horse will need a little more grain than is here stated. Barley hay proves very satisfactory for roughage, or hay from east of the Rockies may be used if nothing satisfactory can be obtained at home. The grasses about Flagstaff must be very nutritious and satisfactory if they can be obtained in the form of hay, but I doubt if any quantity of hay is made there.

Merino Ewe.

Whenever sheep are bred for wool primarily there will always be a good word to be said for the American merino. If we have not been able to do some things in our live stock development in America we certainly have produced a type of wool sheep of which we may be proud. In spite of low prices for wool, too, there will always be thrifty breeders who will make a wool sheep pay.

To wool sheep men we commend the ewe in this picture. If you want a good coat of wool, here it is. This ewe is a western production, and would yield over nine pounds of washed wool.

The wool of a good merino ewe is three inches long and is white as well, too much yolkiness not being a desirable quality. Our sheep breeders have been now for a hundred years endeavoring to improve the original Spanish merino, and have succeeded so well that the American merino is sent for from Australia to better the wool sheep there. One of the best characteristics of our merino is its hardiness. In selecting merinos for breeding do not have too many wrinkles. In shearing, wrinkles are as hard to manage as they are on an old man's face in shaving. Too many wrinkles are not good in anything. The first merino rams imported into this country weighed less than 140 pounds, the washed fleece a little more than 8 pounds, and they were thought to be fine animals at that. Now a yearling American merino ram weighs 180 pounds, sometimes more; and his fleece, unwashed, will tip the beam at 30 pounds.



MERINO EWE.

Live Stock Points.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, who lives in Montana, and has had much experience, declares that it is the root of the loco weed, and not the leaves, that poisons live stock. The root is slight and easily pulls out with the leaves which animals bite off. They chew it up and swallow it, hence the fatal effects that follow. The writer, Mr. Sieber, says that every haystack in his neighborhood contains more or less of the leaves, but they are harmless. We have here an opinion that is worth heeding.

Did you ever think of preparing ensilage for the hens? It is the next thing to green feed itself for them in winter. Where you have a silo for the cattle, throw a little of the ensilage to the chickens several times a week. Where you have no large live stock to make a silo for, make a little silo for the chickens and fill it with green grass, oats or rye, and feed liberally to the hens in winter. One writer who has tried it declares that winter ensilage for the hens increases their egg laying powers fully 10 per cent.

Even when the hogs are in pasture, keep ashes and charcoal where they can have access to them freely. To a hog there is no delicacy like charred corncobs.

Do not feed corn to hogs in the dust.

The hoofs of a stallion colt must be looked after more carefully than those of other colts. He is early placed in confinement and kept there, so that his feet have no chance to grow naturally. This class of horses is therefore more apt to have unsound feet than others.

One man who claims to be an expert says lumpy jaw in cattle can be cured by opening the lump with a knife and putting into the wound a "chemical compound," the nature of which he does not explain. It is probably some kind of a caustic, however.

Patti's Wonderful Castle.

The house in which Patti lives is one of the most interesting of homes. Craig-y-Nos castle, as the songstress has christened it, is hidden away in the wild hills of the Swansea valley of Wales. It would be one of the most inaccessible spots imaginable were it not for a little railway which runs within four miles of it. In pleasant weather it would be difficult to find a prettier bit of landscape, but in wet and wintry weather, when storms sweep through the valley and transform the tumbling little Tawy river into a foaming torrent, it is a good place to keep away from. Patti's reason for choosing a home there was a good one. The peculiarly moist atmosphere of the place suited her voice better than any other locality she could find on the English side of Dover straits. Having once determined where she would live, Patti began to build a home consistent with her ample ideas of comfort and luxury.

The most remarkable thing about Craig-y-Nos is that such an establishment is to be found in such a remote part of the country. It is very much as though Jay Gould had built his Irvington palace in the heart of the Adirondacks instead of on the slope of the Hudson river. In point of architectural beauty or extent of acreage it would be absurd to compare Craig-y-Nos with any of the great ancestral estates of the English aristocracy. The castle takes its name from a huge, ill shaped hill called Craig of the Night. To get around this hill and make her house moderately accessible from the railway station Patti spent $20,000 in building a roadway.—Florence Wilson in Ladies' Home Journal.

Teaching a Girl a Lesson.

She happened to catch a Greene and Gates avenue car that was crowded with business men on their way to the bridge and a sprinkling of women and schoolboys. She looked around in vain for a seat, but the men had their noses buried in newspapers and possibly did not see her. She stood almost directly in front of a gallant schoolboy who was studying "Cæsars Gallic Wars," and he arose and proffered his seat. The young woman without even a nod of acknowledgment, flopped down with an injured expression, as though she was just inheriting her rights, which she should have come into long ago.

"Excuse me," said the youth, a mischievous twinkle illuminating his eyes, "but I think I left one of my books on the seat."

At this point everybody looked up, seemingly all at once, and saw the young woman rise, and the young man reseat himself, with a very audible "Thanks."

That young woman's embarrassment was painful. Everybody was smiling, and not a few old codgers chuckled. It was a cruel thing to do, and, as the young fellow says, he did it all on the spur of the moment, and would probably not have done it had he thought twice. However, he has evidently taught one young woman the appropriateness of gratitude, even in small things.—Brooklyn Eagle.

London Children Have to Work Hard.

The testimony of Mr. Lakeman, factory inspector, before the committee on the store hours bill sitting at London, revealed the terrible fact that the ordinary time of boys and girls behind the counter is eighty-four hours a week, or fourteen hours a day. But he knows of neighborhoods where the stores are kept open for ninety-six hours a week, or an average of sixteen hours a day. All the employees are expected to be present during the whole day, beginning at 6 a. m. and lasting till 10 at night.

The lower the neighborhood the longer the hours during which the stores are kept open. In some parts where laborers dwell stores will be open on Saturdays from 6 a. m. till midnight. Mr. Lakeman said that anæmia, dyspepsia, and even varicose veins were produced in girls of sixteen to eighteen years through long hours in stores. On busy days the employees were not allowed more than ten minutes for dinner out of their sixteen hours of work a day and no time for tea. The majority of storekeepers, he said, would hail with joy a law enforcing a uniform limit of keeping stores open.—Chicago Herald.

Only One Poisonous Snake in England.

Of the 1,500 different species of snakes which are now known to naturalists, the great majority are not poisonous, and of the four kinds of snakes, or snakelike creatures, which inhabit England, only one is venomous. This distaste for serpents which most persons experience, gives way in many instances to a feeling of interest as soon as, without risk or danger, they become better understood. The collection of animals at the London Zoological gardens has now for many years included a considerable number of snakes, and so has greatly helped to diffuse a more rational sentiment in their regard. But much yet remains to be effected before that admiration for serpents, which their beauty and the many points of interest they possess really call for, is felt by educated persons in general.—Quarterly Review.

Mrs. Browning's Sonnets.

The sonnets from the Portuguese were written by Elizabeth Barrett to Mr. Browning before her marriage, although she never even showed them to him till some years after they were man and wife. They were sonnets such as no Portuguese ever wrote before or ever will write again. There is a quality in them which is beyond words, that echo which belongs to the highest human expression of feeling. But such a love to such a woman comes with its own testament.—Annie Thackeray Ritchie in Harper's.

Amiable Hostess—Oh, you are not going yet, are you, Mr. Funnyman?—Kate Field's Washington.

HE'S ALL RIGHT.

The work of the National Republican convention is done—well done—and the JOURNAL can rejoice with every true Republican over the result.

Benjamin Harrison is nominated for president, and the most ardent admirer of Blaine can find no fault with the selection of a man who brought success to the Republican party against fearful odds—when the administration was in the hands of the Democrats.

It was thought the Blaine men would develope more strength than they showed in the convention, but before the first ballot was taken, it was evident that the plumed knight was doomed to defeat, and many of his adherents flocked to the standard of McKinley, thinking to break or check the Harrison forces.

The unanimity with which the delegates fell in line after the voting began showed that there was no bitterness or feeling against the president, and the Blaine men were actuated only by a love of their chieftain. Of course, a few such as Clarkson, Platt and Quay feel sore over the result, but before the campaign opens they will have forgotten the little strife at Minneapolis and be found in line working for the success of the nominees of the party.

Mr. Blaine's resignation from the cabinet at the last moment without any explanation was regarded by some of his friends as being indiscreet, and it is estimated that at least seventy-five delegates deserted him on this account.

For vice-president, Whitelaw Reid of New York, was the unanimous choice of the convention. Mr. Reid is one of the most popular and widely known men in his state and will undoubtedly contribute largely to the success of the ticket in New York.

President Harrison's clean administration and his firm handling of executive affairs, coupled with the prosperity of the country during his term of office, all tend to make him an invincible candidate, and the Republican party will surely re-elect him.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

These are the salient features, says the New York Press, of the platform on which the Republican party proposes to carry the coming election:

We believe in the American doctrine of protection.

We believe that articles, except luxuries, which cannot be produced in the United States should be admitted free of duty.

We demand that on all imports competing with the products of American labor duties should be levied equal to the difference between wages at home and abroad.

We ask the people to pronounce a verdict upon the cowardly course of the Democrats in attacking the tariff piecemeal.

We believe in reciprocity, which has opened new markets for the products of the work shop and the farm.

We believe in the use both of gold and silver money.

We demand that every dollar, whether of gold, silver or paper, shall be equal to every other dollar.

We believe in an international conference to secure a parity of gold and silver throughout the world.

We demand that every citizen, rich or poor, native or foreign born, white or black, shall be permitted to cast one ballot and have it counted as he cast it.

We propose to keep on fighting till we have honest elections in every state.

We favor the revival of our foreign commerce in American ships.

We demand a navy to protect our interests and maintain the honor of our flag.

We demand that arbitrary combinations of capital to control trade conditions shall be rigidly regulated.

We believe in wise and consistent civil service reform.

We believe in admitting all the territories to the Union as soon as they are qualified for entrance.

We reaffirm the Monroe doctrine.

We demand the restriction of criminal, pauper and contract immigration.

We demand that the employes of railroads, mines and factories shall be protected against all needless dangers.

We sympathize with the oppressed in every land.

We demand freedom of speech and of the press.

We believe in popular education.

We favor the construction and control of the Nicaragua canal by Americans.

We believe in self government for territories.

We believe that the Columbian Exposition should be made a success worthy of the dignity and progress of the nation, and that the government should aid in this if necessary.

We sympathize with all the legitimate efforts to promote temperance and morality.

We pledge to the loyal veterans of the war for the Union the recognition that is theirs by right.

We are proud of President Harrison's magnificent administration.

And we propose to give the country another administration just as good for the next four years.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY UNITED.

During the convention at Minneapolis, the New York Press uttered the following timely suggestions: The dispatches from the special correspondents of the Press at Minneapolis strongly indicate the probability of Mr. Blaine's nomination. Whatever the decision of the convention may be, the Press is confident that it will command the loyal support of the whole Republican party. President Harrison has, it is stated, expressed the earnest wish that his supporters should refrain from all personal attacks or reflections upon Mr. Blaine. In doing this the president has set a noble example which all the Republicans, no matter what their preferences may be, should emulate. The delegates who will assemble in the convention hall in Minneapolis tomorrow represent the intelligence and patriotism of the Republicanism of the nation.

It is their duty, as the Press has pointed out, to act not in the supposed interest of any individual, but solely with regard to the interests of the party. The man to nominate is the man who can carry the doubtful states for the Republican ticket. If, in the judgment of the delegates, that man is Mr. Blaine, it will be well. If it is President Harrison, or some other of the able and popular leaders of the party, it will be well also. The great Republican party, devoted to the principles which have brought unprecedented national prosperity and progress, has full confidence in the wisdom and sincerity of its representatives.

The statement made by a sensational Democratic newspaper that "civil war" exists in the Republican party is as unfounded as the fictions with which thirty years ago, certain northern Democrats fed the hopes of the confederacy.

The truth is that the contest for the supreme honor of nomination to the presidency by the party of Lincoln, of Grant and of Garfield, is one of the best possible signs of that vital strength and energy which should and will enable the party to achieve success. "I love the noise of free nations" wrote De Tocqueville, that incomparable commentator on American institutions. The agitation now going on in the Republican party is that noise of free nations of which De Tocqueville spoke, and which no intelligent friend of free institutions regards with apprehension. The danger to a party, as to a state, is not in wholesome agitation, but in stagnancy and decay.

That there is human nature in the present emulation for the greatest political office in the gift of mankind is true; but it is human nature in its frank and open phase; it is the emulation of men who know and respect each others abilities and who concede each others merits, and is without reservation of menace or of enmity. The candidate selected, the other aspirants will, the Press believes, prove anew their title to the confidence of the party by sincere support of the chosen leader. There is abundant glory in a campaign besides that to be won by the commander in chief, and there will be abundant opportunity in the struggle now opening for every Republican leader to add fresh laurels to his record. The Republican party has room and recognition for every one of its distinguished sons, and not one of them, we are confident, will be found a sulking Achilles.

THE St. Vincent New Era says that the alliance of Kittson county by resolution endorsed Judge Mills and "will elect him if the alliance vote of Kittson county can do it." The New Era eulogizes the Judge very highly and makes the statement that he is the best timber as yet proposed.

THE nomination of Benjamin Harrison meets the approval of all who care to have a safe administration of public affairs. That President Harrison has given that kind of an administration cannot be gainsaid, and that he will do so again if elected is proven by that record.

ON the 1st of July the American Express company will retire from business on the line of the Great Northern railway, and be succeeded by the Great Northern Express company, of which J. J. Hill is the originator.

THE Fourth of July celebration at St. Vincent has been postponed till the 6th to allow the G. A. R. members and citizens generally to enjoy the grand encampment at Crookston on the 4th.

C. H. MIX,

Moved by Alderman Childs, seconded by Alderman Marshall, that the report be received and put on file. Carried.

The following resolution was offered by Alderman Jerome, seconded by Alderman Anderson: Resolved, that the clerk be and is hereby instructed to advertise for bids for grading streets covered by the report of the commissioners on file in clerk's office. Bids to be filed not later than June 24th. The city to reject any or all bids. Carried.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

At a special meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston, held the fourth day of January, 1892, Alderman Schmidt offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Alderman McGlogan:

Resolved, That the Crookston Water Works, Power and Light company be and is hereby ordered to construct a line of water main the proper depth below any danger of frost on the following street: Commencing at the west terminus of the present line on Fifth street (5th st.) thence in a westerly course to the corner of Pine street, with one (1) hydrant at the corner of Fifth and Pine streets, the city of Crookston to pay fifty dollars ($50) to defray part of the extra expense connected with laying pipes through frosted ground, provided said line is laid immediately.

Upon the call of ayes and nays the vote stood as follows:

Aldermen voting in the affirmative—Buhn, Childs, Jennings, Jerome, Marshall, McGlogan, Marlette, Steenerson, Schmidt, Walker, Cromb.

Aldermen voting in the negative—none.

Upon this vote the resolution was declared carried by the president of the council.

Passed this 4th day of January, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
President of the Council.

Approved this 4th day of January, 1892.

JOHN CROMB,
Attest: Acting Mayor.
E. C. CARRUTH, Clerk.

Extensive preparations are being made to take good care of the thousands who will be here during the encampment, tents and good clean straw will be furnished for those who desire to camp out, the Masonic and Odd Fellows halls will be furnished with cots for ladies only; the school buildings and all vacant rooms that can be hired will be furnished with cots also and the multitudes will be well provided with sleeping accommodations and there will be no lack of food to eat.

Try Charlie Vine's meat market once. He will make it an object for you to call and leave an order.

Will Clements has just received a large invoice of Grand Army canes, for the coming encampent. Everybody will want one, as a souvenir of that event.

Fosston Fancies.

From Thirteen Towns, June 10th.

Ten days without rain. How's that?

Wheat is fairly jumping out of the ground these days.

Fred Anderson, of the Crookston Mercantile Co., of Crookston, was up Tuesday.

Alva Newland, night clerk at the Commercial hotel at Crookston, was up on Tuesday chatting with old friends. It is not often he gets an airing nowadays.

Attorney E. M. Stanton was up from the county seat on legal business Tuesday. He took Lewis Soderberg and T. J. Orvik back with him as witnesses in a divorce suit.

Marshal Gust Holt was called to Crookston on Tuesday as a witness in the Thomas divorce case.

James E. Morrisey of the Crookston iron works, was in the city on Tuesday on business. He will come up in a couple of weeks and camp out at some of the lakes for a few days.

Thousands of ducks are nesting about the numerous lakes in this vicinity, and our sportsmen will have "plenty fun" on and after the 20th of August next.

On the fifth of July the crack shootists of this entire region will cross ramrods in a tournament at Crookston. Say, fellows, suppose we go down and capture a few of the handsome cash prizes which are to be offered?

The Congregational church at McIntosh is nearly enclosed, and when completed both it and the Fosston church will be dedicated. Rev. G. E. Northrup is the pastor of both congregations.

Our ball cranks seem to keep up their practice quite regularly. Even the older people are becoming interested, and we expect to soon be able to chronicle a game between two generations.

Crookston is using extraordinary efforts to induce a large crowd to visit her shores on the Fourth of July. Everything in the way of sports are promised and it will be a red letter day in her existence.

Miss Marin, assistant in our schools, will leave tomorrow for her home in Crookston, but our people hope to see her return for the fall term. Although she has been with us only a few weeks, she has become very popular and every one in the community is her friend.

COL. W. B. REMY, judge advocate general of the navy, was placed on the retired list, with the rank of colonel in the marine corps.

THERE is a tacit agreement existing between the Democrats and Republicans of the house that during the convention week no tariff legislation will be called.

A REPORT from Paris that Samana bay, in San Domingo, has been ceded to the United States, is denied at the state department. It was stated that whatever excitement or uneasiness prevailed in San Domingo is in nowise due to any action on the part of the United States.

CASUALTIES.

Henry Cole, a school janitor, and his wife were instantly killed at Omaha by being crushed beeween a heavy iron girder and a motor train.

JOHN G. LOEWE and his two sons, aged eight and ten years, were drowned at the Silver Creek dam, about three miles north of Milwaukee, on the Milwaukee river. Mr. Loewe, his two sons and Michael Schwartz, a market gardener, started out in a small boat on a fishing trip. There was a strong current in the river and before either was aware of the danger Loewe lost control of the boat. The party was swept over the falls and father and son perished. Schwartz was hurled beyond the falls and succeeded in swimming ashore. Mr. Loewe was a miller, and was half owner of the flour mill which gets its power from the falls where he lost his life.

PERSONAL.

T. JEFFERSON COOLIDGE, the new United States minister to France, has arrived in Paris.

COL. L. L. POLK, of North Carolina, president of the National Farmers' Alliance, is dangerously ill at his residence in Washington, He has been ill for about ten days suffering from hemorrhage of the bladder, caused probably by a tumor. This has caused blood poisoning, and it is now thought that there is no hope for his recovery. His son-in-law is with him, and Mrs. Polk has been telegraphed for.

THE WICKED WORLD.

Two young men are jailed at Eau Claire, accused of a murder at Augusta, Wis.

CHINAMEN in San Francisco make ugly threats, and the lives of white women engaged in Christian work among them are in danger.

MARY ANDERSON, a servant girl, was found in a swamp near Rahway, N. J., with her throat cut. There is no clue to the murderer.

BERNARD WOEFFEL, who pleaded guilty in the court of oyer and terminer to a charge of arson in the second degree, committed suicide by hanging himself to a steam pipe in the New York Tombs where he was awaiting sentence.

A BARNWELL, S. C. despatch says: Under the grove of trees where eight negroes were brought from the county jail in December two years ago, and lynched and riddled with bullets, Gov. Tillman made this sensational utterance at the first meeting of the Democratic state campaign. He said: "There is only one crime that should bring on lynching. I, as governor, would head a party to lynch any negro that would assault a white woman."

J. W. WOOLDRIDGE, aged between thirty-five and forty was found in his room at the St. Paul hotel, Cincinnati, with his throat cut. Papers found upon him showed that he was connected with the City National bank of Austin, Tex., of which P. J. Wooldridge is president. Eighteen hundred dollars in money was found on his person. Only clew to the cause is a notification from a life insurance company that his application for a policy had been refused on account of lung trouble.

FOREIGN.

THE Oriental Bank of London has failed Liabilities about $5,000,000 pounds.

WHALEBACK vessels will be built in Europe by a large English company.

THE eruption of Mount Vesuvius is increasing in violence. An earthquake was felt. For a time the residents were panic stricken.

PREMIER MERCIER of Canada has abandoned his private property to his creditors. It is understood that he will be without a cent.

THOMAS NORQUAY, member of the provincial parliament, of Manitoba and brother of the late Premier Norquay, was run over by the Canadian Pacific Railway yard engine at Winnipeg. He died at a hospital.

MRS. MONTAGUE, who was sentenced at Dublin to a year's imprisonment in the Londonberry jail for causing the death of her three-year-old daughter Helen through the punishment she inflicted upon her for some trivial act, has been released from custody. She is enciente and is seriously ill.

THERE is a feeling of anxiety in London growing out of the suspension of the New Oriental bank and regarding the stability of the Eastern concerns. Having enormous deposits on which it paid high interest, greater risks were taken to employ the deposits than were judicious. The doors of the bank were closed. It is reported that the depositors are not likely to receive more than fifteen shillings on the pound.

The grand hurdle race was run at Auteuil for 50,000 francs, three miles and a furlong. It was won by Legoursey, with Assureus second, and Bombard third. The first betting was 3 to 1 against Legoursey, 16 to 1 against Assuerus, and 6 to 1 against Bombard. There were eleven starters. Among the horses that ran was Jamais, about which so much interest was centered, as it was considered that he was a sure winner.

THE Oriental bank is in trouble owing to the decline in silver and losses in the Mauritis cyclone. The Bank of England is considering measures for its relief. The directors recommend the depositors to withdraw only 20 per cent of their deposits in order to allow the successful reconstruction of the bank. Steps will be taken to protect the assets of the bank. The immediate liabilities are believed to amount to £5,500,000.

POLITICAL ECHOES.

COLORED Republicans hold a national conference in Chicago.

THE Republicans carry Oregon by a good majority.

THE RAILROADS.

AGAIN does the Soo cut Eastern passenger rates $3.

J. R. BUCHANAN declines the chairmanship of the Western States Passenger association to which he was elected.

W. B. PALMER, purchaser of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway, has resigned to enter the grain commission business. S. M. Lohren has been appointed his successor.

J. R. Buchanan has not yet accepted the chairmanship of the Western Passenger association. Neither has he declined it. Mr. Buchanan appeared before the committee today and asked for further time in which to decide.

SPORTING MATTERS.

MOTZ is batting hard for Fort Wayne.

Rumor has it that and Gore, O'Rourke Richardson will be released by New York.

JOE QUEST, once of St. Paul, is playing at Ispeming, Mich.

UP to June 3 the leading base runners in the league are: Duffy 23, Hamilton 20, Ward 15, Latham 15, Ryan 14, Tom Brown 14, McCarthy 12, Ewing 12.

ONE of the most remarkable games on record was played at Boston May 30—nine innings and not a man beyond second on each side. Then Zimmer let down and four runs won the game for Boston.

FRED WARNER, the boxing instructor of the Syracuse Athletic club, and James Kennard, the "St. Paul Kid," sparred ten rounds at Syracuse to a draw. Warner weighed 130 pounds and the kid 112.

SECRETARY BATEMAN, of the Louisville Ball club, addressed a letter to Manager Chapman assuring him that, despite gossip to the contrary, the team should be entirely under Chapman's control, and asking him to appoint Tom Brown as captain and Taylor assistant captain.

MISCELLANEOUS.

C. W. HACKETT is elected president of the St. Paul chamber of commerce.

THE Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum has voted to meet in Minneapolis in June, 1893.

Near Grayson Ky., Austin Porter was hung by a mob. On May 2 he killed his wife. The mob gathered at midnight, forcing the jailer to deliver Porter, and he was taken out and hanged to a bridge. Porter confessed the murder.

AN Italian named Celli and his wife were arrested at Wheeling W. Va., for burying a four-days-old baby alive in a "slack" pile at a coal mine dump. Some railroad men heard a whining noise and dug the child out. The only explanation the parents gave was that the baby was; "no good."

THE Boston & Maine Railroad company has closed a contract with Simpson & Robinson of Minneapolis for the erection of a grain elevator at Mystic wharf, Boston. There will be over 3,000,000 feet of spruce lumber used, the contract for which has been placed in Boston.

UPON inquiry at the American Bell Telephone company's office at Boston regarding the reduction in the usual extra dividend of 6 per cent, it was learned that the usual extra dividend was greater than the earnings for the first six months of the year actually in hand, and it was therefore thought best to make the extra dividend 3 per cent.

NEWS has been received at Dubuque that Howard Emerson a native of this city, has been found by his brothers wandering on the streets of Philadelphia in rags. He has been placed in an asylum at Plainfield, N. J., He was here three weeks ago on his annual visit, and a few days after his departure news came from New York that he had not returned and was $60,000 short.

THE wholesale grocerymen are endeavoring to come to arrangements with the sugar trust, whereby reasonable and uniform prices of sugar may be established. 130 delegates, representing most of the states of the union, met in New York and discussed the matter. Several plans were proposed, but none seemed to meet the unanimous approval of the delegates, and the matter will again be the topic of discussion.

GOV. WILLEY has returned to Boise, Idaho from the Cœur d'Alene mines where he went to investigate the trouble between the mine owners and the miners union. As a result of the investigation, the governor has issued a proclamation calling upon all unlawful assemblages to immediately disperse and refrain from interfering with the mine owners. The proclamation states that force, both state and national, will be invoked if necessary to preserve peace. The governor fears trouble before the difficulty has been adjusted.

AN important decision affecting the Sherman anti-trust law was delivered by Judge Blodgett at Chicago in the case of Andrew Bishop against the American Preserve Company, said to be a combination of fruit jelly and preserving manufacturers. Bishop had been a member of the trust and upon an attempt to withdraw the trust seized his business which had been transferred to the combine and brought suit against him in the United States court on an old account. Bishop, under the law sued for three times the value of his business, his claim being $121,111. Judge Blodgett sustained the demurrer filed by the trust but gave the plaintiff 10 days in which to amend.

RUDOLPH HACKER, a cigar manufacturer, and Mrs. Louise Plum, wife of Jacob H. Plum, were found dead in bed together in the woman's house at 114 North Halstead street Chicago. The gas was turned on full from two jets and the circumstances pointed to a double suicide. But subsequent developments went to show that Hacker found the woman asleep in the house, and to prevent her leaving him, which she was contemplating doing, he turned on the gas and killed her and himself. The woman had been separated from her husband for three years because of her relations with Hacker. She had recently promised to return to her home, and it is suspected that when Hacker became aware of this he resolved upon the deed which ended both lives.

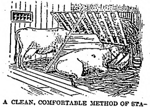
A MODEL COW STALL.

Tested, Illustrated and Described by the Editor of Hoard's Dairyman.

The excellence of this plan of tying cows over the stanchion plan is: 1. The cow has 3½ feet in width of stall and perfect liberty and comfort of position. 2. By virtue of the bar across the stall floor, which will be seen just forward of the hind feet of the standing cow, the animal has always a dry, clean bed to lie in, thus keeping her as clean from manure in winter as though she was in a June pasture. 3. By this system each cow is protected when lying down from having her teats and udder stepped on by her standing neighbor. This is one of the most productive sources of injury that is known, and of itself should condemn the rigid stanchion.



A CLEAN, COMFORTABLE METHOD OF STABLING COWS.

The cut represents one row of cows facing another row. A closely boarded partition about four feet high forms the front of the stall. Each cow has 3½ feet in width. The floor is made tight and there is no drop in rear of cows, except the thickness of one plank which is the double floor of the stall. The feeding rack is constructed for two purposes: 1. To contain any hay or roughage that may be fed the cow. The slats are put on wide enough so the cow can easily get her nose between them. 2. To force the cow when standing to stand with her hind feet in rear of the crossbar across the stall floor. In constructing the feeding rack nail a 2 by 8 piece of scantling edgewise against the board partition. This constitutes the bottom of the rack and should be placed about two feet from the floor. Place the top scantling about two feet from the partition. This makes the feeding rack eight inches wide at bottom and two feet wide at top. In the center of the bottom scantling fasten a ring screw to tie the halter to. Fasten the cow with a common web halter, she wearing the headpiece all the time; the halter end of the rope has a safety snap to fasten into the ring of the halter under the throat. To prevent the cow from getting loose it is well to divide the end of the rope into two strands six inches long and put a snap in each, fastening both in the ring when tying the cow.

The grain and ensilage box is placed on that side of the stall opposite to the one the cow usually lies on. If she lies on her left side place the grain box on the right side. In placing the bar across the stall bring the cow's head squarely up against the feeding rack; then just forward of her hind feet nail down a 2 by 3 scantling. Fill the space forward of the bar with bedding, which being without waste will last till entirely worn out. In this way each cow has her bed in true proportion to her length. It should be fresh once a week however for the sake of health.

Keeping Eggs.

For long preservation the lime and salt solution, if kept in a cool place, is the best formula for the purpose. For large quantities the usual proportions observed are: Sixty-five gallons of water, one bushel good, unslacked lime and eight quarts salt. Slack the lime in a portion of the water and then add the balance and the salt. Stir well and skim off until it is clear. In this pickle keep the eggs completely immersed by weighting them down. When the eggs have been filled in spread a cloth over them and lay on it three or four inches of the lime remaining after it has been slacked, keeping all under the brine. For small quantities use the materials in about the same proportions, keep in a cool place and use only fresh eggs.

The American Agriculturist suggests for the lime solution twenty pounds of fresh lime and one pound of salt to twenty gallons of water; this amount will cover half a barrel of eggs. The best time to pack eggs is in March, April or May, and again in the months of September, October and November. Eggs stored away dry in salt or otherwise, if placed with the small ends downward, will keep longer than when they are laid without any regard to their position. Large quantities of eggs are now successfully kept in cold storage without any other preserving process.

The Clover Hay Worm.

The clover hay worm is frequently reported from Ohio, Illinois, Missouri and the more southern states. The eggs are laid by a small moth in stacks of hay. These worms hatch from the eggs and feed upon the dry hay, transforming to moths again in June or July. New hay ought never to be stacked in contact with old, and the worst infected stacks are those which have been placed upon the same sites for successive years. When practicable it is well to build the stack on good rail ventilators with an air passage underneath. It is also well to salt the hay two or three feet from the bottom.

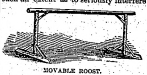
Bee Moths.

Bee moths are scavengers. They eat up unprotected combs. Keep your colonies in good shape and the bees will keep out the moths. As soon as they get weak and have more combs than they can protect then the moth worm has a chance. Italians are more energetic in repelling moths than common black bees, though the latter if strong and in good heart are able to protect themselves from real damage, though the hive may contain a few worms.

POULTRY CONVENIENCES.

Movable Roosts and Nests Easily Cleaned and Kept Free from Vermin.

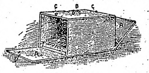
At this season, unless every precaution be taken, lice will swarm on roosts and nests and soon infest the birds to such an extent as to seriously interfere with their health. The advantages of roosts and nests that can be carried outside and thoroughly cleaned is therefore especially evident now, and provident poulterers will be glad to avail themselves of the contrivances here illustrated or those of a similar nature. Farm and Fireside, from which the cuts here presented are reproduced, describes these conveniences as follows:



MOVABLE ROOST.

It may be of any preferred length or height, but should be strong. The lower the roost pole the better.

The nest box may be 1 foot wide, 15 inches high and 18 inches long. The boards A A are hinged, the front one remaining down all the time, and the rear one up, except for cleaning the nest, when both ends are open. Hooks and eyelets are shown at C C and D; a handle, B, is intended for carrying the box.



MOVABLE NEST.

By boring holes in the boards A A, the nest may be used for sitting hens, and may be entirely closed. The nest should be raised an inch off the ground. A narrow crosspiece is in front to prevent the hay from being dragged out.

Unloading Hay.

Several years ago, writes a Country Gentleman correspondent, when I had no help but a boy, I had to do all the pitching both ways, which was too much for me. I tried most of the hay forks to unload with, but there was so much rope for the horse to step on while I pulled in the fork that it was worse than pitching by hand. I then built a stout crane of wood that would just swing under the purlin girts and plates, with rollers for the ropes to run on that went from the end of the crane, over the top, down into the basement on a drum, then up to a snatch block on the big door post to hitch the horse to; then I had three parallel sticks on each side of my cart or wagon, with ropes running through them crosswise to spread them apart. These sticks were laid on the rigging, three on a side, with toggle joint between them.

These were loaded on or under the load. When in the barn the ropes with hooks on were let down from overhead and hooked to the ropes brought together over the load—the horse hitched on the rope from the drum in the basement. When the load was raised clear of the wagon a pitchfork would swing it over the mow where wanted, a small cord would snatch open the toggle joint underneath, and the hay would drop out; then the weight of the sticks would bring them down on the wagon again. I have a great many times driven a load into the barn (doors at both ends to drive through), taken off my oxen, hitched them on the rope, had the hay swung on the mow, the sticks back on the cart, the oxen on and cart out of the barn inside of five minutes, and have done it several times in four minutes.

Exterminating the Chinch Bug.

Professor Snow, of Kansas, who has been a long time experimenting, claims, and other entomologists believe, that the devastation of crops by the chinch bug will soon be a thing of the past. Professor Snow believes that the bug may be exterminated by the spreading among the species of a deadly infectious disease, which he compares with the cholera among human beings. The disease producing organism is a fungus parasite of which three varieties have been found. In order to kill all the bugs within a considerable area it is only necessary, according to the authority quoted, to introduce a few diseased bugs. Within four days of infection the bugs cease work and in eight days are dead. Professor Snow will soon publish a definite report of the results of his investigations, the practical portions of which will be made known to the farmers throughout the country by means of bulletins and newspaper accounts.

Here and There.

The Mark Lane Express proposes a spraying machine that will deliver the spray under cover, so that the wind will not disturb it; and also one that will raise up the vines and thus permit the spray to reach all sides.

According to the Hatch experiment station of Massachusetts electricity applied to the roots of plants has given more satisfactory results than when applied above.

There is a plague of field mice in Scotland. A preponderance of opinion among farmers attributes the present outbreak to the scarcity of owls, hawks, weasels and other vermin.

Both houses of the New York legislature have passed the Chamberlain anti-black knot bill, which declares every infested tree a nuisance, and provides for the appointment of commissioners to burn them when the owners fail to do it, as well as for the punishment of the owner.

The experiment station connected with the Washington Agricultural college at Pullman, south of Spokane, in the Palouse valley, has issued its first bulletin. This station makes complete the chain of stations from Maine to the furthest state of the northwest.

NEW PEAS.

Varieties Tried Last Season and Reported Upon by The Rural New Yorker.

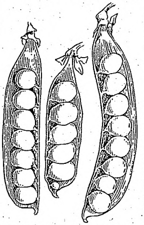
The varieties tested were Shropshire Hero, Heroine, Mayor, Admiral, New Dwarf Prolific and Nott's Excelsior. All were planted April 1. Following are notes made concerning them:

Shropshire Hero—Vines 2½ by 8 feet; vigorous like those of Stratagem; large leaves; extra large pods; about eight large seeds to the pod. Prolific, intermediate.

Heroine—Vines not quite so tall as Shropshire Hero; same foliage; matures same time; pods as large; better filled; seeds large; equally prolific. It is of the Stratagem order.

Mayor—Vines 2½ feet; ripens after Heroine and Shropshire Hero two or three days; pods medium sized, not well filled.

Admiral—It may be said for this that it bears for a long time, the later pods being exceptionally well filled, so that the pod is crowded as the catalogue illustrations are often made to appear; the pods, though under size, often hold eight small sized seeds; vines five feet tall, branching and thrifty. It may further be said that the pods are all uniform in shape and size. The variety seems to be thoroughly fixed and carefully selected.



SHROPSHIRE HERO—MAYOR—HEROINE.

New Dwarf Prolific is a smooth late dwarf pea. Vines very bushy and branching eighteen inches tall. It was at its fullest bearing July 19. Vines full of peas, pods medium to small, generally well filled, about six to a pod. Seeds vary from small to medium, and large. Vines uniform as to size—no rogues. The most prolific dwarf we have seen. For a second planting or fall pea it may prove valuable.

Nott's Excelsior is reported as the best of the early dwarf wrinkled peas. Vines eighteen inches, more productive than Wonder or Little Gem. As early as Alaska or very nearly. Pods fair size, averaging six seeds of fair size.

To give measureable values to the trials of new peas it is of course necessary to cultivate standard varieties under the same conditions for comparison. No attempt of this kind was made last summer, but it is stated, as a matter of judgment, that the preference is given to Heroine and Shropshire Hero over any similar intermediate wrinkled pea previously tried, while Mayor, for a somewhat later pea, is worthy of trial.

To Rid Poultry of Lice.

Kerosene ointment is often recommended in the poultry journals as a remedy for lice. As many readers do not know just what kerosene ointment is, we give the following abstract from a report of the Michigan state board of agriculture:

Kerosene ointment may be made by simply mixing kerosene and lard or, better, kerosene and sulphur. This ointment is excellent to rid poultry of lice. It should be kept in a closed can in a poultry house, and in the summer the roost poles should often be rubbed with the ointment. An old rubber or leather glove makes this an easy and not unpleasant task. After the poultry are on the roosts some of this ointment should be placed under the wings, about the breast and legs, once in four or five weeks in the late summer. If, in addition to this, you frequently spray the house and yard when the fowls are out with diluted crude carbolic acid, and whitewash the house once a year, you will not only have a neat house but healthy birds, if the other requisites are provided. Chickens ought to be a very profitable adjunct to every farm and will be if the above suggestions are carried out and the birds well housed and fed.

Things Said and Done.

The general drift of opinion lately expressed appears to be that the practice of harrowing corn, both before and after it is up, is increasing in popularity.

Professor Roberts commends the plan of using land plaster in stables instead of spreading it directly on the clover. The plaster is just as effective in the clover field, and it has arrested much that would otherwise have been lost in the stable manure.

A company has been organized in New Jersey for making cranberries into jam and canning them.

"Society of the Friends of Trees" is the name of an organization in France, its object being the restoration of the forests.

The New England Homestead suggests that animals awarded first premiums at our agricultural fairs should be placed on a platform, and judges made to give their reasons for such action to the public. This is what ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, advocated at some of the Farmers' institutes last winter.

A hop picking machine has been invented in Australia.

The largest ranch devoted to blooded horses is said to be at Greeley, Colo., where there is a grass range of over 8,000 acres.

NOCTURNAL CATS.

A Question of Long Standing in the Interest of Humanity.

The long unsettled question of whether a man may fire boot-jacks at or shoot that enemy of the nocturnal repose—the other man's cat—was settled against the cat by a jury in the quarter sessions court of Philadelphia before Judge Finletter lately.

The case was that of Edward N. O'Neill, a dentist, charged with cruelty to animals, in shooting the family cat of his neighbor, Louis B. Fredericks. Mr. Fredericks, the prosecutor alleged that O'Neill wounded the animal and left it to die. On the other hand, it was claimed that the cat had annoyed O'Neill by trespassing on his lawn at night where it was wont to move the vocal air with bursts of song. Instead of the traditional boot-jack, O'Neill got his gun and killed it outright, the cat surrendering the whole nine ghosts at once. In charging the jury the judge said:

"This bill of indictment charges the defendant with unlawfully and cruelly ill-treating and abusing an animal called a cat. I have only to say, gentlemen, that a citizen has a right to kill an animal of this kind if it trespasses on his premises. Perhaps there is no domestic animal that makes more trouble in the neighborhood than a cat. If this cat was trespassing on this man's place he had a right to kill it, and the only question for you to determine is whether he shot the cat because it was trespassing upon his premises, or whether he shot it for the purpose of injuring it. If he shot to kill the cat, and for that reason alone, then you ought to acquit him. If he shot it not for the purpose of ridding himself of what seemed to him a nuisance, then he ought to be convicted. In other words, he has a right to kill a cat for trespassing, but has no right to injure it merely for the purpose of giving it pain, or any thing of that kind."

The jury rendered a verdict of not guilty.

SHE DIDN'T MEAN IT.

The Young Lady Who Found It Necessary to Make an Explanation.

She was little, and dainty, and trim, with brown eyes and hair, rosy cheeks, and a neat little brown dress that exactly matched as well as fitted her. And as she sat on the wicker seat of a car in an Illinois Central suburban train and looked up at her big and handsome lover who sat beside her it was evident that she was just as proud of him as he was of her. It was 7:45 in the evening, and the south-town crowd was just reaching Chicago for the theaters. When the train reached the Randolph street station they, in common with the rest of the crowd, rose to leave the train. Just as they reached the car door he spoke to her, as she was leading the way, and turned back to their seat for a forgotten opera glass. She did not hear him, and went calmly on, out to the platform and down the car steps to the ground.

Once more on firm footing she glanced behind her, slipped her little hand within the arm of another stalwart young man who was at that instant just beside her, and snuggled up to him for protection from the cold wind that swept around the corner of the waiting room. He looked down with surprise, but did not resist, and they had taken half a dozen steps across the platform when she looked up to wonder at his silence. Then she saw the strange face.

A little shriek, and then the embarrassed "Oh! pardon—excuse me," and she fled back to the right man, who was even then coming out of the car, and had watched the scene with amazement. The commuters smiled and wondered what she would do or say as a reward to her lover for his surprise, and a proof that it was all, every bit, a mistake. But he laughed a hearty laugh, and she blushed very rosily, so no one doubted that it would be all right.

RANK TREASON.

A Movement to Discourage Cranberry Sauce and Pumpkin Pie.

"The two greatest American delusions," said an observer of what is going on, "are cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie.

"In all recitals of turkey feasts we hear great stress laid on the cranberry sauce. For years I ate it out of regard for the customs of my ancestors. I pretended to like it, but this year I have come out as a rank rebel. I will have no more of it.

"Pumpkin pie is about as big a fraud. At the best a pumpkin pie hasn't any more taste to it than a turnip, and why it should be made into pie and treated as a dessert I don't know. I have talked about this thing confidentially among my most intimate friends, and many of them have confessed to me under a solemn pledge of secrecy that they don't like pumpkin pie or cranberry sauce either, and there is now a little coterie of us drawn very closely together, I can tell you, by this joint antipathy.

"I don't know what the New England club is going to do about it, but this rank treason is flourishing in their very midst, and before long there will be an Anti-Pumpkin Pie and Cranberry Sauce association that will make its influence felt."

A caterer said: "The gentleman you quote has never tasted the real article. He must have got his dislike to the dishes by devouring them at cheap table d'hotes where they are rarely very palatable."

Did It Reach Its Destination.

A letter was received in the post-office of Schenectady recently bearing a Texas postmark and addressed as follows in German: "Mr. Rev. G. W. Drees, Servant of God, Learned man of Scripture, Preacher over the Sheep, Bucks and Mother-lambs of the Congregation of God."

THE FIFTEENTH STAR

KENTUCKY PREPARING TO CELEBRATE HER CENTENNIAL.

A Hundred Years Ago Next June She Achieved Statehood—The Perils and Triumphs of the Days of Daniel Boone.

[Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.]

UNITED WE STAND DIVID
WE FALL

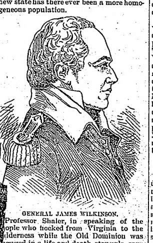
KENTUCKY, the fifteenth of the United States, was admitted to the Union in June, 1792, the fourth year of Washington's first administration. Vermont had come into the Union a year before and was the first state to be added to the original thirteen. Indeed, Vermont would have been one of the sovereign colonies during the Revolutionary war and the interim preceding the adoption of the constitution had it not been for the jealousy of New York on one side of the Green mountain settlements and New Hampshire on the other. As it was, she did her full share during the war for independence, and had she received the justice due to her Kentucky would have had the honor of being the first of the new states.

Indeed it might be said that she would have had this honor anyhow, regardless of Vermont, if justice had been done. She was entitled to admission three years before the beginning of her statehood, and the delay by congress caused many hardships on what was then the far western frontier, and there was danger, too, that these pioneer communities, spurned by their own people, might cast their fortunes with Spain. In 1786 the Virginia legislature had passed at the request of a Kentucky delegation a bill of separation, with the proviso that Kentucky should not be independent until she had been admitted into the Union by the federal congress. The six years of waiting were full of dangers. Virginia was far away, and a journey across the mountains was necessary before any arrangements could be made for the defense by constituted authorities of the western settlements against the Indians, who were constantly making little forays and from whom was momentarily expected a systematic attack in force.

Under these circumstances it was most desirable that Kentucky should be able to defend herself in some proper way. There was so much dissatisfaction born of this delay that it is not surprising that General Wilkinson, the man who later was mixed up in Aaron Burr's venture, should have almost persuaded the Kentuckians to become Spanish subjects. At that time Spain below the 31st degree of latitude controlled both banks of the Mississippi, and hence the navigation of the great river. The Kentuckians, for whom this was the only outlet to the sea, maintained that the river should be free to the Gulf of Mexico. That they should not have this right made them feel, in addition to the slowness of congress in admitting them to statehood, that the federal government had some grudge against them.

At that time congress sat in New York, which was a far cry from Kentucky. When John Jay, secretary of state, offered to suspend for twenty-five years the right of the free navigation of the Mississippi in consideration of certain other concessions to American commerce, and which in no way interested the people of the Ohio valley, General Wilkinson brought word from New York that this was the proposition of congress. In the inflamed condition of the public mind there were three propositions discussed with great excitement. One was to join the Union. All were in favor of this, but the northern states opposed this proposition. The second was to separate from Virginia and form an independent state. Those who despaired of securing admission to the Union and who did not like the idea of being subjects of his most catholic majesty favored this project. The third was to make a commercial treaty with Spain which virtually united Kentucky with Spain's possessions to the south. This was Wilkinson's project, and as he was a bold and able man he had a great following. These impatient people in Kentucky felt that it was a renewal of 1776, with the federal government in the place of the British crown.

Nothing came of these various entanglements and most of them exhausted themselves in talk, though Wilkinson did return from a visit to New Orleans, where he had made a trade treaty by which Kentucky commerce going down the river was very greatly favored. Finally, in February, 1791, congress passed a law admitting Kentucky to the Union from the 1st of June, 1792. At this time there were about 100,000 inhabitants, of whom probably 15,000 were negro slaves. Of the white people the very great majority were natives of Virginia. These settled in what is called the Blue Grass region, and in no new state has there ever been a more homogeneous population.



GENERAL JAMES WILKINSON.

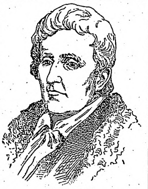
Professor Shaler, in speaking of the people who flocked from Virginia to the wilderness while the Old Dominion was engaged in a life and death struggle, says that there is no similar spectacle in history more curious than this. "We can only explain it by the intense land hunger that marks the Saxon people. The thirst for land, which we find so strongly developed in the Elizabethan English, seems to have been transmitted to Virginia in an intenser form. Knowing that free lands were to be won by giving life for them, the Virginia and North Carolina people were driven to desert their comfortable dwelling places in the colonies for the battle in the west. There is no other case where this land winning motive is so clearly seen as here. All our other western immigration has been fostered by the government. These people could look to no protection but what they gave themselves."

This kind of life developed a certain sort of man; a kind that was never known before or since in such numbers in any one country. The men had a certain dauntlessness, a habit of asserting the independence of all control except that of the written law. In speech they were frequently rude and exaggerated, but they did have a profound respect for courts of justice. This may have been due to the fact that courts were early established in these settlements, and to the further fact that without law land titles have small value. These pioneers have transmitted some of their characteristics to their posterity perhaps, but it is likely that the reputation that Kentuckians enjoy at the present day for a general expansiveness is due more to tradition than to fact.

When the constitution was adopted the two most interesting features were those dealing with suffrage and slavery. The suffrage was given to all male citizens of proper age, and this probably was the first experiment of manhood suffrage in any modern state. The article concerning slavery shows a decided prejudice against the commerce in slaves. These were not to be brought into the state as merchandise, and none were to be brought that were imported since 1789. It also recommended the legislature to pass laws permitting the emancipation of slaves under the limitation that they should not become a charge on the county in which they resided. In choosing the first governor the people acted wisely in selecting General Isaac Shelby.

General Shelby, who was then forty-two, was a native of Maryland, but had been a distinguished soldier in the Revolutionary war, during which he was made commissary general of the Virginia troops by Governor Patrick Henry, and later a major by Governor Thomas Jefferson. He had suggested to General Horatio Gates the campaign which culminated in the victory of the Cowpens. And later he had been associated with John Sevier in his effort to make of east Tennessee the state of Franklin. After serving one term he retired to his farm, and only left there to assume command of the Kentucky troops during the war with Great Britain and her Indian allies in 1812.

The admission of Kentucky as a state a hundred years ago is to be celebrated in Louisville in June. The celebration is to be managed by the Filson club, which is interested in collecting and preserving everything pertaining to Kentucky history. This club is very happily named, as John Filson was the first person whose writings made Kentucky known to the outside world. Filson visited Kentucky in 1780, and in 1784 published at Wilmington, Del., "Discovery, Settlement and Present State of Kentucke." This was reprinted in England in 1792, 1793 and 1797, and also translated into French and printed in Paris in 1785. This book it was that laid the foundation for the worldwide reputation of Daniel Boone. Filson probably never guessed how enduringly he wrought, nor did he benefit in the least from another sagacious venture, as he was killed by the Indians in 1788. The other venture alluded to was the half ownership of the site where Cincinnati now stands. The Filson club has made preparations for an all day meeting. In the morning the president of the club, Colonel Durrett, will deliver an historical oration, and Mr. Stanton, the Kentucky poet, will read a poem written for the occasion. In the afternoon there will be shorter addresses and in the evening there will be a banquet.



DANIEL BOONE.

JNO. GILMER SPEED.

The Negro in New England.

A Pennsylvania statistician, who has been delving among the documents sent out by Mr. Robert P. Porter, chief of the census bureau, announces as one result of his investigations that the colored race does not increase rapidly in New England. Rhode Island, he says, is the only one of the New England states where the colored people were, in 1890, over 2 per cent. of the population. Even there the colored population has, according to the census, fallen off from 2.49 per cent. of the population in 1850 to 2.21 per cent. in 1890. In Connecticut, in the same period, the percentage declined from 2.07 to 1.73.

In Maine the colored population in 1890 was less than a quarter of 1 per cent., a decline for the decade, but a slight, scarcely perceptible, gain as compared with 1850. The same is true of New Hampshire and Vermont, where colored people make up only 0.18 per cent. and 0.30 per cent. respectively of the population. In Massachusetts they were, in 1890, 1.05 per cent. of the population, against 0.91 in 1850. In Massachusetts, as in all other New England states, however, their percentage declined during the preceding decade. The census enumerators found 23,570 colored people in Massachusetts in 1890, 1,823 in Maine, 690 in New Hampshire, 1,004 in Vermont, 7,647 in Rhode Island and 12,820 in Connecticut.

Counting the Dust Motes.

An Englishman named John Aitken has discovered a method by which dust motes may be counted. He has detected 30,000 in one-thousandth of a cubic inch of the atmosphere of a closed room. In the outside air, in dry weather, the same measurement of air yielded 2,119; whereas after a heavy rainfall the number of such floating atoms was only 521. That this new mode of prying into atmospheric secrets will eventually yield important results must be obvious.

Discouraging the Green Goods Industry.

The green goods business is not as safe as many crooks have believed. It took a jury in the United States circuit court at New York only ten minutes the other day to find Charles Atwood guilty of sending green goods circulars through the mails. He is the man who got Anton Olson, the Heber City (Mon.) miner, to come on to Philadelphia with $500 in gold. Atwood was arrested in the depot at Philadelphia with Olson in tow.

A GARDEN BY THE SEA.

I know a little garden close,
Set thick with lily and red rose,
Where I would wander if I might
From dewy morn to dewy night,
And have one with me wandering.

And though within it no birds sing,
And though no pillared house is there,
And though the apple boughs are bare
Of fruit and blossom, would to God
Her feet upon the green grass trod,
And I beheld them as before.

There comes a murmur from the shore,
And in the close two fair streams are Drawn from the purple hills afar,
Drawn down unto the restless sea:
Dark hills whose heath bloom feeds no
bee,
Dark shore no ship has ever seen,
Tormented by the billows green,
Whose murmur comes unceasingly
Unto the place for which I cry.

For which I cry both day and night,
For which I let slip all delight,
Whereby I grow both deaf and blind,
Careless to win, unskilled to find,
And quick to lose what all men seek.

Yet tottering as I am and weak,
Still have I left a little breath
To seek within the jaws of death
An entrance to that happy place,
To seek the unforgotten face,
Once seen, once kissed, once reft from me
Anigh the murmuring of the sea.

—William Morris.
